The appointed subject for the first essay was, "Methodist Literature," by Rev. H. B. Kendall, B.A. (Primitive Methodist). He pointed out that all printed matter is not literature. An old writer was wont to designate some of the press products of his time as "blotterature," rather than "literature." That kind of printed matter is not unknown at the present day. On the authority of Rev. John Telford, Charles Wesley wrote no fewer than 7,000 pieces of poetry, and there are particular hymns of his which have established his enduring fame. Peculiarly rich is our common Methodism in the Pentecostal literature of Christian biography, which shows the manifold dealings of the Spirit of God with the human soul from the dawn of conviction to the peaceful or triumphant end. How priceless the ever-accumulating testimonies to the grace of God! Each Church has its cherished biographies, which have almost become classics.

Speaking of the demands upon Methodist authorship, Dr. E. E. Hoss said that Methodist ministers should have ever done anything valuable in the way of authorship is really a matter of wonder. "As soon as any man appears among us with a little more than common intellectual force, he is put to such steady daily work that he has no leisure left for scholarly pursuits. It has been so from the beginning, and appears likely to be so to the end. The result is that those of our brethren who have achieved much in the field of letters have done so by a diligent use of snatched intervals between routine drudgeries."

Methodist journalism was dealt with by Mr. Wm. Brimelow, who stated that there are over 2,000 newspapers in the United Kingdom; about sixty are classified as religious, and of these six aspire to represent Methodism. Concerning the future, the speaker urged that in Methodist journalism increased attention should be given to temperance, and to social and industrial movements affecting the advancement of Methodist people, in common with other members of the commonwealth.

A discussion followed concerning the mission of literature, and its power to transform, edify, exhort, purify, and ennoble the life of humanity.

Young People's Societies.

The interests of the young people occupied the Conference in the afternoon, Dr. W. Ingraham Haven introducing the subject with a carefully prepared and thoughtful paper on "Methodist Young People's Societies." The relation and obligations of the Church to the young were earnestly enforced. A humble, warm, tender, solicitous Church will create an ardent, loving, enthusiastic following of young people. Christian Endeavour work was dealt with by Rev. Danzy Sheen; and the Epworth League, in the coloured churches, by Rev. Dr. J. B. Colbert. The creation of these and kindred societies was shown to be the outgrowth of a stern necessity for some kind of organization, to be operated in connection with the churches for the spiritual training and development of the young. With their varied methods for concerted action, in benevolence and Christian philanthropy, they have contributed much to the growth and symmetrical development of young Christian character. Many testimonies to the value of the League, Guild, and Christian Endeavour were given by delegates from near and far, and a helpful and informing discussion followed.

Inter-Denominational Greetings.

At St. James' Hall in the evening there was a crowded attendance, presided over by Rev. J. Luke (Bible Christian), when addresses were received from the different Nonconformist Churches. Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson read the address from the National Free Church Council, recognising how signally God has owned and honoured the great spiritual movement of the eighteenth century associated with the revered name of the Wesleys. The Society of Friends was represented by Mr. George Cadbury. In the absence of Dr. Maclaren, Dr. Clifford gave a stirring address, remarking that when Wesley declared "The world is my parish," he was not talking geography, but breathing the great spirit of religion. Other Free Churchmen are prepared to march shoulder to shoulder with Methodists in fighting the evils around them—an encroaching and arrogant sacerdotalism, sensualism, drink, gambling, and the war spirit, which threatens all chance of becoming the possessors of that benediction for those who were the peacemakers.

Rev. Dr. Ross Taylor handed in an address from the United Free Church of Scotland; and other speakers were Rev. J. M. Wilson (Moravians), Commissioner Coombs (Salvation Army), Bishop Hamilton, and Rev. Dr. Phillips.

The president on Thursday was Rev. Chancellor N. Burwash, D.D., and Rev. Dr. M. J. Crothers read the Scriptures and offered the opening prayer. The first subject on the programme of the day was "Is Methodism Retaining its Vitality?" and was introduced by Rev. W. J. Williams. He maintained that the question is an imperial one, and will have to be fairly faced. Methodism sprang into being by its spiritual vitality. No other development, social or philanthropic, could ever compensate for a loss of spiritual force. Some affirmed that Methodism is being shorn of much of her original glory. The statistics presented to the Conference were an answer to the charge that Methodism is declining. Reviewing Methodism as a whole there is nothing of which to be ashamed, and everything to encourage. The former days of strife and division have passed, and in all the Churches there is splendid enthusiasm.

Rev. Dr. Charles B. Mitchell said that Methodists have now entered on a new era, calling them into new fields and to a wider sphere of ministry. These enlarged capabilities brought with them greatly increased responsibilities which they must as a Church fulfil. Rev. J. C. Granbery, D.D., said he was prepared to make some concessions in favour of early Methodism, for he thought the slender roll of membership in the past contained a larger percentage of real Christians than the enlarged numbers of to-day. In those days, to bear the name of Methodist was to subject oneself to ridicule and reproach. Now, it is otherwise.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference (Dr. W. T. Davison) said he was convinced that Wesleyan Methodism is as sound and as full of earnest vigorous life as at any period of her history. One danger ahead, against which he wished to put them on their guard, was their own organization. It had become so vast and complicated that they would have to see to it that it did not interfere with their spiritual vitality. In the course of the discussion which followed, Rev. Dr. Brook said that the various Twentieth Century Funds were proof of the vitality of Methodism. A further evidence is "the new conscience" in regard to their duty to the masses outside the Churches. Rev. Dr. Thomas Allen referred to the increasing demands of social life, which are beginning to compete seriously with spiritual gatherings.

Home Piety.

The afternoon session brought together a large attendance, the gallery being well filled by the general public. At the call of the President a carefully-prepared paper was read by Bishop Clinton, on "The Neglect of Family Religion and Worship." The speaker showed how beneficial had been the family altar in olden times, and spoke of the influence which John and Charles Wesley exerted on their sons. Family worship is indispensable to the growth and perpetuation of true religion in the home and in the community. To neglect family worship is to deprive the home of its chief safeguard. Rev. S. B. Cawood thought that much of the infidelity and scepticism of the day is due to the neglect of family worship. Rev. Thos. Rider said that the scant respect now shown to parental authority is largely due to a decline in family religion. Mr. Peter F. Wood thought there was a tendency on the part of parents to relegate their own duty to their children to the Sunday school. A forcible address was given by Rev. Thos. Champness, in which were many affectionate allusions to the piety of his parents, and his early training. "Give me," exclaimed the speaker, "a good father and mother in every home in England, and I do not care what becomes of ironclads and khaki."

Just before the Conference rose, the Chairman asked Rev. G. Campbell Morgan (who was in the audience) to say a few words. In the course of a brief address, Mr. Morgan said he had been deeply impressed in his own country, and in the country which for some years at any rate was to be his home, with the fact that fathers are supremely to blame for the breakdown of family religion. He did not appeal to fathers to become the theologians of their children. They should make their boys feel that they were their best "chums." Fathers need to take a deep interest in their children while they are children, that they may retain their hold upon them when they grow up into manhood.

National Questions.

The audience at the evening meeting in St. James' Hall testified to the interest of Methodists in the work of promoting the observance of the Sabbath, and their earnest desire to further any efforts which may be advanced in the cause of temperance. The chairman was Rev. A. B. Leonard, D.D. Speaking of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he said no one was regarded as a temperance man who drank even moderately. Whoever joined the Church joined a total abstinence society. He was surprised to find English Wesleyans debating whether liquor dealers should hold offices in their churches. They had got far beyond that in the United States, and no man could be a member of the Church who was engaged either in drinking, selling, or manufacturing intoxicating liquors.

Rev. Dr. W. J. Townsend said there were associations at work to deprive the public of the enjoyment and sanctity of the Lord's Day. The Churches must band themselves together to resist these efforts. He lived in Wales where the Sunday Closing Act was in operation, and if English Christian people used all their resources there never would be an Imperial Government able to withstand the demand for an English Sunday Closing Act. The battle would never be won without the united action of the Churches.

The Conference on Friday was engaged in the discussion of two national evils—"Drunkenness" and "Gambling." The president for the day was Rev. Dr. D. Brook, and the first paper of the day was given by Mr. D. Baker (Methodist Protestant Church) on "Practical Methods of Dealing with the Liquor Traffic." He said the goal temperance reformers should have in view must be total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the State. Every Methodist pulpit should be consecrated largely to this end, and he considered that every Methodist should be a prohibitionist. Mr. J. H. Freeborough (Methodist Reform Union) referred to the difficulties in dealing with the question and strength of the opposition to reform.

Three suggestions were offered by Judge Murray (Methodist Episcopal Church): the union of all branches of temperance people; the enlistment of the activities of the young; and the utilization of the energies of the Church, which would be the greatest power for the overthrow of this gigantic evil. Rev. Dr. Edward Gray (Methodist Episcopal Church) and Rev. T. Champness also spoke on the subject.

The American President.

Early in the discussion telegrams were read announcing the serious relapse which had befallen President McKinley, and the awe-stricken Conference stayed its proceedings while Dr. Thos. Allen engaged in fervent and heartfelt prayer. The discussion was resumed for some time, but at twelve o'clock a more serious message was read, and Dr. Stephenson moved that the order of the day be suspended, and that the Conference give itself to prayer, and then adjourn. Mr. Broxap, of Manchester, was mounting the platform to speak when the message arrived, and it fell to his lot to open one of the most memorable and solemn prayer-meetings ever held in Methodism. Dr. Baldwin, who is the presiding elder of the Conference to which the president belonged, was called upon. As he petitioned that by the arm of the Lord the sufferer might be sustained, and prayed for all misguided men in every land who were cherishing thoughts of violence, the Conference was deeply moved. There was no attempt at singing, no remarks offered. Rev. F. W. Bourne, Bishop Galloway, and Dr. Stephenson, each under strong emotion, followed in prayer. In all parts of the chapel there were many in tears, and in the silence of sadness the delegates dispersed.

The afternoon's proceedings opened with an able essay on "Gambling," by Rev. F. Luke Wiseman, M.A. (superintendent of the Birmingham Wesleyan Mission). In the course of his remarks, he said that gambling, and the excitement of the few and the well-to-do, now infected the working classes; their hard-earned wages and even their children's bread and clothing being recklessly squandered. The prevalent notion was that the wrong of gambling was risking of more than one could afford, and small risks were ruled out of the category. But the nature of the act is not altered by the amount of property at stake. Gaming was gaming, whether for penny points or a kingdom. Christian people should lay stress upon the ethics, and avoid all appearance of evil, whether in gaming, horse-racing, Stock Exchange transactions, or commerce. By way of remedying existing evils he suggested rendering illegal the publication of betting odds, the suppression of betting houses and the issue of circulars, the infliction of imprisonment instead of fines, the extinction of the Post Office from complicity in betting transactions, and, above all, the abolition of the trade of bookmakers.

An interesting discussion followed, in which Rev. Dr. J. Bensingham (Chicago), Mr. T. R. Ferrers, J.P. (Hull), and Rev. G. Armstrong Bennetts (Wesleyan Temperance Society) took part.

Women's Work.

For some reason or other women's work in Methodism was entirely ignored in the programme of the Conference. To supply this omission a meeting was arranged for Friday evening in Wesley's Chapel, when Mrs.

H. PRICE HUGHES presided over an enthusiastic audience. In the course of her opening remarks, Mrs. Price Hughes said that, from the time of Wesley, women had held honourable positions in the Church, but she thought many ministers did not realize the great force they had in their midst, and that women's work, with more scope and better organization, would be one of the most powerful agencies in the world. During the latter part of the nineteenth century, the Methodist Church had made great advances in this direction, and women had taken a prominent place both in the home and foreign mission fields. Speaking of the work with which she has been connected for fourteen years, Mrs Hughes said that in the Sisterhood of the People they did not express any ecclesiastical idea, but a human and democratic relationship. She was a great believer in freedom for women as well as men. Women's work was too often hampered by endless rules and regulations.

Miss BELLE BENNETT (United States) said that in America women worked side by side with the general mission boards, and sent out women missionaries, nurses, and doctors, established schools, helped to build parsonages, and had also organized rescue work. Miss AKEN, the pioneer Sister of the People in Adelaide, described how that work had developed in six years, so that there were now more than twenty nursing sisters in South Australia alone.

Addresses followed by Mrs. F. C. Stephenson (Canada), Mrs. Wiseman, and others.

MORE TRIBUTES TO PRESIDENT MCKINLEY.

The Conference assembled on Saturday under the shadow of a dark cloud. Everyone was full of sorrow at the sad news of President McKinley's death. In front of Wesley's Chapel groups of delegates, with bowed heads, talked of the high-minded statesman and honourable ruler whose life had commanded universal regard, and whose death has truly gathered the whole human race in one common sentiment. It was not until half an hour after the usual time for commencing the proceedings that Bishop J. C. HARTZELL opened the devotional service, which was of a deeply solemn character. Rev. Dr. Manley S. Hard, of Evanston, read ten verses of Psalm xc., which was followed by the singing of Toplady's well-known hymn, "Rock of Ages."

Dr. Hard and Dr. Thomas Allen led in fervent prayer. God was praised for the life of the dead President, for his early conversion, his public career, his calmness in suffering, and for the peace vouchsafed in the hour of death. Supplication was made for the bereaved and noble widow, and for the guidance of the Vice-President, upon whom the responsibility of the country's government now rests. As the delegates rose, Dr. Hard began to sing softly a hymn that had resounded through the historic building thousands of times, but never with more impressive effect—

Jesus, lover of my soul.

Many were moved to tears. A resolution, expressing the feelings of the Conference as to the event, was read by Dr. T. B. Stephenson. Touching tributes to the devotion of the dead President to Methodism were given by Bishop Galloway, Mr. R. W. Perks, and Dr. Frank M. Bristol (pastor of the church of which Mr. McKinley was a life-long member). Bishop Hartzell, referring to Mr. McKinley's successor, said that Englishmen might rest assured that in President Roosevelt there will be a true and loyal friend to international fellowship and co-operation.

The Perils of Wealth.

Turning to the order of the day, the Conference listened to a powerful address from Sir GEORGE SMITH, of Truro, dealing with the "Perils of Increasing Wealth and Luxury." In the course of his remarks, he said that many men had found that great wealth, especially when rapidly acquired, had insensibly diminished their sense of nearness to God, and spoiled their brotherly sympathy with men. The love of wealth often creates a thirst which refuses to be slaked, and the spread of luxury gives rise to every variety of self-indulgence. The great desideratum is a keener sense of the fact that wealth comes to those entrusted with it not by accident, toil, and skill, but by design, as an endowment or trust, a glorious and onerous, yet a perilous endowment. When the moneyed classes realize that relationship to their wealth, that sense of responsibility and tenancy, then the problem will be largely solved.

The second address was given by Mr. L. L. MORSE (Primitive Methodist), his subject being "Consecration of Wealth." This is the Church's great need at the present day. Every department of Christian work is more or less crippled for lack of means. The remedy for this is proportionate and systematic giving. Every Christian ought to set apart a sum for religious and other purposes. If the tenth of the incomes were given on the basis of the income tax a hundred millions would be available for the evangelization of the world.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Lord Mayor will preside at the annual meeting of the Birmingham Association on September 24, Dr. Monro Gibson and Canon Sutton being the speakers.

The secretaryship of the Stafford Rooms (Edgware Road, W.) Association has been relinquished by Mr. A. J. H. Fletcher, who will be succeeded pro tem. by Mr. Harvey Farmer, of the Islington Association.

The North Liverpool Association has just issued a report showing much excellent work. There is a paid-up membership of 325, for whom, as well as for the many young men in the neighbourhood, efficient religious and educational facilities are provided.

The premises of the Taunton Association, which have been extended to make provision for the junior department of the work, were publicly re-opened on the 12th inst. A service was held at St. Mary's Church in the afternoon, when the preacher was Rev. Canon Edmonds. The re-opening ceremony was performed by Mrs. J. E. W. Wakefield, wife of the president, and was followed by a brief dedicatory service on the lawn. A public meeting was held in the evening, the speakers being Canon Edmonds and Mr. W. Hind Smith. The proceedings, which were enthusiastic throughout, were attended by a large number of young men.

The annual conference of the Scottish Associations has just been held with much encouragement at Dumbarton. The formation of "Junior Sections" was warmly advocated on the first morning by Mr. J. Montgomery, of Aberdeen. Foreign Y.M.C.A. work was also under consideration. A garden party was given in the afternoon by Lord and Lady Overtoun, attended by over 400 persons. Lord Kinnaird presided over a public meeting in the evening. The second morning was devoted to the consideration of "How the Y.M.C.A. may deal with the Temperance Problem." In the afternoon the delegates and friends were entertained at Rossneath by the Duke and Duchess of Argyle.

The Annual Conference of the Western District Union took place at Salisbury on September 4. Mr. E. Pye Smith, President of the Salisbury Association, occupied the chair at the morning session, and extended a cordial welcome to the delegates, who were present in goodly numbers. Mr. J. C. Marsh, travelling secretary, gave an interesting report for the past year. Most of the branches were doing a thoroughly good work, especial attention being paid to the distinctly religious efforts of the Association. In the afternoon, at Stonehenge, Rev. F. J. Horsefield, vicar of St. Silas, Bristol, and Mr. J. H. Putterill, of Exeter Hall, delivered short addresses.

Sir George Williams presided over the last monthly meetings of the National Council, held at Exeter Hall. Attention was specially directed to a proposed extension of work at the larger city centres, in connection with which the Council will avail itself of the services of Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow; also to a probable evangelistic campaign among the principal Associations, towards the close of next year, by Mr. F. B. Smith, director of the religious work of the American Executive; and further, to arrangements for the observance of the Week of Prayer for young men from November 10 to 17 next. At the afternoon meeting reports were presented by the visiting secretaries, who mentioned the formation of new Associations at a number of centres. Mr. Cephas Brainerd, for twenty-five years Chairman of the American International Committee, was welcomed as a visitor, and tendered the greetings of workers in the United States. Encouraging reports were submitted of the Council's work in India and Burmah; plans were also approved for the development of sectional effort in the home field, and for the improved accommodation and arrangement of Association buildings as they may be erected from time to time.

Welsh Notes.

IT seems that Welsh Wesleyans are experiencing some difficulty in obtaining a sufficient number of candidates for the ministry. No difficulty is experienced in filling subordinate offices, but there is a lamentable indisposition on the part of well-equipped young men to devote themselves to the highest of all callings.

At the last two monthly meetings of the Calvinistic Methodists of Flintshire, the claims of foreign missions have had special prominence. In connection with the last Presbytery meeting, two missionaries home on furlough, together with an ex-missionary and a special representative of the Missionary Society, attended and delivered addresses.

The Welsh Congregationalists of Liverpool held their annual preaching festival on September 6, 7, 8. The services were held in nine chapels, and were taken part in by seventeen of the most eminent preachers of the denomination. On Saturday evening, September 7, a united fellowship meeting was held in Great George Street Chapel, under the presidency of Rev. O. L. Roberts. The matter set for discussion was "Godliness profitable unto all things."

Through the action of the Free Church Council of Wrexham a movement is on foot to raise a memorial to the Welsh mystic, Morgan Llwyd. It is to be erected in Rhonddu Cemetery. The late Mr. Tom Ellis, M.P., rendered no little service to Welsh literature and Welsh Christianity by editing some of Morgan Llwyd's works, and making them accessible to the general public.

Scottish Notes.

DURING the current week many friends in different parts of Scotland are enjoying special seasons of spiritual refreshment. The dates of the Dundee Conference are September 17-19, and those of the Parkhall Convention September 18-20, while the Rothesay Convention opens with a prayer meeting this (Thursday) evening, and closes next Wednesday morning.

It has now been arranged that the services of the mission week in connection with Dundee U.F. Presbytery, beginning Monday, October 21, shall be conducted by Principal Rainy, Rev. Dr. John Smith, Rev. W. M. Macgregor, Rev. Dr. Joseph Corbett, and Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte; and a number of congregations have agreed to group themselves together for the occasion. The combined evangelistic movement for the city is to extend from November to February. A fortnight will be spent in each district, the first week being devoted to canvassing, and the second to meetings within the area.

Speaking a few days ago at the opening of a new church, Dr. Stalker said he had noticed that persons who wrote to newspapers on "Why People do not go to Church" instinctively put themselves into the position of self-defence, as if they knew in their hearts that it would be better for them if they did go. It was not the custom of the Scottish people, of the flower of the population, to remain away from church. Referring to the plea that the services are dull, he said he was far from denying that there might be grounds for this objection, but the true worshipper went to meet God, and not man.

To the end of August 8,800 copies of Scripture had been sold at the National Bible Society of Scotland's stall in the Glasgow Exhibition. Mr. A. S. Annand sails for his station in China next Thursday (September 26). Rev. W. H. Murray reports gratifying sales of Scriptures in Peking. One of the blind colporteurs had been murdered in the Boxer troubles, and he feared that a sighted colporteur had also fallen. He had supplied two boxes of Scriptures to the missionary band which recently left for Tai Yuen-fu. A letter has been received from the American Methodist Episcopal Church congratulating the Society on its work in Korea.

New Life for Cuba. — The Americans are beginning to show that Cuba, once the Queen of the Antilles, and reduced to chaos by the tyranny and mismanagement of Spain, may be transformed again into a fruitful garden. Large tracts of land, now overgrown with timber, are being cleared, and planted with tropical fruit. The insanitary fever-haunted cities and towns are being drained and cleared of infection, so that soon the natural advantages of the climate will be free from the incubus of a deadly danger. Better than all, the American churches are making a special mission field of Cuba. The special conditions of land tenure just now make it possible to evangelize the country after the manner of Paul, the tent-maker. A preacher can go to Cuba, and if he can only get five acres of land, which it is easy to do, he can soon make a living for himself, and in the meantime he can be doing mission work, and establish an Evangelical church.

Young People.

True Stories from London Town.

It will be interesting to many young readers to know that the school for poor children which, so far as can be traced, first bore the name of "Ragged School" is still to the forefront in helping up from wretched homes and surroundings the young people whose lot has been cast in the slums of London.

"The Field Lane Refuges and Ragged Schools," as the mission is now called, was started by good men, helped by that true friend of righteous causes, the noble-hearted Earl of Shaftesbury. The district was honeycombed with the resorts of all kinds of wicked people. The lower part of nearly every house in Field Lane was a shop for the sale of silk handkerchiefs that had been stolen from the pockets of their rightful owners. Disturbances were common, and were, indeed, of so desperate a character that from forty to fifty constables, armed with cutlasses, would be marched down the street at a time.

Circumstances have changed, and disturbers have no longer the power to trouble law-abiding folk as before; but wickedness remains, and extreme poverty, and with them the need for such institutions as the Field Lane Refuges, which include, by the way, training schools for boys and for girls. Sorrow and suffering are the lot of many little ones whose parents, unhappily, are careless as to the welfare of their children, but these sons and daughters of the slums find cheer and help among the good people at the Refuges. Here are some true stories of a few of those who have been helped:

THE LITTLE MATCH GIRL.

Annie B. is at present an inmate of the Girls' Industrial Home. She is only eleven years of age, but her experience prior to her admission was sad in the extreme. Her father neglected and finally deserted his family. Her mother was such a drunkard that she ultimately, for 6d. a night, handed the poor child over to another woman, who sent her to sell matches in the street until a certain sum was earned. In order to obtain this money little Annie was often wandering the street in the City until after midnight. The officer who charged her said he had warned her several times not to be in the streets at that hour—each time it was after twelve o'clock—but the poor child dared not go home, so eventually he took her in charge, or, in other words, rescued her from her sad position, and she was handed over to the Field Lane Refuge workers.

FROM A ONE-ROOMED HOME.

Carrie D. was rescued from the direst poverty and a home (if one miserable room for a family of seven people could be called home) filled with wretchedness by the father's cruelty and drunkenness; most of his time was spent in drinking or in prison. The mother, quite a young woman, has since died in the workhouse infirmary from ill-treatment and want of food. When Carrie was received into the School she was found to be in a shocking condition, and half starved. She stayed four years, and was trained for domestic service. Two years ago she was placed in a situation, and her mistress gives her an excellent character.

TWO SISTERS AND THREE SHILLINGS.

When Ada and Rhoda, two sisters, were sent to the Schools, they were but eleven and five years old respectively. Their mother is dead, and their father cared so little about the poor children that he actually got rid of them, giving two evil women three shillings to receive them. Then he disappeared, which is perhaps as well, for the influence of such a man could only have tended to the children's harm, while they have now come under kindly care at the Refuges. They are bright and cheery little girls.

A YOUNG THIEF RECLAIMED

Harry B., who was only a little over eight years of age when admitted, was caught stealing in company with others, and sent to the Refuges by a magistrate. The lad's father was dead, and the mother was an "ironer" in very poor circumstances. The boy developed into an intelligent lad during the six years he was under training. He was placed in the band, where he played an instrument very well, and he also passed through all the standards in the schoolroom. He became in due course a very good shoemaker, and could make a pair of boys' boots before leaving. He was eventually placed out in a situation with a shoemaker, and was able to live at home with his mother, whose circumstances had materially improved during Harry's sojourn in the school.

ONCE A STREET BEGGAR.

Ernest B. was a terrible young fellow when he was arrested by the police in the streets of London, and taken before a magistrate on the charge of being "found begging and receiving alms." The magistrate carefully considered what to do with him, and decided to send him to the Field Lane Institutions until he attained the age of sixteen years. He was then only ten years old, but had been allowed to run the streets. This boy, after being taken away from bad associations, brought under Christian influence, and taught habits of cleanliness and neatness, became very useful. He was placed in the tailoring department, where he made good progress. After six years' training, he left with a good character, and commenced to earn his own living, a reliable and respectable young fellow. He is a sample of many whose lives have been brightened by the godly labours of devoted men and women, and whose lives make most cheering, as well as true, stories of London town.

Bermondsey Settlement.—An appeal has reached us from the Bermondsey Settlement (Warden, Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, Farncombe Street, Jamaica Road, S.E.) for residents to fill up several vacancies. Young men coming to London for professional or business engagements, are urged to consider the matter. The Settlement is within easy reach of the city and West End, as well as being conveniently situated for Guy's, St. Bartholomew's, and the London Hospitals.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, September 22.

A Temperance Lesson (Psa. xxxvii. 1-10).

THE framer of the schedule of C.E. topics evidently looked on the saloon-keepers as evil-doers, and I suppose that we must endorse the verdict. Sometimes it seems as though they were the cause of all the evil-doing of our time. Of course, it is not exactly so. Society was corrupt enough before the drink traffic attained to such a disastrous development as it has amongst us. Still, as the world is to-day, there is no more fruitful cause of murder, adultery, impurity, cruelty, quarrelling, and misery than the public-house or drinking saloon. We will hope that they who make their living out of the trade, like the murderers of Christ, know not what they do, and probably there are many who do not. But what can we say of the great brewers and distillers who own the saloons and manufacture the stuff which is sold in them, and live in homes furnished at the cost of untold destitution?

Let us cherish the invincible hope of this psalm. Evil, says the Psalmist, is not destined to permanence in the world, which Christ has redeemed with his precious blood! Was He not the Lamb slain from before the world's foundation? The world is not the devil's, but God's. He made, and redeemed, and will remake it. Be of good cheer. This hope fills the Bible, let it fill your life. All the men that have blessed the world have cherished these hopes. The darkness must pass, the true light must shine. Evil-doers shall be cut off, the world shall be inherited by the meek and good.

When Phillips Brooks was fifty-four this was said of him: "He gained an ever-deepening conviction that the world, whether of nature or of humanity, has been redeemed and glorified in Christ. In the light of this redemption the world ever looked fairer or richer, or life more attractive, till it almost pained him to address young men with the prospect before them of a vision which he could not live to see." Yes, young people, you may live to see this awful drink curse, this upas tree, which is blasting the foremost race of the world, cut off. You may hear the song which shall ring out when this monster is drowned in the Red Sea of God's just judgment.

In the meantime let us see to our ourselves. Amid many anxieties, discouragements, and drawbacks, let us trust in the Lord (3), let us delight ourselves in the Lord (4), and let us roll our way on the Lord, with all the responsibility of choosing the path (5, marg.). Then, when we have set ourselves in this attitude, let us rest in the Lord. This has been rendered, "Be still before the Lord;" or, adopting the literal rendering of the Hebrew, "Be silent to the Lord."

Our Lord rested thus in the Father. Not for a moment was his life quiescent, nor wasted in pensive brooding. There was no mere quietism nor passivity in those three crowded years; but his words and works sprang out of a heart at perfect rest from the feverishness and haste of its own activities, and content to do the work and speak the word, which the Father assigned.

I am told that many manufacturers, especially in the higher branches of the textile arts, are removing their works from London and other great cities to the country, because the rarest designs cannot be formulated or executed where the restless haste of life's turmoil is in the air and on the brain. Do you want to do the best work possible? Then be still, rest in God till God bids you act—blows struck then tell.

The Christian Endeavour Societies of Chicago have hit upon a very useful piece of service in the appointment and support of a "Hospital Evangelist." He is specially attached to the County Hospital, which, with its 900 patients, presents an ample field for his efforts. Mr. Arthur B. Strickland, who has been appointed evangelist, was himself a patient in the hospital, and his heart went out in deepest sympathy for the spiritual needs of his yoke-fellows in suffering. The helpless men and women are visited in their cots, and those able to be around are given Gospel song services in the chapel. Testaments, Gospels, and flowers are distributed among the inmates. As a result of this work about 200 have professed conversion during the year. A C.E. Society has been organized in the hospital.

International S.S. Lesson.

Review Lesson.

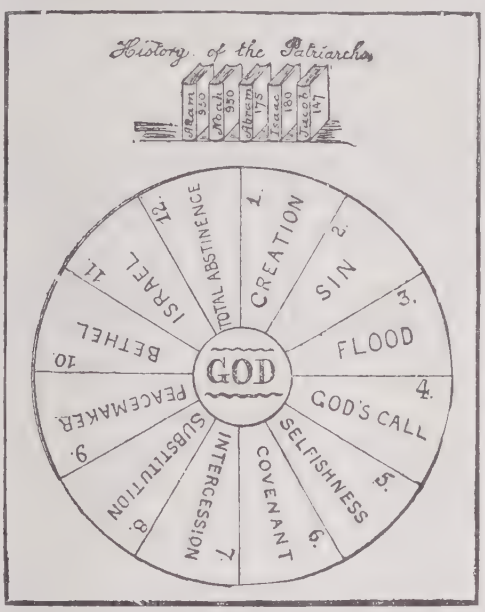
Golden Text. Ps. ciii. 17.

Review.

THE lessons for this quarter have covered the long period from the Creation to the time of Jacob. The book of Genesis is very important; it is full of beginnings, even including the beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ (John i. 1-3). The historical portions of God's Word need careful study, for they show the gradual revelation of God to mankind. The whole race has fallen, and the whole race has been redeemed, if they will accept God's way of salvation. But the many choose their own way; the few open their eyes and hearts to God. The Patriarchs were chosen to receive God's truth and tell it forth to others, handing down their knowledge from one generation to another, each receiving a clearer revelation of God's loving purpose for mankind. All was in type and shadow (Heb. i. 1-3).

Review by Pictures.

One interesting method for review is to make a word-picture of each lesson, and leaving the scholars to fill in the names. Or take the top part of our diagram and get the scholars to give the outline of what should be in each book.



The lower part of the diagram shows God the centre and source of all, and gives a key-word by which to recall each lesson.

Review by Places.

Point out on the map, and state what particular event took place there: (1) Eden and the four rivers (Gen. ii. 10-14); (2) Mountains of Ararat (Gen. viii. 4); (3) Ur (Gen. xi. 31); (4) Haran (Gen. xi. 31); (5) Canaan (Gen. xii. 5); (6) Sichem (Gen. xii. 6); (7) Bethel (Gen. xii. 8, xxviii. 19); (8) Hai (Gen. xii. 8); (9) Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. xiii. 10); (10) Egypt (Gen. xii. 14); (11) Hebron (Gen. xiii. 18); (12) Moriah (Gen. xxii. 2); (13) Gerah (Gen. xxvi. 17); (14) Beersheba (Gen. xxvi. 23); (15) Seir, or Edom (Gen. xxxii. 3); (16) Jabbok (Gen. xxxi. 22); (17) Peniel (Gen. xxxii. 30).

Review of Truths Enforced.

I. God the great "I am." Eternal, Everlasting, Creator (Col. i. 16).
II. Sin, its punishment and cure (Rom. v. 15).
III. Christ our Ark of Refuge (Acts iv. 12).

The Golden Text,

like a golden thread, runs through all the lessons. God is a God of mercy and promise. Trace his loving kindness through all the history of his people, and "this God is our God for ever and ever; He will be our guide even unto death."

About Books.

FOUR "Practical Papers on Pressing Problems for Young Christians" will be found in Mr. J. T. Budd's attractive new booklet, Spending and Being Spent. (6d. Marshall Bros.)

Officers and members of congregations contemplating the erection of places of worship will find useful information on many points in Hints on Chapel Building (3d. Rose & Harris, Bristol), by Mr. J. H. La Trobe, F.R.I.B.A.

Mr. Tissington Tatlow, educational secretary of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, has prepared Outline Studies on India (4d. 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.) for the use of missionary bands during the coming winter. A comprehensive list of helpful books is given.

The first part of Beautiful Pictures (6d. Dobbs, Kidd, & Co., Ltd.) gives excellent reproductions of seven well-known masterpieces of English and Continental art, with short but interesting biographical and critical notes. Eight pictures are promised in each of the succeeding parts.

The September issue of The Churchman contains, among other interesting matter, "Some Cambridge Reminiscences of Bishop Westcott," by Rev. Dr. Sinker; and the sixth of "Messages from the Hebrews," by the Bishop-Designate of Durham, dealing with the ninth chapter.

An important pamphlet bearing on the rights of subject peoples has been published by the Aborigines Protection Society (3d. Broadway Chambers, Westminster), under the title, The Native Question in South Africa: Outlines of a Suggested Charter of Natives under British Rule in South Africa.

The Soul-winning and Prayer Union Gospel Leaflet series comprises many timely publications. The Rest Day of the Heart is a telling utterance of the late Bishop of Durham on the keeping of the Sabbath. Stage Desecration of Things Divine is a protest by Rev. Chas. Bullock against the degrading performance witnessed at theatres; while Love and Service and Winning Souls, by J. C. Smith, will afford encouragement and counsel to those who are endeavouring to bring others to rely upon the merits of Christ for salvation. (6d. per dozen. "Home Words" Office).

The September number of The Aldersgate has an affectionate tribute to the late Bishop of Durham, by Rev. J. G. Bowran. Dr. Westcott was undoubtedly the possession of all communities who name the name of Christ, and it will be no surprise to Primitive Methodists to read how deeply he was interested in their denomination. Besides portraits of the Bishop and Durham Cathedral, there is a photograph of the North of England Primitive Methodist Preachers' Association visiting Auckland Castle, with their venerable host in the centre of the group. (6d. Robert Bryant.)

The report of the Œcumenical Missionary Conference, held in New York, April, 1900, was hailed by many who could not attend the gatherings, as containing a comprehensive resumé of the present position of Christian missions in every part of the world. There was much in the volumes which has called forth praise to God. That there is another side to the matter is brought out in The Key to the Missionary Problem (1s. 6d. Nisbet), in which Dr. Andrew Murray puts on record some thoughts suggested by the report. With keen spiritual insight Dr. Murray has heard the addresses and read the report. The Moravian Church is pointed out as the representative of the power of love to Christ, and the results of deepening of the spiritual life are pointed out in the Church Missionary Society. The crowning "Key" is found in the power of believing prayer, the illustration quoted being the China Inland Mission. Surprise is frankly expressed at "the little direct mention that was made of prayer as one of the most important factors, the chief source of power, in mission work."

No. 67 of "Book for the Bairns" is Alfred the Great; or, the Story of England a Thousand Years ago.

Evangelistic.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Cheshunt.

In connection with the Cheshunt, Hoddesdon and Waltham Free Church Council, a ten-days' mission has been conducted in Cheshunt by Mr. W. R. Lane. The services every evening, as well as the afternoon Bible readings, were well attended.

An interesting and attractive feature in the mission was the limelight lecture, on the Friday night, on "John Bunyan and 'The Pilgrim's Progress.'" This was attended by a throng of people that crowded the tent, while many were standing without.

The thrilling story of Mr. Lane's conversion, while serving in the Coldstream Guards, was given at the last meeting, when it was impossible to accommodate all who sought admission. During the mission upwards of fifty persons passed through the inquiry rooms. The members of all the Free Churches were thoroughly awakened, and many outsiders were brought under the sound of the Gospel.

Work in Glasgow.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

At the Tabernacle, St. George's Cross, an unmistakable measure of energy, comprising preparation, prayer, and enthusiastic effort has produced an interest which is growing daily. The Bible studies and evening meetings of the past week have proved very encouraging, and the large majorities of men have been a striking feature in these notable assemblies. On Sunday last, the morning service was packed, and at night St. Andrew's Hall was thronged with 4,000 deeply interested people. Many, it is believed, are entering into life, and the presentation of the great truths of revelation by Mr. Henry Varley show a striking hold upon the attention of thousands in the city.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson has had another week of blessing in the City Hall and St. James' Hall. On Wednesday and Friday, Mr. Anderson also spoke in the shipyard to some hundreds of men. On Saturday he was in the Tent Hall with Mr. Paton.

The Glasgow City Gospel Brass Band have opened a little mission hall at 57, Mason Street, and are holding evangelistic meetings on Sabbath evenings. Workers would be welcomed. Address Mr. C. McCrimman, 184, Rutherglen Road, Glasgow.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Cambridge.

At St. Andrew's Street Baptist Chapel, Cambridge, of which Rev. Charles Joseph is pastor, Mr. Henry Thorne has just conducted a mission, to the great satisfaction of the Church. Twenty meetings were held. All were well attended, and full of spiritual power. Mr. Thorne's tact, earnestness, and Biblical knowledge won, convinced, and edified his hearers. Between forty and fifty persons, many of them young men, passed through the inquiry rooms, and professed to find peace through believing. Many others in the Church and congregation, and from other Churches, were also spiritually stimulated and strengthened, while the pastor bears grateful testimony to Mr. Thorne's loyal co-operation and helpful comradeship.

Gipsy Smith in London.

Gipsy Smith has commenced a mission at Tulse Hill Wesleyan Church, S.W. The services on Lord's Day last were thronged, and many were impressed by the earnest and searching addresses of the evangelist. On Monday last Gipsy Smith was present at the noon meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., and spoke some helpful words to Christian workers. Speaking from the standpoint of one who is seldom able to get away from his own meetings, he dwelt on the necessity for communion with God, since we cannot give out unless we take in; "let us ever draw from the living well." At the request of Mr. M. H. Hodder, who was presiding, Gipsy Smith afterwards sang, choosing: "Ho! everyone that is thirsty in spirit" (No. 553, "Sacred Songs and Solos"), which was given with taste and feeling.

Racecourse Mission.

It would be difficult to form an estimate of the result of the past week's work of the Racecourse Mission among the pleasure seekers and gamblers at Doncaster. Some fifteen thousand copies of marked, illustrated Gospels, of the Acts, and Epistles were distributed.

We had a good band of workers, and enjoyed the co-operation of the Free Church Council. Eight hours' work was our daily task, consisting of Bible reading and prayer meeting, distribution on the road to the course, and also upon the course itself, from the bookmakers' rings to the grand stand; personal dealing, and Gospel services, followed by meetings in the Market Square at night.

On the Sunday prior to the race-meeting, services were conducted in the Corn Exchange, and likewise in the open air. The presence of God was with us throughout the campaign.

Rev. Dr. Finnemore, President of the Free Church Council, who presided at the thanksgiving meeting held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, testified to the spiritual blessing received by the Churches, and said that he felt sure that his week's experience would colour his future ministry in the town. Another minister said that he had never been upon a racecourse before, and had thought that such places were best left alone, but he was now convinced of the usefulness of the work, and urged the Churches to support it to the best of their ability.

I was unable to write at the time, of visits to Newton Abbot and Totnes racecourses, where good work was also done. At the latter place, the Churches heartily co-operated. O. L. Heatley, Sec.

Mr. William Forbes held a tea meeting on Thursday last for women engaged at the Earl's Court Exhibition. He holds a similar meeting today (Thursday) at Bloomsbury Chapel.

On Sunday, September 1, Rev. F. C. Spurr commenced a mission in the Baptist Church, Castle Donnington. The services were well attended. The Bible readings each day drew large numbers of Christian people from other denominations.

Tent Work.

At Buffalo Exposition.

In the tent meetings at Buffalo, times of blessing have been experienced. On a recent Sunday evening, says the New York Evangelist, "Dr. H. M. Wharton, of Philadelphia, the well-known evangelist, finished a series of three addresses, the topic of that evening being, 'Who is on the Lord's side?' A large audience greeted Dr. Wharton, and as usual his talk was simple, plain, straightforward; a peculiarly moving appeal to his auditors to choose the Lord's side in the battle of life. On Sunday afternoon Dr. Wharton spoke again at the men's meeting. The large tent was well filled with men and a very earnest meeting, a large number of young men coming forward at the close and manifesting a desire to take a greater interest in spiritual things, and to begin a Christian life."

Southsea Summer Campaign.

We brought our summer tent campaign, with our two tents, to a close here on Sunday week, after eighteen weeks of hard, up-hill, but happy, work. The meetings have been good, and we have had many tokens of the Lord's presence, though the numbers have not been large; and there have been some hopeful cases of blessing, for which we give God all the praise.

We had two positions, one on Southsea Common, to use which we have had the Government permission for twenty years, and the other in Albert Road, in the midst of Ritualists and Romanists.

Jno. Denning.

A Village Mission.

Mr. Fred. A. Glover and his friends have just concluded a Gospel mission at Stogumber, among the green hills of western Somerset. They pitched their tent about the middle of August, when the farmers and their men were in the very midst of busy harvest. Yet there were good attendances in the week evenings, and on the three Sundays the tent was full, or more than full.

Christian people of the village gladly welcomed the mission, and a number, both of men and women, who are never seen at "kirk," came to hear the Gospel. The message was earnestly listened to by old and young.

Certainly God was with his servants. The Word evidently touched many. There were some clear cases of blessing. On one farm three men are rejoicing in a new life in Jesus Christ. More than twenty testified to good received in the meetings.

We have reason to think the Word has gone widely and deeply, and that, if faithfully followed up, the mission will be a beginning of growing spiritual good. Alfred Hewlett.

Minister of Baptist Church, Stogumber.

A Fruitful Mission at Olney.

A three-weeks' Tent Mission has been held at Olney, Bucks, conducted by Mr. G. Andrews, of the Evangelistic Mission, London. From the start the meetings "took" with the people, and by the end of the first week the congregation had reached about 400. This went on with deepening interest and increased numbers, until the last week the large tent has been full each night, and crowded on Sundays. One very pleasing feature of the mission has been the number of people, who are not in the habit of going to any place of worship, coming night after night.

Among other cases of blessing may be mentioned that of a middle-aged woman on a visit to the town, She remained to be spoken to at the close of one of the services, and told the preacher she had not been to a place of worship for more than twenty years, but after further explanation of God's way of peace and prayer, she left rejoicing in the Saviour.

A young woman, in great distress of mind, came to the tent half-an-hour before the time of service, and told how she believed that God had given her up to be lost for ever. She had tried to banish all thoughts of God from her mind, but failing that she had become most miserable, until the story of redeeming grace had led her to hope for mercy. In simple faith she took Christ as her Saviour. A. W. H.

London Tent Campaign.

At the Islington tent, during the closing days of the mission, an intense spirit of revival has been manifest. Night by night the tent was crowded as Mr. Leonard Weaver powerfully set forth the truths of the Gospel. An additional feature was the effective singing of Miss Angel.

Last week was a glorious one in the annals of the campaign. On the Tuesday Mr. Weaver gave the address, and on the following night a testimony meeting was conducted by the Secretary. Among the testimonies were some that are illustrative of the remarkable fruits of the mission. A notorious fighting man of North London, who with sorrow confessed that he had brought his mother's grey hairs with sorrow to the grave, spoke of the Saviour who had delivered and sustained him. Another man, formerly a Roman Catholic and a publican, bore testimony to the power of Christ to save him. Another friend testified to the fact that the prayers of a faithful wife for twenty-five years, had been answered by his conversion. The numerous testimonies which followed bore further evidence of the blessing granted at Islington.

On Thursday last Mr. Weaver was again present, speaking to a large assembly on the importance of immediate decision for Christ. There were again many seekers. On Friday another large crowd gathered, the tent seeming too small to accommodate the people; the entrances to the tent were thronged. A pleasing feature of the service was a farewell address by Rev. W. Mixion, a coloured preacher from Atlanta, U.S.A., whose labours in the tent have been very acceptable. The service closed with earnest words from Mr. Weaver, and many persons were led to Christ.

Saturday evening's gatherings were of a notable character. A rally of converts and friends was held. Some 500 persons sat down to tea, after which came a splendid meeting, in which many of the converts gave bright and forcible testimonies. Mr. Weaver spoke some stimulating words to them, and the evening concluded with a helpful and instructive limelight lecture by Mr. Marshall, of the North Africa Mission, illustrative of the work of that Society.

Last Lord's Day some 300 people gathered to the 7 a.m. prayer meeting. At 11 a.m. a large company of men heard Mr. Weaver speak, and at the close a number surrendered to Christ. The evening service was most impressive. The great tent proved altogether too small to hold the crowds that came to hear. Mr. Weaver spoke with power, and scores of seekers were helped. The scene at the front of the platform was solemn and affecting, as men and women knelt and prayed for salvation.

The Wimbledon tent was opened on Saturday night last. There was a capital gathering of Christian workers to hear an address from Rev. D. M. Cameron. The Brothers Weaver were the opening missioners. Their ministry was much blessed last year in the district, and many greeted their presence once again with joy and anticipation. The afternoon meeting for Christians was splendidly attended, and a spirit of expectancy was evidenced. At night the highest anticipations were exceeded. Scores were unable to get near the tent. It was a solemn and heart-searching meeting. Mr. Frank Weaver sang "Oh, there is a city," with pathos, and the Word by his brother, Mr. Bewley Weaver, was in power, for when the invitation to the unsaved was given, many people rose to signify their desire to obtain forgiveness and serve God. It was a time of gracious memory. The hearts of the workers were filled with joy at the abundant harvest on the first Sunday night of the mission.

The Harlesden Lane Tent was the scene of blessing last week during the visit of the Weaver Brothers. Although there was a very wet Sunday for the first meetings the tent was filled, and many anxious ones sought the advice of workers. The meetings grew all through the week, and there was a spirit of inquiry evidenced at each service.

Mr. William Grove has had stirring times at Deptford, where, by processions and other means, the people have been attracted. Mr. Grove's earnest labours have been blessed to many.

Clapham Road tent is erected on the site that was used last year, but a larger tent has been put up. Mr. John T. Vine took the opening services last Lord's Day, and spoke impressively to large audiences.

Leyton tent can also report blessing; the missioners last week were Messrs. Charles Inglis and R. S. Bradbrook, whose devotion and experience in soul-winning work proved very helpful to the congregations that came together.

The Central Council have made arrangements for a United Rally of Converts and Friends to be held at Exeter Hall on October 8, doors opening at six o'clock. Admission will be by ticket only, to be obtained at the Central Offices, London Tent Campaign, St. Paul's Buildings, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Mr. Thomas Goudie, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a fruitful two-months' tent mission at Walthamstow. The final gathering took the form of a praise and testimony meeting. It was cheering to hear one after another testify to the great things that God had done for them. Mr. Goudie concluded a happy meeting with some wise words to the young converts. K.

REAL PROTESTANT WORK

To Check the Romeward Movement!

The EDUCATION of the PEOPLE on the EVILS OF RITUALISM AND ROMANISM.

This Important Work is being actively pursued and actually accomplished by the

KENSIT CRUSADE & WICKLIFFE PREACHERS

BY MEANS OF

Consecutive Protestant Missions throughout every County in England.

A Glimpse at One Month's Work in the "DULL SEASON."

During AUGUST, 1901, the following places have been visited:—

Obituary.

MRS. DANN, OXFORD.

WE regret to have to record the death of Mrs. Dann, wife of Rev. James Dann, who for nearly twenty years has occupied the position of pastor of the New Road Baptist Chapel in Oxford. Mrs. Dann exercised great influence as a temperance worker and advocate, and was a gifted speaker. She will be sorely missed by her husband's congregation, and much sympathy is felt for Mr. Dann in his great loss.

REV. F. BALDEY, SOUTHSEA.

The death of Rev. F. Baldey, who passed away at Southsea on September 10, removes an earnest and faithful evangelical clergyman. In 1868 he was appointed to the Vicarage of St. Simon, Southsea, which he held to the time of his death. During his ministry of more than forty years the many-sided work steadily grew and flourished. But it was no narrow parochialism that engaged his attention. Mr. Baldey sought to lead his people to take the same wide outlook, and to show the same unselfish devotion to the cause of Christ that characterized himself. Every good evangelical work found sympathy and support at St. Simon's, Southsea, but the largest share of all was reserved for the Church Missionary Society, to which Mr. Baldey was deeply attached. Amongst those who from St. Simon's gave themselves to the foreign field was Mr. Baldey's own daughter, who laid down her life in East Africa. The yearly Convention at Southsea was held under his auspices.

Oxford Letter.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

"UNIVERSITY Reform" was the subject of a paper contributed by Mr. J. A. R. Marriott, the popular secretary of the University Extension Movement in Oxford, to the Fortnightly Review. And it is well, perhaps, to be reminded during vacation of those events which have combined to make Oxford what she is—a national centre of education, not a preserve for a class or party.

Dealing with this reform in Oxford, Mr. Marriott gives a vivid picture of the torpor which existed in the eighteenth century, and of the awakening in the nineteenth. He puts together the Oxford Movement and the Reform Bill as combining, from opposite directions, to quicken the national life, and to set men inquiring as to ancient foundations and new ideals.

Both, he maintains, bore their share in rescuing Oxford from its long phase of suspended animation. Directly the Reform Bill was passed, a demand was made for the admission of Nonconformists to the full benefits of the Universities. Imagine a state of things in which the subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles was required at matriculation! In 1854 a new epoch opened. A class of men came up to whom Toryism and clericalism was hateful, and the movement went forward for the admission of Nonconformists to a full share in the government and teaching of the University and its colleges.

It is not too much to say that such a system as prevailed before 1854 could not have survived down to our time. If Oxford had refused to play a part in the national movement, other resources would have been called forth, and her revenues turned to some more fruitful purpose. Now Oxford goes forth to seek for students in the great centres of national life. All the great middle class schools in the country are influenced. Free competition has for ever made impossible that dull torpor which so long brooded over Oxford. The ideal of some is that no room should be found here for any but strenuous workers, that the pass degree should be abolished or made a much more serious affair, that the mass of men who came up merely to pass a pleasant three years and scrape through their schools with as little work as possible should be discouraged. Doubtless, some movement in this direction is necessary; but we must not forget that the life here is an education in itself, and many would be sorry to see Oxford open only to men who are capable of taking high honours.

Rev. F. C. Wright was welcomed on Thursday to his new charge by the friends of the Wesleyan Chapel in Walton Street. The superintendent of the circuit, Rev. W. Bradfield, presided, and said he welcomed Mr. Wright to the circuit not only as his colleague, but as a fellow-worker for God. Mr. Wright, in thanking the friends for their kind words, referred to the fact that his father had preached the Gospel for fifty-six years.

Church of England.

Rev. Dr. Moule, Bishop-designate of Durham, will be consecrated in York Minster on October 18.

Rev. Lucius Smith, vicar of Calverley, in making an extra appeal to his parishioners on behalf of the Bishop of Ripon's Million Shilling Fund, says that in some places the best contributions to the Fund are made by Dissenters.

Rev. Johnston Carnegie Brown, vicar of St. Paul's, Brixton, London, has accepted from the London Jews' Society the incumbency of Christ Church, Jerusalem, and in connection with it the headship of the mission to local Jews.

The Bishop of Worcester, whose health had improved so much that he contemplated postponing his resignation, has undergone a relapse, and his condition again occasions grave anxiety. Dr. Perowne is at present engaged on the preparation of his final Visitation Charge, which, however, he may be unable to deliver.

The vicarage of Huddersfield, which will shortly be vacated by Canon Bardsley, has been offered by the patron (Sir John Ramsden) to the vicar of Dewsbury, Canon H. L. Clarke, who has accepted it. Canon Clarke has been in Dewsbury eleven years, and during that time (says the Yorkshire Post) he has laboured zealously for the welfare of the community both in the capacity of vicar and as a member of public bodies.

Rev. E. V. Everard (a son of the late Rev. George Everard) has an encouraging account to give of his first year's work at St. James', Sheffield. The population of the parish is about 4,000—a considerable portion of whom are Roman Catholics. The district is mostly a very poor part, with some bad slum property, which is being gradually improved away. "Our God, whom we seek to serve," says the vicar, "has been blessing us, both in our parish and congregation."

The annual report of Rev. A. E. Deacon, vicar of St. Matthew's, Fulham, shows that the congregations have steadily increased. There were seventy candidates for Confirmation, twenty-five of whom were adults, and an increase of over 500 in the aggregate number of communicants. The many parochial agencies are in a healthy state. One hopeful sign mentioned by Mr. Deacon is the marked increase of interest among the parishioners in Home and Foreign Missions. Not only have the offerings for Home Missions increased, but those for Foreign Missions have increased fourfold in four years.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, vicar of St. James, Holloway, in his annual report for 1900-1901, points out that the best and most abiding work cannot always be put down on paper. "Last year," he adds, "I alluded in detail to, I think, nearly every department of the work, mentioning several names—a few only out of the many who, by their conscientious and thorough ministry, have helped me to build up and maintain a strong, healthy, spiritual life, both within and around our Church. I will not utilize my short preface this year in entering on these details again; the body of our report will show that we are more than holding our ground."

Rev. F. W. Mortimer, vicar of Darlington, writing in the parish magazine with reference to the late Bishop of Durham, says:—"One lesson is taught by the very terms of his last bequest. All the money which he received as bishop of the diocese was paid into a special banking account called the 'King's Messenger Account,' and from it he paid all that was necessary for the keeping up of the bishopric, and the remainder—a large sum, I understand—now comes back to the diocese. The money he felt was not his own, but a trust for Durham. As with the money, so with those greater gifts which he possessed—all were used by him as one who should give an account."

Congregational.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have accepted the services of Rev. E. H. Clark, of Cheshunt College, and of Rev. Bond James, of the Memorial College, Brecon. The latter has been appointed to labour at Mangaia (Cook Islands).

A United Nonconformist open-air service, held at Gatley on Sunday week, proved very attractive. In the evening a united service was held in the Congregational Church, and was well attended. Mr. C. H. Hulbert, of Didsbury College, was speaker at both services.

The health of Rev. Frank C. Rollin, the only Congregational minister who was permitted by the Transvaal Government to remain in Johannesburg, having somewhat suffered, he is about to return home for a few months' change. He is to speak at the colonial missionary meeting in connection with the Congregational Union Assembly in Manchester.

A meeting of members of the church and congregation at Wellingborough has been held in connection with the Twentieth Century Fund. The pastor (Rev. E. P. Powell) occupied the chair. Mr. J. Rutherford (the secretary of the fund) explained its object and working, and Rev. D. L. Ritchie (Newcastle-upon-Tyne) put forward the claims of the village churches on the fund; and, in the course of an eloquent address, made an earnest appeal for large contributions to the Central Fund. As the result of the meeting, promises of further subscriptions were made.

The Tabernacle at Dursley, of which Rev. John Thomas is pastor, has undergone renovation. Rev. Wm. Muncaster, of London, a former pastor, was the preacher at the re-opening services. This Tabernacle was erected in the year 1808, and was opened by Rev. Rowland Hill. The old Tabernacle, which was opened in the year 1710, was frequently supplied by George Whitefield. The present building is much larger than the original one, seating 750 persons. It is of interest to note that the Tabernacle Sunday school is probably the oldest in the country. It celebrated its hundred and twenty-third anniversary in June last. Its founder and first superintendent was William King, a respected tradesman of the town, who afterwards strongly advised his friend Robert Raikes, of Gloucester, to try the experiment in that city, which, after due consideration, he did, the result being the world-wide system of voluntary Sunday schools.

Baptist.

Rev. William Cuff is maintaining his health, and, while he cannot at present undertake outside engagements, the work at Shoreditch Tabernacle is in every way well sustained.

Services in connection with the recognition of Rev. Fred. H. King (late of Bow) as pastor of Stroud Green have proved encouraging. Pastor Archibald G. Brown preached to a crowded congregation, and in the public meeting Revs. J. R. Wood, D. Moore, and other friends took part

During his stay in South Australia, Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, will occupy for several Sundays the pulpit of North Adelaide Church, of which Rev. E. H. Ellis (who, as already announced, has accepted the call to the East London Tabernacle) has been pastor. Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., is due to arrive in New Zealand this month.

To signalize the 107th anniversary of the chapel at Sheldon, Devon, a thorough renovation of the exterior and interior has just been made. The seats and rostrum have been modernized, and a new porch added. The re-opening services were conducted by Mr. W. H. Roberts, of Bristol, the Wesleyan and Congregational Sunday schools joining in a united scholars' service.

In connection with the cause at Skegness, building operations are to be commenced as soon as possible. The resident population being small, the friends depend to some extent upon visitors for the maintenance and extension of the work. During the summer season no fewer than seventeen meetings are held each week, and the "Sands Mission" is a prominent feature. Thurs., Sept. 26, is the annual "reception day," when the church is open for friends to bring their offerings.

In connection with the Church at Grosvenor Street, Manchester, the pastor (Rev. R. Tallontire) has brought the summer campaign of Saturday evening open-air services to a close. Commencing the last Saturday evening in June, Mr. Tallontire has preached to typical open-air audiences. In connection with the "Million New Pledges Crusade," open-air temperance meetings have been held fortnightly, at which various speakers have addressed large gatherings of working men and women, and at which many pledges have been taken.

Methodist.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse has been paying several highly acceptable visits to various places on Tyneside, preaching at Gateshead, Blaydon, Tynemouth, and Jarrow.

The opening services of the New Central Hall of the Edinburgh Wesleyan Mission are fixed for Thursday, October 7. Dr. Robertson Nicoll is to preach the dedicatory sermon.

At the Central Hall, Manchester, the Methodist year has commenced full of promise. Mr. Heap's successor (Rev. W. Marshall Johnson) has been given the heartiest of welcomes. The Sunday services have been characterized by excellent congregations, spiritual power, and good results.

Methodists of the Manchester district have arranged a conference for this week at the Central Hall. Several of the prominent preachers from America and Australia who attended the London Conference are announced. The proceedings were to begin on Wednesday evening with a sermon by Rev. Dr. Watkin (Australia).

The various branches of the South London Mission have now begun the autumn and winter campaign, and there is every hope of fruitful work being done in the next six or eight months, when all the organizations are in full swing. During the summer months the congregations at the Great Central Hall have been remarkably sustained in numbers, and the evening service on the first Sunday in September was crowded. An interesting feature in this service was an anonymous letter, read to the congregation, from one who signed himself "A Changed Atheist," testifying to the good he had received from the address of one of the workers in an open-air service.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Garden Blaikie has been appointed to missionary service in China.

Rev. James Christie, Moderator of Synod, was the representative of the Presbyterian Church in Great Britain at the recent meeting of the Waldensian Synod in Torre Pellice. He addressed the Synod, and, particularly as this was the only occasion on which the services of an interpreter had not been required, his speech was received with much enthusiasm.

Australian papers give interesting accounts of the union of the six Presbyterian Churches of the Commonwealth, which was consummated at Sydney. The name of the new united Church is, "The Presbyterian Church of Australia." Thus Federal union and Presbyterian union have been realized almost simultaneously. Rev. Dr. Hanson and Professor Iverach were amongst those from the Mother Country who took part in the proceedings of the first United Assembly.

On September 6, Rev. Wm. Johnston, B.A., late of Clapton, London, was inducted to the pastoral charge of Trinity Church, Leeds, and the event promises well for the future of the congregation and its new minister. The church is situated in Harehill Avenue, in the midst of one of the most promising suburbs of this busy and flourishing industrial centre. There is only a hall, but the church proper is soon to be erected, and there is much need for it, as the congregation already fills the present building.

Society of Friends.

At a recent meeting of the Friends Foreign Missions Board, Henry E. Clark spoke of the work in Madagascar, and enlarged on the remarkable spiritual awakening that had taken place among the boys and girls in the large schools at Ambohijatovo. Farewells followed to sixteen outgoing missionaries.

Speaking at the meeting for sufferings on the 6th instant, John Bellows said Friends would be pleased to know that the Dukhobor settlements in Canada are now beyond the need of monetary assistance, thanks to the liberality of Philadelphia Friends and the character of the people themselves; but there is a great need of teachers to establish schools. A beginning has been made, but much remains to be done.

It appears from recently-published statistics that during the past forty years the Society of Friends has made some slight increase in numbers, the membership in 1861 being 13,844, and at the present time 17,346; the "habitual attenders" now numbering 25,143, as compared with 17,034 in 1831. Whether this growth is proportionate to the increase of the population, however, is not stated, but to judge from the frequent complaints in late years of the falling away of the children of Friends it would seem doubtful. It would be a source of regret if the body which has done so much in the past for spiritual religion and religious freedom in these islands should decline.

The Salvation Army.

A large number of men attend the free breakfast and service held each Sunday morning at Blackfriars Shelter.

No less than 133 tons of waste paper were collected and sorted by the men in the Salvation Army's Metropolitan Social Institutions last week.

General Booth has decided to open a home for male inebriates, and has purchased for that purpose a large mansion at Thundersley, Essex. The institution, which will be under duly qualified medical superintendence, is to be opened during the latter part of October.

In connection with the opening of the new Training Homes in Australia by the Countess of Hopetoun, H.R.H. the Duke of Cornwall and York sent the following letter, through his secretary:—"I am desired by the Duke of Cornwall and York to say that his Royal Highness has heard with very much pleasure from various sources, and with great satisfaction, of the good work which is being carried on by you and the Salvation Army in this country."

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Notes & Comments

Re-issue of Scripture Biographies. The cordial reception given to Rev. F. B. Meyer's Scripture Biographies on their first appearance, and the continued demand for them among the Christian public, have abundantly proved the need for the presentation of Scripture history and teaching in this fashion. With testimonies to the blessing which has followed their circulation, our publishers have received numerous inquiries for copies in a new and larger style, and they have just issued in such a form Elijah, and the Secret of his Power (2s. 6d.), to be followed at monthly intervals by the nine other volumes of the series. The general appearance will be found decidedly attractive and "up to date," and those who have already proved the usefulness of the books will find them in their new dress suitable as presents during the coming season.

The New American President. The new American President has entered on the duties to which he was so suddenly called, in a spirit that is exemplary, and his words have made a deep impression. Mr. Roosevelt's past career has been full of vicissitude and adventure, but he has already done good service to his country in challenging the corruption of the New York police force, and there are signs that he will settle down to his work under a steadying sense of responsibility. Like his predecessor, he has had a career untouched by the corruption which is so often charged against American politicians. His sympathies are openly against the "trusts" which threaten to rule American life, and he is credited with being no friend to the "bosses," who are the wire-pullers of the political parties. We hope that his tragic entrance on office may be providentially directed to great issues for America and the world at large. The following words were spoken at the close of Dr. Clifford's service last Sunday morning by one of the American delegates to the Methodist Œcumenical Council, Dr. J. P. Brushingham, pastor of First Methodist Church, Chicago:—

> Before I am seated, I want to say one reassuring word concerning him who is now the President of the United States. President Roosevelt is a man who is in sympathy with the Puritanism of England and America, a man who has written a splendid life of Oliver Cromwell; who was a graduate of Harvard College, but is one of the people in sympathy and fellowship; a man who is not a lover of war, as some have hinted, but who, when engaged in a quarrel, will make his enemy feel the force of his presence; a man, who, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, by a splendid preparation in all details cut short that struggle between America and Spain in a sweeping victory; a man who can be trusted to be a friend to liberty and religion. By a singular coincidence he occupied the pulpit of the church to which I have the honour to be pastor, the oldest church of any denomination in the great metropolis of Chicago, in my absence, two weeks ago to-day, preaching upon the text—"Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only."

The Involuntary Record of Crime. The startling fact that the face of Czolgosz, Mr. McKinley's assassin, has been clearly recognised in the kinetoscope pictures of the President's last speech, working his way excitedly through the crowd to the foot of the daïs on which he spoke, suggests the possibility that some of his accomplices may be similarly detected. Whether this will turn out so or not only time will reveal; but the whole incident is eloquent of the way in which human actions must be recorded in the very constitution of the world in which we live, if only we had the gift to read the record. The air, the sunlight, the particles of our brains, the earth, are parts of a vast library in which lies hidden to our eye, but open to the eye of God, the story of all that has ever happened. When "the books are opened," this self-recording instrument will give up its story of hidden evil and untold good.

The Teaching of History. Amid some wrangling that was not calculated to further the good cause, some excellent work was done by the International Peace Congress in Glasgow. Two points stand out. The first is the acute remark of one of the American delegates that where Anti-English sentiment in the U.S.A. existed, it had arisen mainly from false and prejudiced teaching in the schools. An appeal was made for new progressive scientific teaching of history to children. As the roots of most quarrels lie hidden in the past, it is of the utmost importance that race and class hatred should not be fomented by reviving the ashes of dead controversies, still less by falsifying the records of bygone conflicts. Historians should take this matter to heart, and realise the great opportunity they have of so impressing the rising generation that one of the chief roots of bitterness between nations may wither away.

What Makes for Peace. Another important step was taken by the Peace Congress in sending forth an "Appeal to the Nations." This brief document touches on many subjects, but concentrates its appeal to the peoples of Europe on the fact that the remedy for war lies really in their own hands:—

> The time has come when peoples must understand that the peace question is a question of bread. Just as the great Cobden was able to bring about the triumph of Free Trade when he presented it in a clear, striking manner, so a pacific movement will acquire irresistible force when the masses of the people understand that the suppression of poverty is only possible by the establishment of judicial union among civilized peoples.

This "judicial union" can be attained only by the disappearance of the mutual suspicions with which the foreign policy of every nation is viewed by every other; and the growth of a great international public opinion whose basis is a reciprocity; not of tariffs but of trust and goodwill. It would have been well if the delegates had been able to agree better on the religious motive which alone can bring this about.

The Blameless Saxon Monarch. The millenary of King Alfred the Great has afforded an excellent occasion to teachers and preachers for calling attention to the qualities which constitute true greatness. We have good reason to be proud of the great Saxon King, not simply on account of his deeds of valour in resisting the invader, but chiefly on account of his blameless life. In an age when superstition was rife, Alfred lived a devout life according to his light, and posterity justly holds him in reverence. England owes him a great debt for a remarkable combination of personal and regal qualities, and it will be a good thing done if these qualities are pointed out to our youth. The men who helped to make England in days gone by, thought of something more serious than horse-racing, sports, gambling, and drunkenness. King Alfred is an excellent text for a much-needed sermon to the frivolous youth of our time. An interesting tribute appears on p. 21.

The South African Native. While the war still drags its weary course along, it at least affords time and opportunity for the British public to look steadily at the great South African problem which will emerge into importance immediately the war is over, and which will take many years to settle. It will be remembered by posterity that during this contest both sides tacitly agreed that under no circumstances should aid be asked from the native races. The native is an onlooker in this war, though at bottom he is the true bone of contention; and his fate largely hangs in the balance till the final issue is certain. The supremacy of the English race, according to all our national professions on the subject, will mean the emancipation, education, and development of the aborigines of South Africa. Now is the time to prepare for the inevitable controversy as to how this is to be done, by the steady and patient education of public opinion in this country, and in the South African Colonies, on humanitarian and Christian lines.

His Possibilities. A "South African Missionary" points out in the British Weekly, several factors in the problem which tend to simplify the problem. First, the native possesses certain physical and mental qualities that eminently fit him for a civilized future. He is full of vital energy, is healthy and well-built, has common sense, judgment, and a touch of humour, is loyal to a cause, devoted in friendship, generous and sympathetic when touched on the right side. Secondly, the natural conditions of colonial life are all in favour of native predominance, as the working force in the country. As the country opens up, his services will be more and more in demand. In the third place, a native war in the colony is for ever out of the question now that the tribal system has had its death blow. Fourthly, the native has a passionate desire that the young of his people should be educated. The sacrifices made sometimes by distant relatives in this cause are almost pathetic. As it is, more than half the scholars attending State-aided schools at the beginning of the new century were natives. And last, but not least, "the Gospel message is making its way quietly, in all its simplicity, strength, and beauty, to the hearts and homes of the native people, while the bulk of the Christian natives serve God gladly and with humility." These are great and moving incentives to the English people to do their best to elevate, civilize, educate, and Christianize native South Africa.

The False Position of Anglicanism. It must be a mortification to the High Anglican party that, with all its flattery of Rome, and its acknowledgment of her claims as an integral part of the Christian Church, it should meet with so many rebuffs from the other side. We all remember Mr. Gladstone's letter to the Pope begging for an acknowledgment of the validity of Anglican orders, and the Pope's stern rejoinder. Cardinal Vaughan is to be credited with a similar attitude of no surrender to the claims of the English Church. "To be Roman is to be Catholic, and to be Catholic is to be Roman," was his definition of the situation the other day. The position of the Ritualists, thus, is that they deny the validity of the Free Church ministry in all its branches, while they allow that of the Roman Communion; and yet they, equally with the Free Churches, are repudiated by the Pope and his party. It is a false, illogical, and humiliating position to occupy. To this impasse the Oxford Movement has led.

The Truth in a Nutshell. In an able letter addressed to Rev. Douglas Macleane, to which, unfortunately, only a limited publicity has been given, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., has said some plain words in regard to the essential differences which distinguish Protestantism from that Anglicanism which, building upon sacerdotalism, restricts Christian work to a priestly caste. Mr. Smith, after a defence of the spiritual side of Protestant Christianity, and the labours of the men who are outside the line of "apostolic succession," says:—

> My experience of life, gathered in many countries, teaches me that you cannot keep up a high standard of life and godliness amongst the laity, except by developing active Christian service. . . . The fact is, the Evangelical and Sacerdotal conceptions widely differ. According to the one, every true believer is bound to labour to extend his Kingdom; with the other, the burden falls mainly on a caste or order called "priests," which indeed was true under the Judaic system, but of which the New Testament knows nothing.

The Important Thing in Teaching. The vexed question of the Sunday-school and its alleged weakness is still occupying a prominent place in several widely-circulated papers. One of the wisest counsels we have yet seen is contained in a letter from a prominent worker, who says:—

> They make a profound mistake who think to solve this serious question by concentrating their attention upon boys and girls in their teens. Unless the cause is gained in a human life before the teens are reached, there remains a desperate problem for the teacher to face. The chief part of our work should be accomplished during the tender years of the child's life. The infants' room is the very centre of the school, and in it the severest task awaits us. Have we quite understood this? I fear not, since in my extended experience I have often found that the least capable amongst the teachers are entrusted with the infants' class. Surely this is sheer folly! Is the least competent gardener entrusted with the most delicate of the plants?

This sane word needs to be deeply pondered, both by parents and teachers. It contains the crux of the whole matter of Christian education.

Christians for Christian Work. There is one great principle of Christian service which, it seems to us, is overlooked in many churches, viz., that Christian service of any kind is the proper work of Christian people, and of no others. We should have thought that so obvious a truth required no demonstration; yet it is quite clear that many have never learned the elementary lesson. We hear of certain Sunday-schools in which a number of the teachers are admittedly unconverted people, and of churches in which organist and choir members have not a scrap of sympathy with the work of the church, beyond their own performances. It is a serious reflection upon any church when unconverted people are called in to do the Lord's work. It is a great weakness, also, and a supreme folly. Does anyone know of a Conservative club having Radical officials? or a Radical club having Conservative officials? Worldly men would laugh at the notion; and well may they laugh at the spectacle of unconverted people being asked to undertake responsible work in the church or congregation. Better by far have inferior work with heart in it, than the most brilliant effort which is soulless. We need again to hear the old cry, "Holy men for holy work."

Why Preaching "Decays." An old preacher, who in his day has been a veritable apostle of Jesus Christ, has just issued a little brochure for the benefit of his younger brethren, in which he begs them to remember that unless they have a Divine vocation to preach the Gospel, they will certainly do more harm than good in occupying the pulpit. If men understood this, we should be spared the controversy which from time to time recurs upon the decay of preaching. The preaching that decays—like everything else that decays—does so because its vital principle fails, and unless there is a Divine vocation it is bound to fail. It is not sufficient for a man to be "in the ministry;" he needs that the ministry shall be in him. The apostolic passion for Christ and the salvation of souls will never fail, if it is continually fed from its true source. But this apostolic passion never enters a man from without; it is generated within him by the Holy Ghost.

A Significant Admission. It is doubtful whether debate and argument about the truths of the Gospel accomplish much towards the conversion of sceptics. Some of the most notorious sceptics who have turned to God have given other reasons for their conversion than polemical ones. Generally their conscience has been awakened through some trifling incident which directly touched the heart, and won it for the Saviour. We say this in view of the character sketch of the founder of modern Secularism, which appears in a current monthly. After many debates, he remains a Secularist still, and yet he makes the extraordinary admission that his heart has a passionate longing and hope for immortality, while he holds a deep reverence for the Bible. In saying this, he allows his heart to speak its true language. And every man, not absolutely perverted, would speak similarly. Workers need not waste their time in proving what man's heart acknowledges; it is better to make human need our point of departure for preaching Christ—for only He can satisfy men.

The Gospel of Humanity. There are signs that some of the preachers of "the Gospel of Humanity" are becoming disgusted with the attitude of working men towards their ethical ideas. One of these charged his large audience a day or two ago with caring only for their leaders so long as they could deal with actual concrete issues; for the ethical ideas behind them they did not seem to care at all. We are not surprised at this; rather, we should be surprised if it were otherwise; for, when God is so carefully excluded from a social programme, as being a hindrance to its working, men will never be found to possess native respect for ethical ideas, as such. An "idea" of morality is valueless unless it is vitally connected with the Eternal Being, who is the Author of all law and morals. This ethical "gospel" proves itself to be no Gospel at all. It throws men back upon themselves, for it has no God to throw them back upon. History is emphatic upon one point—the preaching of ethics apart from God has always been a disastrous failure.

Light for Healing. The recent discoveries in regard to the "bacteria-killing power" of light, and the use of chemical rays and sun galleries in the treatment of various forms of disease, have been followed by the invention of an electric lamp with but feeble illuminating power, but rich in the qualities which are requisite for the cure of physical disorders. The fact may well send our thoughts to the spiritual kingdom, and to the Divine treatment of sin, the worst form of disease. As Rev. F. S. Webster has said, there is a peculiar power of physical healing in sunshine, "and so, wherever the Light of the World shines in upon the soul, there is health." To them that believe, the Sun of Righteousness arises with "healing in his wings." The Divine light brings with it salvation from sin. "Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved."

Athens and Bethlehem. In several recently published volumes, the civilization of ancient Greece, and the Greek conception of society, have been held up to admiration, and as worthy to be the goal of the highest practical endeavours of the present age. One recent writer, indeed, professes to find among the Greeks "the record of the highest achievements of the past, and the hope of the highest possibilities of the future." Yet it must frankly be admitted that the Greek ideal civilization rested upon a basis of slavery and immorality. The population of Attica included over 40,000 slaves, and in Athens the slaves outnumbered the citizens by four to one. It is equally true that the noblest Greek philosophers referred to slaves as "living machines," and to women as inferior to men. How far is all this from the teachings and example of Jesus! It was left for Christ, in taking humanity upon Himself, to declare the unity of the human race, to preach liberty to the captive, and to set up, by his life at the carpenter's bench as by his divine utterances, the dignity of labour, and the right of every human being to liberty of mind and body, and to fulness of life.

The Domestic Servant Trouble. To judge from correspondence and comment in the public press, the difficulty of obtaining help in the household is rapidly developing. Unhappily, however, the point of view from which the question is being regarded is a very one-sided and limited one, and it is pitiable to observe how uniformly the domestic is referred to simply as a drudge, or mere piece of mechanism whose interest and well-being are of no moment whatever to her employers. Like all other social subjects, this also has two sides, each with its complement of duties. Perhaps if masters and mistresses were ready to fulfil theirs, less would be heard of growing trouble. Christian householders will, of course, always endeavour to make their houses "homes," rather than mere "places," for those who minister to their comfort. Such employers, by showing real interest in the physical and spiritual welfare of their servants, do much to bring about that kindly feeling which ought to be at the root of all true and willing service.

The Great High Priest and The Royal Priesthood.

IN patriarchal days the head of the family was its priest. There are few more pathetic scenes in history than that of Job, offering his sacrifice and making daily intercession, lest his children should have given way to the enmity of the carnal mind and renounced God in their hearts.

When God had brought Israel out of Egypt, He promised that if they would obey his voice and keep his covenant, they should be unto Him a kingdom of priests and a holy nation, a peculiar treasure unto Him. And they promised—"All that Jehovah hath spoken will we do and be obedient" (Ex. xix. 6, 8; xxiv. 3, 7). But they quickly committed idolatry, worshipping the calf which Aaron at their instigation had made.

Then all the sons of Levi girded every man his sword upon his thigh and vindicated the honour of the only God; and, consecrating themselves to the Lord, they executed judgment upon son and brother and neighbour. Therefore the Lord took the tribe of Levi, instead of all the firstborn of the children of Israel, to be the priestly tribe (Num. iii. 5-13).

Simeon and Levi were brethren (sons of Leah). They were denounced by their father Jacob on his deathbed on account of their cruel revenge on Shechem and his people—"Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel." This was fulfilled when the Simeonite prince and Cozbi, the Midianite chieftainess, were slain by Phinehas, the Levitical priest. And Jehovah gave him his "covenant of peace . . . the covenant of an everlasting priesthood." Thus the cruel and wrathful spirit of Levi was sanctified and turned into a righteous channel, while Simeon's tribe never recovered from the patriarch's malediction. But the PRIESTLY FAMILY SINNED GRIEVOUSLY.

The sons of Eli made themselves vile, so that men abhorred the offering of Jehovah, and their father restrained them not.

Then a new order of ministry was raised up in the child Samuel, to whom God made known his will, and who became the prophet of Jehovah.

But in Jeremiah's day both prophets and priests had apostatized from God, and were the leaders of the people in sin: "The prophets prophesy falsely; and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end thereof?" (Jer. v. 31).

At length Malachi, the last of the Old Covenant prophets, summed up the apostasy of the priests in these caustic words: "O priests, that despise my name. . . I have no pleasure in you, saith Jehovah of hosts: neither will I accept an offering at your hand" (Mal. i.).

But still the patience of God endured, until the fulness of the time had come, and He sent forth his beloved Son. Then the priesthood filled up the measure of its iniquity by rejecting and crucifying their long-promised Messiah, and imprecating his blood upon themselves and upon their children. And yet again, the chief priests manifested the same enmity to God, when they caused the Apostles of the Lord to be arrested and beaten, and commanded them to speak no more in his Name.

The ruin and degradation of the Fall attained its consummating demonstration in the priesthood. Israel was the nation separated unto God as his peculiar treasure, and the priests were his consecrated ministers. Once a year the high priest entered within the veil, into the very presence of God. Now they had rejected God in the person of his Son. And a human earthly priesthood became henceforth

AN IMPOSSIBLE ANACHRONISM.

Contemporary with Job was "a man of sign" (see Zech. iii. 8, marg.), a typical man, a priest of the Most High God, by name Melchizedek, first being by interpretation King of Righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is King of Peace. The silence of Scripture as to his birth, parentage, and death, is interpreted to suggest that he was without father, without mother, without pedigree, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but abiding a priest continually. Melchizedek was thus the type and pattern of our great High Priest, Jesus the Son of God. His priesthood was based upon, and consecrated by, one offering, in which all typical offerings were fulfilled and exhausted. "He offered up Himself."

The types and shadows of the law
Are all fulfilled and now withdraw.

It is in resurrection that He is declared to be a High Priest after the order of Melchizedek, by Him who said, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee" (i.e., from the dead, cf. Acts xiii. 33). Every condition of the was complied with in Jesus the Son of God, and ratified by God Himself. Therefore Jesus is able "to save to the uttermost" and evermore "all them that come unto God by Him."

Such a High Priest became us, was necessary to us, the people of God: One who is holy, harmless, undefiled, made higher than the heavens, perfected for evermore. And the crowning point of the whole argument of the Epistle to the Hebrews, in relation to priesthood, is that we have such a High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens, a Minister of holy things, and of the true, the real, tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man—the original which Moses saw when he was with Him in the Holy Mount, and which he copied when he made the tabernacle in the wilderness.

All false religions appreciate and appropriate the power of priesthood. They know that while the king has to do with rights, and liberties, and external circumstances, the sphere in which the priest operates is the conscience, the spirit of the man, by which he is related to the powers of the unseen world—to sin and its consequences here and hereafter. Therefore, the priest is more influential, and

MIGHTIER THAN THE KING,

By virtue of their union with their Lord in death and resurrection, the Israel of God are constituted what He proposed that Israel after the flesh should have been, but which they proved themselves unfit for, and incapable of being—a kingdom of priests. Therefore the apostle Peter wrote to those who had obtained like precious faith, through the knowledge of Him who had called them to glory and virtue: "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a purchased people, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ."

Yet is it not a painful fact that the members of Christ largely fail to enter into this privileged position, and to exercise this gracious ministry? And that there is not one of the spiritual blessings wherewith God has blessed us in Christ, which is less dwelt upon by pastors and teachers? Is not the priestcraft exercised by false churches far more frequently denounced, than the heavenly priesthood of the Son of God, and the royal priesthood of all his people on earth, is expounded, affirmed, and enforced?

Indeed, is there not much of priestism in Evangelicalism and in Protestantism? And may not the reason why these are so powerless to overcome Romanism lie in the fact that so much of the very same spirit exists and increases in them? Ecclesiasticism, priestism, sacerdotalism, sacramentarianism, are all, in a greater or less degree, synonyms of Popery; and anyone past middle life, whose eyes have been open on this subject, must have observed the descensus averni, the gradual but certain and accelerating progress in this downgrade slide.

Is there any hope? Yes, in God. Let the backsliding Church of Christ come back to Christ. Not back from Paul to Christ, according to the cant of Modern Thought, for the doctrine of Christ and Paul is one, and the Spirit of Truth speaks in both. But back from the priestly pretension which leavens Protestantism, and even Evangelicalism, whenever and wherever Christians forget that they are the Royal Priesthood, and that Jesus the Son of God is the Great High Priest. M.

Selfishness.

THERE are few things more universally reprobated than selfishness, and yet it is safe to say that the reasons advanced for this condemnation are for the most part unsatisfactory because they fail of being radical. Many who entirely reject the Gospel think to settle all questions by denouncing selfishness as the great sin and lauding of the contrary of selfishness as the great virtue. It is quite true that selfishness is a great sin, but to comprehend this truth fully, two things must be grasped. First, what is selfishness? and then, why is it a great sin? Many who pride themselves that they are unselfish are really consumed with this vice. Meanness (which is usually intended by selfishness) is only one form of this radical sin, and it is quite possible for a person to be generous, in the ordinary acceptation of the word, and yet to be entirely selfish. For selfishness is the sin of making oneself the centre of life. It is the pleasing of oneself, the serving of oneself, contentment with oneself as a simple individual. The forms which this spirit assumes is not the main question.

What makes selfishness the great sin of all—the mother sin—is, that it is a practical ignoring of God as the centre of all life. He is the only One whose blessed self is his own rule, and the rule for all his creatures. In the nature of things this must be so. Selfishness is life and action apart from the true centre, and whether its form is polite or vulgar, mean or generous, internal or external, the sin is the same in every case. It is this, the only true notion of selfishness, that is carefully suppressed amongst moralists who reject the Saviour. It has not received, even at the hands of many Christian teachers, the prominence which it ought to have. Formerly, the Puritans emphasized it to the exclusion of other necessary views of selfishness; now men have swung round to the other extreme. It would be well if all who teach others dwelt much more upon this exposition of selfishness; in doing so, we go straight to the centre of all the world's mischief.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

XII.—The Nearness of the Coming as our Life-Motive (v. 7-20).

THE picture of the Christian Jews given by this Epistle is that of a community depressed in outward circumstances and suffering, probably, actual persecution. The call to patience with which the letter opens is now echoed at its close. But a different word is used, with a distinction in the meaning. Hupomonê, the word used in the first chapter (and recurring in v. 11), is "the temper which does not easily succumb under suffering; Makrothumia (the word used, v. 7, 8, 10) is the self-restraint which does not hastily retaliate a wrong. The one is opposed to cowardice or despondency, the other to wrath or revenge" (Lightfoot). We can mark this difference here in the immediate connection. The thought of the nearness of the Lord's coming is brought to bear as a motive against the spirit of resentment aroused by harsh treatment. "The presence of the Lord" will put all these matters right (7). And that "presence" has already drawn nigh. In the very hope which the coming inspires, is to be found the motive of forbearance.

Of what presence did James here speak, and was he mistaken as to its nearness? It is impossible not to observe how the early Christians looked for an immediate coming of the Lord, and to this the New Testament bears witness. Were they disappointed? We think not, especially as we find that our Lord Himself refers to it in the same language (Matt. xxiv. 34, 35; Mark xiii. 30). The words to Peter can scarcely have any other meaning: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?"

As a matter of fact, the loved disciple tarried through all those last scenes of judgment upon the guilty nation which ushered in the times of the Gentiles. He saw Christ "come" to the city and the people. Some of the very persons whom James addressed, "in consequence (Eusebius) of a Divine admonition," escaped, just before the final siege, across Jordan to Pella, whilst their oppressors perished. The signs which marked that tremendous crisis were so special that it is possible even visible tokens of that presence with his own were not withheld at such a time of need. In any case the coming of the Lord is here presented as the motive for forbearance (7), for steadfastness (8), for self-restraint (9), for faithfulness (10), for hope (11). Can any contrast be greater than that in this one chapter between two classes of readers about the same event? Herein lies for ourselves

THE TOUCHSTONE OF A LIVING FAITH.

It is suggestive to notice the style in which James describes the Coming One. It is as "the Lord." Five times in swift succession, in an Epistle where He has been scarcely named hitherto, emerges this title of the supremacy and significance of Jesus Christ to those who look for Him (v. 7, 8, 10, 11). Even if all the passages do not refer directly or specially to Him, yet the emphasis is then significant, for the same description is given to the Divine Brother which belongs to the Everlasting God Himself: an unconscious witness—the stronger because of its naturalness—in the least dogmatic of the Epistles, to the great dogmatic fact of Christ's Divinity. And this title "Lord" is used perhaps for a special reason; they needed the staying, supporting power of such a relationship at such a time. The late Dr. Dale gives an instance of this in his own life-experience, when writing of an illness in which he lay for some time actually between life and death (Dale's Epistle of James, p. 276).

What is the exact force of the picture of the Husbandman's tarrying (7)? What "fruit" could be looked for as

THE OUTCOME OF LONG-SUFFERING?

It probably refers back to iii. 18, the fruit of righteousness "sown in peace to them that make peace," and that fruitage would begin both for themselves and others at the coming of the Lord.

"Yet in it shall be a remnant." In the case of individuals in the nation, the bitter disappointments in that coming were the beginning of better things. The early and the latter rain were the rain which came just after the sowing, and that which came just before the ripening (Mayor). Is there a prophecy here, conscious or unconscious, of that brighter future which lies even yet before restored Israel when "in the last days" the latter rain shall just precede the "ripening" so long tarried for? At least let us have long patience of prayer for it. Clement mentions a tradition that James was a husbandman, and that to this fact we owe the many allusions to natural life in his epistle. If so, what a pattern for a true Christian "yeomanry" of the sort that England needs to-day, we have in his character. What pictures are these of the lovingkindness of our God; the toil of the Shepherd "until He find it" (Luke xv. 4); the patience of the Husbandman "until it receives."

The heart needs to be "stablished" (8), in the sense of the nearness of Christ. So Paul tells the Philippians to let their "sweet reasonableness be known unto all men, because the Lord is at hand"—lit., "close by" (Phil. iv. 5). It is in the "practice of the presence of God" that true preparedness lies. The first effect of such "stablishment" is an absence of irritation with others. The Judge has already arrived: why call an interim assize? The prophets "who spake in the name of the Lord" are given as an example to these afflicted Christian Jews "of suffering and of patience." That patience is the

SUBLIMEST FACT IN ALL HISTORY.

We do not sufficiently realize to-day the historical and spiritual proof to the truth of Christianity which underlies their witness. The matchless patience of prophecy prepared the way for the coming of the Christ. It created the sense of conviction of sin, the yearning for spiritual ideals, the consciousness of spiritual need in the heart of the chosen nation as in no other. Had nothing corresponded to that preparation, the failure would have been the saddest and most pathetic in all human history. But Christ came, and prophecy was justified.

To the prophets is added the still older example of Job. At first sight, we should not mark him as a striking instance of patience. He complained and was fretful under adversity. But the illustration is a very good instance of the meaning attached by James here and in chap. i. 4 to Hupomonê, or "patience." It is the power of "bearing up under," of holding right on through, of persisting in trusting God in spite of trial, which is its essential feature. As usual, he looks at the "end" (same root as the word so often occurring, "perfect"), "the end of the Lord"—that is, the end which God had in his trials, the final cause which makes them part of a Divine plan for the furtherance and welfare of Job. "So the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning."

PRACTICAL POINTS.

Practical precepts on points of detail bring to a fitting close this most ethical of Scriptures. But the intense interest which attends the study of all the Epistle is nowhere more manifest than here. Round these simple, closing verses some of the greatest controversies of Christian ages have raged, and are not decided even yet.

(a) We are struck with the emphasis of reverence, of simplicity of speech, of meekness, of the value of prayer, of the sense of mutual obligation towards those within and those without the pale of the Church. They are just the which so sadly need to be emphasized to-day.

Mark the spirit of reverence (so sinned against in our own age), which adores the thrice-holy Name and is jealous for its honour. "Before all things," Christians are to be blameless in their allusions to the revealed majesty of the Being of God (12). We are recommended to plain directness of speech (12); to prayer, as the elixir for affliction; to praise, as the consecration of gladness; to the ministry of intercession, with its use of the prayer of faith and the holy anointing, as the cure for ills, spiritual and physical, but always "in the Name" (14) above every name in its healing worth. The great examples of past generations are brought once again before us, to kindle our faith in a God who can still work, if He so please, by means of the miraculous (17). We are reminded that the restoration of one who has gone astray—whether through false doctrine or false living—is the highest task of man. Such work "shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins."

MISAPPLIED SCRIPTURE.

(b) Turning back again to these verses, in nothing are they more remarkable than in their history. The plain, simple, ethical words of James have been distorted into pronouncements upon matters wholly beside his practical aim. Their beauty and simplicity have alike been lost sight of in the smoke of controversial tumult. Nor has one section of the Church alone been guilty on this score. Their history illustrates at least one cause of disunion in the Church of Christ—disproportionate emphasis of isolated Bible texts. By means of these simple verses, the wrongfulness of all oaths, the sacrament of extreme unction (14), the vagaries of "Christian Science" with its exaggerated "faith healing," the duty of auricular confession, the power of priestly absolution, have all alike been defended. The Council of Trent anathematizes all who do not believe in its sacrament of extreme unction, on the authority of this very passage.

The burning ethical force of James' words is in inverse relation to their importance as dogmatic utterances. He speaks as a prophet, not to found systems or create ecclesiastical precedents, but

TO MOULD CONDUCT.

The language must be judged by that of the Sermon on the Mount. It sets before us an ideal, and that ideal is perfect character. The points emphasized all bear upon that. A hasty attempt to realize such injunctions in systems, will often procure, not their success, but their complete failure. In the passage about the anointing of the sick and mutual confession of sin, there is no room for sacerdotalism; but they do exalt a high standard of realized ministerial responsibility. There is no mention whatever here of the peril of death, which is implied in "Extreme unction," and Mayor mentions that "there is no recorded instance during the first eight centuries," so far as his knowledge goes, of the anointing of the sick being deferred, as Rome would have it, to the point of death, except among an obscure Gnostic sect. Again in the case of mutual confession, it was an early custom in monasteries (Mayor), and the Moravian societies used to meet two or three times a week "to confess their faults one to another, and to pray one for another that they might be healed," but even Rome did not suggest the binding character of confession to a priest till A.D. 1215.

For the last time James writes the endearing phrase so often used, "My Brethren." This last expression is the searchlight from the whole Epistle upon our lives. How many souls have been kindled into faith through our faith? How many have been "turned round" through our testimony to behold a living Christ, as Mary "turned" at the sepulchre from her tears to adore Him? Yet this, the soul of man, is the Koh-i-noor of life's jewels of opportunity (Dan. xii. 3).

First seek thy Saviour out, and dwell
Beneath the shadow of his roof,
Till thou have scanned his features well,
And know Him for the Christ by proof.

Then, potent with the spell of Heav'n,
Go, and thine erring brother gain;
Entice him home to be forgiv'n,
Till he, too, see his Saviour plain.

Holiness.—Holiness is the Gospel embodied; the saints exhibit it alive. The Gospel is holy; its Author holy; its maxims and its commands holy; its promises, ordinances, designs, holy; and there is nothing by which it is so much distinguished and glorified as the holiness which pervades it.—Jay.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 29. 1 Corinthians ix.

THE Apostle's claims to an equality with Peter and other of the Lord's Apostles had been violently disputed by his enemies at Corinth because of several personal peculiarities—as that he was unmarried, and worked for his livelihood, instead of receiving the gifts of the churches. In this chapter he strongly asserts his rights in these particulars. He could eat and drink, or take a wife with him on his journeys, or receive gifts for his maintenance; but he had refused to avail himself of his rights, that he might influence a wider circle of men. He wanted his motives to be beyond dispute. He desired to be free from the slightest imputation of self-seeking. He acted as he did, that he might acquire the confidence of those whom no one else could touch. It was a voluntary surrender of his rights, that he might win more men for the Lord.

And in this he was not altogether peculiar. He points to the denials, the hardships of training and discipline, to which those subject themselves who are to take part in the games, even though it was certain that only one of them could receive the prize. No one thought it strange that they should sacrifice so much for such an object; why then should it be deemed strange for him to practise rigorous self-denial? The Apostle tells us he lived in constant dread, lest he should become a castaway. He had no fear of ever being rejected from God's love. He knew well that nought could sever him from it. But he feared lest God, who had used him so wonderfully, should cease to do so, and should lay hands on some other soul, more pliant, more set apart from worldly and selfish ambitions, as his chosen instrument. If Paul was eager to surrender so much to be a soul-winner, are we doing all we might? Or is it possible that, in this sense, some of us are already castaways?

MONDAY, September 30. 1 Corinthians x.

Twice over (6, 11) we learn that the story of the Exodus was intended as a figure for our instruction. It becomes us, therefore, to study it, with the honest intention to obtain all the warning and suggestion it was intended to yield. Its great lesson is human failure—the failure of human resolutions and promises—under the most promising circumstances. Here were people who had been brought out of hardships and perils of the most terrible description, who were under the greatest obligations of gratitude towards God, but who, in the hour of temptation, absolutely failed Him. Let us take heed lest we fail; and, lest we do so, let us clasp to our hearts the precious assurance of verse 13.

What a promise is there! It seems to us sometimes as though the force of our temptations and trials was too terrific to be encountered. We must assuredly fail. No, cries the Apostle, it is not necessary. Before the trial came, God tested it, comparing it with your power of endurance. He was faithful to the nature He has given you, and to your claims on his care, and He only let it come when He had satisfied Himself that you could overcome, by his grace enabling you. Do not look at the temptation, but at Christ. Do not evade the germs of disease, but hide in the antiseptic of the Holy Spirit. Do not fear, but be of good hope—God will make a way of escape.

The Apostle goes on to show the absolute incompatibility of a recognition of idols and of God. One must be surrendered; but when that absolute surrender had been made, it mattered comparatively little, if the converts ate of food which had been previously presented in an idol's shrine, unless such eating had a distinctly pernicious effect on some other soul. Then, and for that soul's sake, though it might be essentially lawful, it was not expedient. Be careful to use your liberty with a wise regard for others who are watching you.

TUESDAY, October 1. 1 Corinthians xi.

There is no completeness for any soul in itself. The man's nature is not complete apart from the woman's, nor the woman's apart from the man's. But God's order must ever be observed. As God is the Head of the Nature of Jesus, in its human aspect, so must Jesus be Head of man, and man of woman. But in each case headship means something more than authority and rule; it means the provision that wisdom and strength must always make for that which is dependent. The covered head of the Eastern woman is the sign of this dependence. But is it not wonderful that the Gospel, which so clearly announces the Divine sequence, has elevated woman to be man's true helpmeet, and has caused her to be honoured and loved as the glory of man? Neither society, nor family life, nor woman, is happy, unless woman attains her true position, by obeying the Divine order, and receiving the crown of her life through suffering and ministry, as the Lord did.

The words of institution for the Lord's Supper were given the Apostle by divine revelation, and he sets himself to show what a sacred position it must always hold in the Christian Church. There was much disorder at Corinth, because the Love-feast, which preceded the Holy Supper, was the scene of riot and conviviality, of ostentation and strife. These things must not be permitted, lest the sacred feast should tend to the deterioration and condemnation of those who participated. For verse 29 see R.V. Thoughtful self-examination, confession, and renewed devotion to Christ are the befitting portal to communion seasons.

WEDNESDAY, October 2. 1 Corinthians xii.

Each individual Christian has the same amount of grace placed to his credit in the heavenly bank, on which he is privileged to draw in every time of need; but there are great diversities in gift. Some have five talents, and others one. A full enumeration of the gifts with which we and our brethren are dowered, is made in verses 8-11, and it is a comfort to know that to every one (7 and 11) something is allotted.

Notice that the allotment is made by the Holy Spirit, acting sovereignly, as He will (11). We are not told when the allotment is made, but probably it is at the moment of our regeneration, and it is important to remember that our gifts will, for the most part, lie along the direction of our natural endowment. Hence we are told in the Parable of the Talents, that to every man was given according to his several ability.

Notice also the reference to the Divine Trinity, "the same Spirit" (4), "the same Lord" (5), "the same God" (6). The Spirit directs, the Saviour is the channel, and God is the fountain of all.

But the use of gifts must never be dictated by personal ambition, or for selfish emolument. Just as every member of the body obeys the command of the head for the succour of every other member, so must every member of the body of Jesus Christ look on any endowment or gift as a sacred trust to be used at the direction of Christ for the rest. All have not the same gifts, therefore there need be no envy or jealousy, and certainly no pride, but loving fellowship and mutual help; and the feeblest have the strongest claim for anything we can do. Art thou feeble? Thou art necessary, and great is the care of the Head for thee.

THURSDAY, October 3. 1 Corinthians xiii.

Here the Apostle burst into a melody of Divine beauty, a psalm caught from heavenly minstrelsy, a snatch of an angel's song. Like Anacreon, he can only sing of love, but he uses love in a sense which Anacreon never knew.

With Paul, love stood for that strong and holy subordination of self for the welfare of others, which begins in the will, and is consummated in the emotions. He knew that it was not natural to the heart of man, but was the essential nature of God, for God is Love. Yes, it is love that we need, and we can only have it, as the bay can have the abundance and music of the ocean, by opening its expanse to it. Open your heart to God's life, which is Love, and at once manifest it in some self-denying act. Do not quail before the awful difficulties of your position, but take in more Love. It would be true to adapt the words of our Lord, and say: "He is come that we may have Love, and that we may have it more abundantly."

Love is better than intellectual gifts (1, 2). It also knows, and knows more deeply.

Love is better than philanthropy (3). It is not what thou givest, but thou that givest, which tells.

Love is the opposite of selfishness (4, 5, 6). It puts a not against what is natural to man.

Love is all-powerful, because God is in her (7).

Love outlives knowledge, prophecy, and the dazzlement of eloquence, and shall abide unto the eternal and unchanging Home of God.

FRIDAY, October 4. 1 Corinthians xiv.

The word "prophesy" is used here, as so largely in the Bible, not in the limited sense of foretelling the future, but in the sense of the pouring forth of heaven-given speech.

There was a strong tendency at Corinth to magnify the use of tongues, that is, of strange forms of passionate speech in an unknown dialect. The Apostle rebukes this, and says that it is far better to be able to speak to the edification of the hearers. Indeed, he goes so far as to direct that he who spoke with a tongue should be still, unless he were sure that some one were present who could explain what he had said. It is interesting to note the statement that the spirits of the prophets are always subject to the prophets, showing how much what appear to be our most spiritual utterances and actions must be tested by our moral nature, and by the sense of propriety and duty. The spirit which moves us must be subjected to thought and prayer, and the consideration of others, before we yield ourselves absolutely to its control.

How beautiful it is to realize that, if there is no one who understands and can interpret ourselves to ourselves, it is always possible to speak to God (28). He at least understands—is greater than our heart, and knows all things.

It is against apostolic precedent for women to take a leading part in the meetings of the Church as such, but this does not interfere with their exercising the functions of evangelists.

SATURDAY, October 5. 1 Corinthians xv.

If chapter xiii. is a Psalm of Love, the present is one of Hope—a hope that cannot be ashamed. This is the most memorable argument for the resurrection of the body in existence, conceived and executed after the most sublime manner. There is a difference, of course, between the belief in the immortality of the soul, which was held by the great thinkers of non-Christian times, and this belief in the resurrection of the body, which is distinctively Christian.

Notice that this doctrine, and indeed the whole structure of our faith, rests on historical facts. In this it differs from other religions, which rest on foundations of philosophy and metaphysics. The resurrection of our Lord is the keystone of the arch. If that cannot be maintained, the whole superstructure crumbles like an edifice of clouds. But it can be maintained. There is more evidence for it than for any fact of even modern history—that is, men may as soon refuse to believe in the Battle of Austerlitz as in the resurrection of our Lord.

What a burst of music is the paragraph from verse 20. The first-fruit sheaf is the forerunner and specimen of all that shall follow; and in Christ the whole Church was presented to God, and as He was, so each of us is to be. Mark the divine order in resurrection in verse 23. Christ; his own; the end, when all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth.

Would you understand the whole mystery? Ah, it is hidden as the growth of the seed. Only know that the resurrection body, whilst retaining its identity with the present, will be as much more glorious as the heavy ear of wheat than the single seed-corn. We shall know each other again, and be known, but what a transfiguration will have passed on the body of our humiliation!

Million New Pledges Crusade.

Rev. Dr. Henry in London.

THE Campaign of the Million New Pledges Crusade, full of promise for the advancement of the cause of Gospel Temperance, gains greatly by the powerful advocacy of the distinguished American preacher and lecturer, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, of the New York Anti-Saloon League.

A long series of important meetings in the chief cities of the United Kingdom has been arranged for Dr. Henry, and it will encourage the staunch bands of temperance men who are responsible for the work of organization at each centre to know that the initial gathering, held at the Baptist Tabernacle (Rev. John Wilson) in Beresford Street, Woolwich, on Saturday evening last, was brimfull of interest and enthusiasm.

The breezy words of reminiscence with which Colonel Philips, who presided, opened the meeting, placed platform and audience upon excellent terms of friendship. Mr. J. T. Sears, who followed, pointed out that the Crusade represents the combined efforts of eighteen religious denominations, resolved, God helping them, to arouse the nation to a deeper realization of the truth that strong drink is the strenuous and bitter foe of all that makes for the permanent well-being of the people. Dr. Henry's meetings do not, of course, constitute the whole of the public efforts, for the programme of the Free Churches includes many notable features, while it is confidently anticipated that the present gatherings will have the effect of arousing Christians throughout the land to a sense both of the need and the opportunity.

Dr. Henry, who was received with the utmost cordiality, said, at the outset of his impressive address, that temperance reform is the greatest reform of the century. By common consent the drink traffic is the worst foe of the individual, the family, the Church, and the State. It, therefore, stands foremost among the problems we are called upon to solve. Whatever may be the measure of praise that we accord to the devoted efforts of bygone reformers, the fact remains that the public-house is a greater menace to society than ever.

THE CHURCH AND THE DRAMSHOP.

Christian churches on the one hand, and public-houses on the other, are the two outstanding institutions of our time. Christianity brightens and blesses; the public-house curses and destroys. Both cannot be right, neither can both permanently survive. If organized Christianity is to spread peace and joy among the peoples of the earth, then the public-house must go. If the Sabbath, the Christian family, and, indeed, Christian civilization are to be preserved, if the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, then this empire of darkness and disease, of degradation and death, represented by the public-house, must be swept away. The wisest men, both in the ministry and the pew, see that this is the great conflict of the immediate future, and ask which of the two forces shall control the hearts and homes of the people? There is but one hope to be entertained in such a matter, the hope arising from the truth that God is against the dramshop.

CO-OPERATION, OR UNCONCERN?

Proceeding, Dr. Henry asked: Has not the time come when every Sunday-school, every Bible-class, every Christian Endeavour Society, should glow with enthusiasm for the suppression of this gigantic evil? Has not the time come when Christian people should regard this warfare against the trade in alcoholic liquor as an integral part of their duty, and when every servant of God should not only pray for its overthrow, but seek to answer his own prayers by rational, whole-hearted, co-operative effort? Moreover, only the Christian Churches can solve the difficulty. If church members are unconcerned, the outside world will be unmoved; but if, on the other hand, the Churches are possessed by enthusiasm, the outsiders will be aroused to know and understand that "for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." Christianity has the means and the men, and irrespective of denomination all its representatives must unite together and say: "The public house must go."

A PLEA FOR UNITY.

Too much time has been spent in controversy and cross-firing. We have almost destroyed one another because we have not seen eye to eye with regard to minor subjects, while the enemy, by subtle and unceasing effort, has consolidated his forces. Unity, then, is the primary condition of success; differences must be healed in the presence of the common foe, and supporters of temperance principles must stand together for their own protection, and in the cause of progress. Yes, when all the foes of the public-house hold together through summer heat and winter cold, the day of triumph will surely come.

PARLIAMENT AND THE PUBLICAN.

Dr. Henry next made a fervent appeal for the exclusion from the Legislature of all "candidates of the drink-shop." In order to achieve this, and indeed, all other desirable ends in connection with the demolition of the traffic, it is necessary—(1) To build up public sentiment; "to cast a ray of electric light into a rat-hole is to destroy that place for rat-hole purposes." (2) To enforce all laws already upon the statute-book for the repression and suppression of the trade. (3) To plan for better legislation, remembering that "if we are to get better legislation, we must have better legislators." We shall never succeed in getting satisfactory temperance laws until temperance men make those laws. (4) To create a strong inter-denominational treasury out of which the work may be maintained and pushed forward. The struggle will never be efficiently carried on until Christians give as cheerfully to this as to any other department of Christian work.

A TERRIBLE ILLUSTRATION.

While Dr. Henry was speaking, news was received that at a drink shop opposite the chapel, while the meeting was in progress, a man had murdered his wife by shooting her with a rifle. Dr. Henry, commenting upon the terrible occurrence, used it to show that in such a crime it is impossible to acquit of some measure of moral responsibility, either those who help to maintain the deadly traffic, those who, directly or indirectly, participate in its profits, or those who fail in their duty to labour for its entire suppression.

At the close of Dr. Henry's address, the Fisk Jubilee Singers, who had, at various stages of the meeting, given some of their pathetic hymns with all that grace and sympathy which has made their name famous, again sang, and then this memorable gathering was closed with prayer. It should be mentioned that the Jubilee Singers will take part in all the meetings to be addressed by Dr. Henry.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle was crowded in every part on Lord's Day evening, when Dr. Henry preached the inaugural sermon of the campaign. From commencement to close the service was deeply impressive, the true note being struck by Pastor Thos. Spurgeon in his opening prayer, when he petitioned that the hand of God might be upon the campaign, and the efforts which will be put forth for the freeing of the masses who are now enslaved by drunkenness.

A solemn hush fell upon the gathering as the Fisk Jubilee Singers rendered their sacred selections with telling effect, preparing all hearts for Dr. Henry's stirring and powerful sermon.

Taking his text from Gen. xiii. 12—"Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom"—the speaker remarked that some of the characters in the Bible are unique in the respect that they never die. Their representatives are to be found in every land throughout the world. Abraham's example is being emulated by men and women throughout the length and breadth of the earth, while it is equally true that men and women may be found everywhere pitching their tents towards Sodom. The two laws of life are ascent and descent. The discovery of the law of gravitation marked an epoch in the intellectual life and progress of the world; but the apprehension of the law of spiritual affinity, or moral gravitation, has greater consequences, for it holds within its mighty grasp the destinies of the children of men, fraught with incomparable blessing or immeasurable woe. Dr. Henry went on to speak with deep concern of the nations that have committed moral suicide by pitching their tents towards Sodom rather than towards the hills of God, and of the multitudes who are making their way from light to darkness, from hope to despair, and from earth to hell. In considering what are the signs which reveal to us whether we are pitching our tents towards Sodom or the heavenly home, the speaker pointed out that one unmistakable indication is the decrease of moral vision, with failure to discriminate between right and wrong. A want of spiritual aspiration is another sign that a man is pitching his tent towards Sodom. It is the man who climbs that sees. When the life is what Christ would have it be, there will be a hunger and thirsting for Him. Another infallible test is found in the soul's insensibility to the presence and power of sin; while another is a growing impotency of the will under the conflict of temptation.

THE POWER TO SAY "NO."

The man who has lost the power to say "no" in the day of temptation, and has lost the power to say "yes" to God's demands for service, may know that he is pitching his tent towards Sodom. Of the 60,000 confirmed drunkards in London, 10,000 of whom are under twenty years of age, not one had become the victim of strong drink, or had lost the power of standing against temptation, as the result of a single choice, but as the result of tampering with the things of the world.

Referring to the Crusade, Dr. Henry said he had purposely touched but little on the subject of temperance, although the lessons he had drawn must have a personal application to many in that respect. Some in that service might separate themselves from the drinking habit as a first step towards their moral reformation. While believing that total abstinence ought not to be regarded as a condition for work on behalf of temperance reform, yet upon total abstainers will fall the burden and heat of the day. If a million total abstinence pledges could be secured, the grasp of the drink traffic upon the hearts and lives of the people of the United Kingdom would be broken, and the Churches would be correspondingly helped. In conclusion, Dr. Henry said he agreed with the great Methodist preacher who declared that if Christian people would devote the next two years to the repression and suppression of the drink traffic, they would in the third year gain more sanctified lives, enlarged philanthropies, and missionary efforts, than they would in twenty-five years if they continued as in the past. God is calling his people to make a stand against strong drink—the worst foe of the family, the faith, and the flag.

At the close of the service a number of the congregation availed themselves of the opportunity for taking the total abstinence pledge.

BATTERSEA TOWN HALL.

The Crusade is bound to become popular in Battersea as the outcome of the magnificent meeting held in the Town Hall on Monday evening last. The large building was crowded, while some hundreds of people were unable to obtain admission.

Mr. J. T. Sears, J.P., who presided, spoke vigorously of the importance of the campaign in purifying the public life of the country, and referred to the stimulus which the crusade has already given to the temperance cause.

In an outspoken and eloquent address, Dr. Henry carried the judgment and aroused the enthusiasm of his audience. His wealth of anecdote and illustration served him in good stead, while his pathetic and telling appeals for a great national effort against the abominable traffic in strong drink called forth the heartiest expressions of approbation.

RECEPTION AT EXETER HALL.

As a public token of the esteem in which Dr. Henry is held, and as a recognition of the high importance of the campaign upon which he has entered, a reception was given on Tuesday evening last in the lower Exeter Hall, at which some hundreds of prominent Christian workers cordially welcomed our American visitor to this country, and gave him a hearty God-speed.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers rendered a selection of hymns with exquisite taste, after which Rev. F. B. Meyer presided over an informal but delightful gathering. He was supported by Pastor T. Spurgeon, Alderman White, M.P., Mr. Robert Scott, Mr. B. Broomhall, and many other friends. After Rev. H. B. Macartney had led in prayer, the chairman in the course of a telling speech said that Parliament has failed to deal with the drink evil, but the Churches are awaking to the need, and are resolved, trusting in Almighty guidance, to cope with the blighting traffic. He bade Dr. Henry "thrice welcome."

Other speakers included Mr. James T. Sears, J.P., and Mr. John Hilton. Dr. Henry responded in a moving address. A public meeting in the large hall followed, Mr. Alderman White presiding.

Being otherwise free on the 8th, Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers hope to attend the reception to be given to the Baptist Union by Mr. Robert Lockhart.

This series is to be followed by similar demonstrations at Sheffield, Leeds, Bradford, Huddersfield, Nottingham, Leicester, Norwich, Cambridge, Manchester, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Brighton, &c,

Many applications are being received for the reserved seat tickets, and friends are urged to secure the numbers they require without delay, in order to facilitate the making of the necessary arrangements.

Dundee Christian Conference.

THIS time-honoured gathering of Christians for mutual fellowship took place for the thirty-fifth time in Dundee last week. Being the first Conference in the new century, and following closely on the union so happily consummated between the Free and United Presbyterian Churches last year, the committee were led to select as a fitting theme the general subject of "Christian Union." Rev. John Macpherson, one of the veteran promoters of the Conference, and author of the lives of Duncan Matheson, Robert Annan, Henry Moorhouse, &c., presided at the opening meeting on Tuesday.

UNION WITH CHRIST.

The first address was delivered by Rev. George Wilson (Edinburgh), who spoke on "Union with Christ: how attained." He pointed out that no man participates by nature in this union. Sin has effected such a separation between God and the human soul that the only adequate description of that separation is the symbol of death. Further, no one glides into this union by natural development. The gliding life is always a life on the down grade. The self-made man is spiritually the self-ruined man. True union only takes place by a definite instatement of Divine grace. Then it is important to distinguish between union with Christ as the Head of the covenant, and union with Him as the Head of spiritual vitality. By the one we obtain forgiveness and reconciliation; by the other we receive strength for Divine service. We enter this union by faith, and the outcome is a Divine indwelling. God's purpose in thus uniting us to his Son is that we may be separated from sin, and conformed to his own image.

Rev. Dr. Black (Inverness) followed, speaking on "Union with Christ; how maintained." Dealing with the analogy of the vine, as explained in John xv., he pointed out that the branch is fruitful only in so far as it remains in union with the tree. But the fruit of the union is seen in the beautiful luscious bunches of grapes so attractive to the eye and pleasing to the taste. In like manner God wants us all to be winsome Christians, and this is possible only through close fellowship with Jesus.

THE LORD'S DAY.

In the afternoon an animated discussion took place on, "How may Christian people best use the Lord's Day?" Rev. Dr. C. M. Grant, who presided, read testimonies by Mr. Gladstone, Lord Beaconsfield, and others, on the inestimable value of the Day of Rest. Rev. Dr. Black described the Sabbath as the day for Divine worship, work among the young, and home missionary effort. Lord Kinnaird said they were all agreed as to the evil of Sunday amusements; but many other questions could only be left to the individual conscience. Rev. J. Bisset pointed out some of the common forms of Sabbath desecration, such as shopping, sailing, and cycling. He stated that when in Frazerburgh lately he noticed the gratifying fact that of the 700 boats comprising the fishing fleet there, every one was in port by Saturday evening. But it was a sad fact that many trawling companies kept their men and boats at sea on the Lord's Day.

On Wednesday Mr. D. M. Watson presided, and introduced as the subject of conference for the day "The Union of Christians with one another." He pointed out the tendency to forget or ignore the unity of the whole Church of Christ. Times of trial and difficulty were therefore useful in developing the common sympathies of the whole household of faith.

UNION IN FELLOWSHIP.

Rev. Robert Clark (Glasgow) gave the first address, speaking on "Union in Fellowship." He said that, to begin with, the Church of Christ must be regarded as an indestructible unity. There is only one Christian body in the world, and it is composed of all believers. No denominational differences, or doctrinal distinctions, or social status, interfere with this central union. Then it is not merely external. It is not so much ecclesiastical as organic. As one life pervades our physical frame so the body of Christ is permeated with his own life. Again, this union is not uniformity. It is rather unity in variety.

The results of this union are manifold. Chemical unions are always accompanied by an evolution of heat. So when the Lord's children are united for a specific purpose, a Divine heat is engendered, under the influence of which love grows, sympathy is deepened, and a power is imparted which brings untold blessing to the world.

The address which followed was delivered by Rev. A. S. Inch (Dumbarton). Speaking on "Union in Service," he said that one of the supreme needs of our time is a return to the altruism of the New Testament, which means a living for one another. But the converse of this is all too common. Many have a habit of saying things in a manner which gives the maximum of pain to the person addressed, and he minimum of pain to the speaker. Centoriousness passes as a virtue with some who smagine themselves models of propriety.

WINNING THE YOUNG.

The afternoon session was devoted to the subject of "How best to win and keep the young for Christ." Mr. Watson, who again presided, deprecated the attempt to mould the minds of young persons after any one pattern. They are constantly receiving new ideas, and older people become stumbling blocks in their way when they get out of sympathy with the buoyancy and restlessness of youth.

Mr. J. H. Smith counselled parents to speak early about spiritual things to their children, to pray earnestly and believingly for them, and especially not to relegate their own duties to the Sabbath-school teacher. Mr. Robert Anderson suggested the desirability of daily Bible lessons for the young, and great care about their companionships.

Mr. A. H. Stephen referred to the number of young persons who were converted in Dundee under the ministry of the sainted McCheyne, some of them still alive and following the Lord.

UNION IN MISSIONARY EFFORT.

On Thursday, a practical turn was given to the concluding proceedings, when the question was faced of "Union in Missionary Effort."

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, pleaded for a deeper interest in missionary enterprise, and vigorously denounced the selfishness that spent thousands of pounds on expensive churches and elaborate musical services, while their contributions to missions were of the most meagre description.

Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie) took up the first branch of the subject, viz., "Union in Service at home." He said that service for Christ is the necessary outcome of union with Christ. No one can prove that he is really united to Jesus unless he shares in some measure his yearning for souls. This and not mere humanitarianism is at the root of all enduring work, which is more needful now than ever, for it is harder than before. How is this union to be attained? Not by airing fine sentiments, and using great swelling phrases, not even by belittling our denominational ties, for the smallest denomination has put something into our national life. A better method is for each to do his part, and at the same time rejoice that others are doing theirs. Then let us also give ourselves up to the fusing power of the indwelling Spirit, through whom alone our oneness can make for the salvation of others.

Principal Mackichan (Bombay) spoke on the second topic, "Union in service abroad." He said that recently Indian missionaries had made great advances in practical union. All branches of the Christian church are now represented in our Conferences. An inter-denominational service is held every Sabbath in Bombay. Scholars of every church are co-operating in the work of Bible translation. The native churches, though necessarily denominational at present, will one day assume their own form. Meanwhile the duty of the churches lies not in seeking their own aggrandisement abroad, but in leading the natives to Jesus and allowing them to take their impress from God's dealings. In the afternoon, two missionary addresses were given by Principal Mackichan and Rev. Samuel Couling.

THE LATE

Rev. Dr. John Gritton.

AMONG well-known figures which have within a few weeks been removed by death from the ranks of Christian workers, there falls to be numbered Rev. Dr. John Gritton. Having reached nearly the close of his seventy-second year, he had experienced much of the goodness of the Lord. To few is it given to look back on a life of such varied usefulness in active Christian effort, bearing "a holy, happy testimony to the God of all grace, who so lovingly saves and keeps his people, even to the end of life's journey."

Born at Richmond, in Surrey, in 1829, he gave early evidence of a deep seriousness of disposition. Shortly before his death he recalled, in conversation with a friend with whom he was walking, that his father was a great admirer of the theatre, and at least on one occasion insisted on John accompanying him. The late Canon Hoare was then in Richmond, and an outspoken critic of the stage. The proprietors of the local playhouse became so exasperated that, in revenge, they searched till they found a man who closely resembled Mr. Hoare, clothed him in clerical dress, and introduced him into a play then running. The effect was, however, the opposite of what had been hoped for. Mr. Hoare had earned for himself a large place in the respect and affections of the people of the town. Instead of exciting ridicule and laughter, the advent of this travesty on an honest and faithful man only called forth a storm of indignation; and the whole piece was hissed off the stage. The house was closed soon after for a considerable time, and the effect of the incident on Mr. Gritton was that he made up his mind never again to enter such a place of amusement.

He had come to man's estate before his conversion took place. When walking with a friend in the country, both narrowly escaped being crushed by the fall of a great tree. A clergyman who had been following them improved the occasion to such purpose that John Gritton's heart was given to the Lord, and after careful consideration he determined to devote his life to the spread of the Gospel in the foreign missionary field. Entering the Islington College of the Church Missionary Society in 1852, he was accepted as a missionary in 1854, a connection which subsisted for twelve years.

His principal field of labour was India; but, in addition to good work done at Madras, Tinnevelly, Calcutta, and other centres there, he also rendered valuable service in Ceylon and South Africa. His ordination as a deacon took place in 1855, and that as priest in 1857. His linguistic abilities opened up for him a field of special usefulness in the work of Bible translation and revision; and this, as well as his more general theological attainments, was recognised by the late Archbishop Tait in 1881, by the bestowal of the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Settling in England in 1866, Mr. Gritton soon became known as a leader among those who walked in "the old paths." For twenty-five years he was secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, and was ever on the alert, by voice and pen, to point out the duty and privilege attaching to the observance of the Day of days. While holding the living of Christ Church, Sidcup, from 1882 to 1889 he was deeply exercised over the Ritualistic movement in the Church of England. His activity in opposition to the Romanizing party culminated in 1892, when he felt conscientiously compelled to leave the Church, and associated himself with the late Rev. J. A. Leicester, the late Mr. Louis Liesching, Rev. Charles Stirling, and Rev. Nicholas R. Toke in the preparation of a "Protestant Prayer-book." Though not spared to witness the wide adoption of this book, he felt assured that so much prayerful labour could not be altogether in vain, and anticipated that in the event of the disruption of the Establishment, many Christian people would be led to adopt the thoroughly Protestant Evangelical Liturgy thus provided for their use.

Especially in the later years of his life, Dr. Gritton became widely known as a wise counsellor in spiritual matters, and in the conduct of aggressive work, such as that of the Christian Community. Many societies and organizations claimed a share of his active attention, while his prayerful sympathy knew no limitations. He was eminently a preacher of Protestant truth, and, amid many engagements and occupations, he felt, with the Apostle, that woe would be unto him if he preached not the Gospel. Several times every week he was to be found telling out the glad tidings of salvation.

A pastorate of a number of years at Trinity Chapel, Hackney, endeared Dr. Gritton to many in the district; and after his death a warm testimony was sent to us from the local Y.M.C.A. to the great influence exercised over the members by his noble character and splendid example.

In addition to some hundreds of pamphlets, tracts, and magazine articles, Dr. Gritton was the author of "Missionary Monograms," "The Word and the Way," "Concordance of the Revised Tamil New Testament," "The Day of Joy," and other works which have found many readers and admirers.

Seized with his last illness on July 2, he himself described his suffering during the next four days as being greater than he had supposed the human frame could sustain; and the medical attendants soon afterwards pronounced the case to be one of malignant cancer, with no hope of recovery. His suffering to the end was borne without a murmur. He found much comfort and solace in singing, along with his Christian nurse, some of the hymns with which his mind was stored. His mind was calm, and his faith unwavering. The peace of God ruled in his heart. He was constantly expecting to be soon "on the other side." When it was observed, "How delightful for you and me to know that we have absolutely nothing to do for our own salvation—that it has all been done for us—and that we have simply to rest upon the finished work of Christ," he remarked, "Yes; not one tassel of the robe is left for us to finish."

One month after the first attack, on August 1, his friends were gathered at his bedside, when he offered up a characteristic prayer in French, embracing the interests of his friends at home and abroad, the mission-fields of India and of South Africa (with which he was also familiar), and then he asked those about him to pronounce the benediction. This was done, and after a brief interval the spirit took flight, and has gone to be "for ever with the Lord."

Forward Movement in South Africa.

A STATEMENT of religious work to be done in South Africa has generally been confined to the missionary sphere among the natives in their kraals and villages. This is not the only, nor at the present time the most important, aspect of Africa's need. The natives are attracted by the town life, and by the opportunities for earning money on the mines; so that hundreds of thousands, representing more than thirty tribes, can easily be reached by missionaries visiting the locations and compounds dotted along the mining areas or surrounding the towns.

As many of these natives return to their villages subsequently, they might become in turn missionaries to others. The commercial development has also attracted large gatherings of other nationalities who may as easily be reached, and whose presence not only affords an unparalleled scope for work, but constitutes a grave danger to the future religious life of the colony.

There are 13,000 Malays in Cape Town, of slave origin and of Mohammedan faith. Many amongst them are exceedingly wealthy, and own much property. As a people, they are prolific, and under the leadership of their priests are united in religious movements. Should they become aggressive in religion, the result for South Africa would be serious.

"The Coolies," as a term, is a common designation for emigrants from India. Already they outnumber the Europeans in Natal, and form a large percentage of the population of the Cape and Transvaal Colonies. In religion, they are Brahmins or Buddhists, but very little has been done to support the devotees in their faith; and away from their established forms of religion and the barriers of caste, they may be more easily evangelized. There are among them some converts, the result of missionary work in India.

The Chinese also are found among the steady, persevering business section. Discarding alike their customs and their religion, they seek the education of the schools, learn the English language, and are ready for the Gospel of Christ.

The Cape coloured people number 40,000 in the Cape Peninsula alone. They are the descendants of the first settlers and the natives, and are as distinct a people as the Kaffirs. Christian work among them has always resulted in many conversions, and the people there are anxiously waiting for more Christian workers.

To meet these needs, and also to provide for the spiritual welfare of the thousands of young people, mainly British, who will flock to South Africa when the work on the mines is resumed, a Forward Movement has been decided upon by the South African Baptist Union; and, as they will need considerable financial help, "The Baptist South African Colonial and Missionary Aid Society" has been founded to represent the work in this country. Rev. J. R. Wood, of Upper Holloway, is chairman of the Board of Directors, which includes also Revs. Dr. Maclaren, F. B. Meyer, B.A., and many other well-known ministers. The hon. sec. (Mr. R. H. Henson) may be addressed at 19, Furnival Street, E.C.; or those wishing to help may send their communications to our care.

A Wise Word. — It seems to me when Christians fall out 'tis over what they pray for. When they praise God they forget differences. — Billy Bray.

An Exemplary Record.

THE LATE REV. T. RICHARDSON, STEPNEY.

THE late vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney, was one of the best known Evangelical workers in the East End of London, and his name was familiar throughout the world as the founder and conductor of the Bible and Prayer Union, the parent of many similar organizations. No one could talk with him without being impressed with his tremendous earnestness and his business aptitude. Indeed, he owed to his early training in a large City firm those habits of regularity and scrupulous regard for detail in all his transactions that were largely accountable for his peculiar success.

THOMAS RICHARDSON approached his daily duties from a very practical standpoint, never trading upon the popularity of the East End with those who, from time to time, take up "slumming" as a kind of recreative martyrdom. People who came to him in search of piteous "cases" were often met with some unexpected facts. For example, standing upon his own pleasant piece of green sward, within the shadow of the famous red church of the Mile End Road, and also of the People's Palace (his next-door neighbour), the vicar was wont, at one time, to declare that scarcely a house in his parish was without its garden too; and he was quick to resent the commonly-accepted idea that the great East End was nothing but a vast backwater in which all the flotsam and jetsam of life—the idle, the thriftless, the criminal, and the weak—were brought together in helpless confusion.

It was the reasonable pride of Mr. Richardson to show that, poor as his congregation were, they were busy workers, representing a wide range of small trades, each trade subdivided into departments, and carried on by men, women, and children whose occupation could never be guessed by the wealthy West. No parish was ever more systematically visited, and no family could enter it without being brought to the personal knowledge of the parson; and whenever a newspaper "sensation" was thoughtlessly created, he was at once in the position to produce his chronicles to meet any charge of neglect, for every possible information was tabulated and pigeon-holed at the vicarage.

His great fear was that poor people should be pauperized, and he would arrange that applicants for relief should, if possible, in some way earn it; but when aid was needed it was never refused, though, as frequently would be the case, funds were low. It was then that he appealed, and never in vain, to his personal friends who lived outside his parish, and were ever ready to make him their almoner. To-day, it might be that Surgical Aid Society letters were wanted, or it might happen that the timely gift of a wig was the means of placing a bald-headed man in work. Or perhaps a situation for a promising Sunday-school scholar was sought; or a repentant misdemeanant had to be given a fresh start; or some sick woman would be put into a hospital. St. Benet's parish needs in this way at least £1,000 a year from outside sources.

There was never an end to the stream of applicants, and the greatest discretion was necessary in dealing with them, so that good and not harm might result from almsgiving. Yet the vicar was never known to pass a blind man in the street without dropping a penny into his hand, and he made it a rule to pay the fare of a polite lad who resigned his seat in a tramcar in favour of a lady. It was his way of teaching courtesy.

In his earlier experience before, thirty years since, he was nominated by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury as the first vicar of St. Benet's, Mr. Richardson had seen much of the seamy side of London life, first in the poorest part of Lambeth in the neighbourhood of the New Cut, where he had filled the curacy of St. Andrew's; and, subsequently, in the congested parish of St. George's-in-the-East, with the notorious Ratcliff Highway—then a string of dancing saloons—in his immediate vicinity.

In both districts, as it happened, he met the cholera face to face, three times suffering personally from attacks in Lambeth in 1856, where he had set up his Ragged Church, as it was called, in the heart of the slums that were visited so grievously by the dreaded scourge. There he distributed medicine from a recipe which was given him by an old school-fellow, then a student at "Bart's," and afterwards known to the world as Sir William Turner. Every afflicted home was open to him who carried this medicine. Again, in 1866, when he was incumbent of St. Matthew's, Pell Street, St. George's-in-the-East, whither he had been sent by Dr. Tait in 1859, Mr. Richardson encountered a still more alarming outbreak of Asiatic cholera. The pinch of famine was also felt. A large emigration work was carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Richardson.

Mr. Richardson's connection with the City had not ceased. For five years in the "fifties" he discharged the duties of chaplain to the large firm of Messrs. Copestake, Moore, Crampton, and Co., Bow Churchyard, and throughout the remainder of Mr. George Moore's life he was closely associated with that noble philanthropist. After St. Andrew's, Lambeth, Mr. Richardson had gone to St. Paul's, Southwark, where he started open-air services, the success of which led to a bolder venture, when in 1858 he was placed in sole charge of St. Olave's, Old Jewry, Cheapside. It was during his twelve months' stay there, before migrating to St. George's-in-the-East, that he became the Royal Exchange preacher, his pulpit on Sunday evening from half-past five for three-quarters of an hour having been, week after week, the steps of the great building—on week-days the money market of the world—the Exchange itself. In after years his constant attendance at the meetings of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, and of the Church Missionary Society, led him continually Citywards, and his touch with City men was of unfailing benefit to his parishes. Nor should it be forgotten that his home for the last thirty years—and the church he saw erected and consecrated in 1872 in a style which was particularly suitable to the locality—owed very much to the original St. Benet's which for years stood in the City of London.

Always a steadfast temperance worker, known personally to George Livesey, one of the fathers of teetotalism in his native county—Lancashire—Mr. Richardson acted as one of the two first honorary secretaries of the Church of England Temperance Society. His methods of bringing home the advantages of total abstinence were sometimes original; as, for instance, when he placed before a Ratcliff Highway audience a pile of sides of bacon, cheeses, and food of a substantial character, bought with the proceeds of savings by a man foregoing his beer during the space of a twelve-month. It was an effective object-lesson.

But it can scarcely be questioned that the great work of Mr. Richardson's life was done in his leisure hours—the organization of the Union which has enrolled upwards of 350,000 members for the reading of the Bible daily, and for prayer regularly. It had its origin in the repeated requests from the pulpit of St. Benet's, that every member of the congregation should read the whole Word of God consecutively, chapter by chapter. In December, 1875, after evening communion, a lady mentioned to a friend her difficulty in complying, and it was suggested that they should, as a mutual help, read in union, taking one chapter daily, commencing with the Epistle to the Romans. Mr. Richardson himself made the trio. A Prayer Union already existed, and at the next annual meeting it was resolved to enlarge its scope by the addition of the united reading of a chapter of Scripture, starting with Genesis i. Thus on January 10, 1876, the Bible and Prayer Union took form, with fifty members, in the hope that a thousand might soon be enrolled.

By the time the second consecutive reading of the Bible was undertaken—the first reading had consumed three years and three months—the roll membership had grown to 71,826. Since then the progress, in spite of death and withdrawals, has been continuous, though, of course, the organisation of other unions has had some effect upon expansion. Local branches in different countries, with the membership card printed in their respective languages, have for long been in existence. Numbers of foreigners have joined from time to time. Everywhere in English-speaking countries the Bible and Prayer Union runs, and its roll includes not only every section of the English Protestant Church, but members of the Armenian, Greek, Moravian, Nestorian, and Roman Catholic Churches, with not a few Jews. All the Pitcairn Islanders are enrolled, and missionaries to all parts of the world have carried the Union with them.

At home the Bible and Prayer Union enters into every class of society, and if the neat registers be examined there will be found entries of names elsewhere also to be found in Debrett, Burke's Landed Gentry, the Clergy Lists, Denominational Records, College Rolls, and professional reference books, whilst a veritable directory of merchants, manufacturers, and tradesmen might be compiled from the St. Benet's records. There, too, may be discovered the names of artisans, mechanics, soldiers and sailors, and even of workhouse inmates.

In connection with the Union, the founder issued his "Monthly Notes," giving suggestions and helps on the portions being read; and so methodical were his habits that his death will not involve any break in the continuity of the series, as the essential portions of the work were kept prepared by him for months in advance. His widow, Mrs. Richardson, herself an active worker in the East End for forty years, will, moreover, by the terms of his last will and testament, continue the great work upon the same unique principles as heretofore, with the assistance of her late husband's devoted band of helpers.

The Tyndal Bible School.

IN January a notice of the commencement of the Tyndal Bible School appeared in The Christian. May I now report progress?

The school is designed to promote and encourage the study of the Word of God by old and young of all classes, and it was commenced with the opening century in the hope that it might in some small degree help to make this new epoch, what all lovers of the Scriptures would wish it to be, an era of return to the grand verities of the Word of God as the source of all truth and of all wisdom.

The work of the school is carried on by postal correspondence, a Bible exercise being sent weekly to each member, the answers to which are afterwards corrected and returned.

The results so far have been most encouraging, for the simple Bible exercises, intended chiefly for students unversed in the Scriptures, have been welcomed also by experienced Christians, many of whom have warmly testified to the help they have received from them in the study of the Word.

One young man writes: "The Word seems to possess a value and a charm it never had before, and which moreover could never have been attained by the reading of indiscriminate passages as was my wont. In this short term of twelve weeks I have learnt more about the Bible, Christ, and the way of holiness than in a year of reading books."

Another member, a Christian worker, writes: "The papers are much more useful to me than the books which are published as helps for teachers and busy workers, as I am much more interested in the subject dealt with through having to find it out for myself, than it otherwise is, when it is all laid before me in print."

The number of students has steadily increased, and there are now members in many parts of England, in Scotland, Ireland, the Channel Islands, and on the Continent, while fresh applications for membership are received almost daily.

The autumn term commenced on the 21st inst. The exercises are now issued in French as well as English. The subscription is 2s. per term, but special arrangements are made for large Bible-classes. I shall be happy to send all particulars to any address on receipt of a halfpenny stamp. (Miss) S. M. Mason.

Advantage of Afflictions.—Many thousand recovered sinners may cry, "O healthful sickness! O comfortable sorrows! O gainful losses! O enriching poverty! O blessed day that ever I was afflicted!" Not only the green pastures and still waters, but the rod and staff, they comfort us. Though the Word and Spirit do the main work, yet suffering so unbolts the door of the heart, that the Word hath easier entrance.—Baxter.

The Prosecution of Dr. Long.

OUR readers are acquainted with the main facts of the case brought against Dr. Long, medical missionary in Limerick, and of the Irish Church Missions. The proceedings arose at the instance of the Limerick Corporation, which obtained a summons against the doctor for wilful obstruction of the highway on August 10. On that date Dr. Long had asserted his right to the use of a hackney-car, and had retained his seat on the vehicle till the arrival of the car inspector on the refusal of the driver to serve him by taking him to his destination, or to the Town Hall, as required by the city bye-laws to lodge a complaint with the Inspector.

The summons was heard at Limerick Petty Sessions on the 20th inst., and Dr. Long was represented by Mr. James Campbell, K.C., who, at the outset, pointed out the incongruity of the Chairman (Mr. Hall) adjudicating on the case, inasmuch as he had written a letter to the Limerick Press asserting that Dr. Long had been guilty of a breach of the Act of Parliament on the occasion now under review, and stating that if the police had brought Dr. Long before him he would have dealt with him summarily. Mr. Campbell urged that "on the merest grounds of public decency, to say nothing of legality," it was impossible for Mr. Hall to take part in the investigation of the case. The Chairman, however, insisted on doing so, and later in the case allowed the summons to be amended on the application of the prosecution, and against the protest of Dr. Long's counsel.

Mr. Campbell, in the course of his cross-examination, brought out the fact that the Corporation had completely failed to enforce their own bye-laws, which were admittedly broken by the car-drivers, and had, as an afterthought, instituted the action against Dr. Long. Counsel went on to say, in his speech for the defence:—

He certainly did never meet a more grotesque farce than the one they were taking part in that day. For doing what he had a right to do, the Corporation had, without consistency, without fair play, and without common decency, impleaded Dr. Long on a criminal charge.

The magistrates, after an absence of slightly over half an hour, decided to dismiss the charge. Dr. Long is to be sincerely congratulated on the result. The issue leaves the Corporation in an unenviable position, and serves to bring out into strong relief the injustice of their action in refusing to enforce their own bye-laws against the car drivers.

A letter from the clerical secretary of the Irish Church Missions to The Times and Irish papers clearly shows that the onus of enforcing the bye-laws rests with the corporation, who are pledged by their own bye-laws to take "the most prompt action" to prosecute any violation thereof. Dr. Long has been well advised to refrain from instituting proceedings against the drivers. He has refused to relieve the Corporation of their responsibility in this respect, and they now stand convicted of the double injustice of refusing to secure his rights as a citizen in accordance with their own regulations, and of bringing a false charge against him.

In dismissing the summons, the Bench refused costs, and thus left Dr. Long to bear the expense of defending himself against what can only be regarded as a malicious prosecution. We doubt not that many of our readers will be ready to share this burden, and we are informed that the secretaries of the Irish Church Missions, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C., are prepared to receive any contributions which may be made for the purpose of Dr. Long's defence, the expenses of which are considerable, and should not be allowed to fall either on the doctor or on the Society.

Redeeming Love.—Redemption is the brightest mirror in which to contemplate this most lovely attribute of the Deity. Other gifts are only as mites from the Divine treasury; but redemption opens, I had almost said exhausts, all the stores of his glorious grace. Herein God commended his love; not only manifests, but renders it perfectly marvellous; manifests it in so stupendous a manner, that it is beyond parallel, beyond thought, and above all blessing and praise.—Hervey.

Moral Questions of the East.

UNDER the auspices of the Representative Board of Anti-Opium Societies a day of prayer was observed on Tuesday of last week at Exeter Hall. In the afternoon Mr. B. Broomhall explained that the gatherings were the outcome of a feeling of a distinct need for more united and special prayer in connection with endeavours to bring the opium traffic to an end. Recalling a lecture delivered fifty-five years ago by Rev. William Arthur on "Moral Statistics of the British Empire," emphasis was laid on the statement that "the morality of Holland affects Holland, the morality of Belgium affects Belgium, the morality of France may affect Europe; but the morality of England affects the world."

An extract was read from a recent issue of The Indian Witness, declaring that there are men and women in Calcutta, "of respectable European antecedents, who morally have become far more degraded and lost to all considerations of purity and truth than the gross idolaters by whom they are surrounded." Mr. Broomhall also quoted from several papers just received from China, giving particulars of the appalling extent to which various forms of immorality are spreading in Shanghai under the authority of the Municipal Council.

"Those of us connected with the several anti-opium organizations have sought earnestly and perseveringly to awaken our country to a sense of the evil, and to move our rulers; but as yet the results have been painfully disappointing. Our hope is in God, and we look to him in believing and earnest prayer that He will put forth his own power, and bring this mighty evil to an end."

The chairman (Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.) corroborated, from personal experience, the testimony given as to the terrible scenes of immorality to be witnessed in Eastern lands. "This nation must be aroused to a higher standard of purity in the individual, in society, and in the government of the world, or God may have to take away the imperial power of which we boast so much. I realize as I travel about what a marvellous power England possesses for the just administration of countries like Egypt and India.

GRAVE MORAL DANGERS.

"But everywhere—in Egypt, in India, and in Burmah—one finds that the influence of the Englishman is tainted with immorality. It is an awful statement to make, and it is an awful thing to think of the hundreds of young men that are going out all over the world, from Christian families and associations, into the midst of such surroundings.

"In my judgment that awful sorrow which has betaken the United States will be overruled by the Almighty to draw the attention of these great populations to the causes of anarchy, to the immense amassment of wealth in a few hands, to the ill-use that in many quarters wealth is being put to. It may be that God has in store for us some great humiliation, some great suffering. God is not going to let our country deteriorate without making some strong effort to save it, and if we Christian people cannot save our country by our protests, our witness-bearing and the influence which we are able to bring to bear upon it, God Almighty will have to step in and, by some terrible sweeping disaster, purge and cleanse our religious life.

"I cannot but feel that the efforts these societies have been making of late have been, so to speak, an appeal to the moral sense of Englishmen, of the Houses of Parliament, and of our rulers. God has been speaking, I believe, through them. May we not plead once more that, sparing the more terrible infliction of his wrath, God will answer our prayers and move upon our peoples, above all raise some leader to be in this movement what Wilberforce and Clarkson were to the emancipation of the slave? Thank God there are people left in this land who will follow a strong leader. But you need to have a clarion voice that will ring its appeal to the moral depths of the heart of our people."

In the evening Rev. D. B. Hankin presided over a second gathering.

The Methodist Conference.

CLOSING SESSIONS.

SUBJECTS of vital importance engaged the attention of the Œcumenical Conference on resuming its sitting on Monday. "The Elements of Pulpit Effectiveness" were ably set forth in a lucid and striking essay by Bishop B. T. Tanner (Philadelphia). He pointed out that in order to know what such elements are, we must know that for which the pulpit stands, in itself, and in its appointed work. By the pulpit is meant preaching, the oracular propagation of the Gospel. What we need to know concerning the work it is designed to do, we find in the command, "Go ye, and make disciples of all nations." The fundamental requisite for pulpit effectiveness is a Divine call. God must fill the pulpit. If the message of the preacher is to be respected and believed, the occupant of the pulpit must not only be chosen of God, but he must have the witness of the fact. Next to this, the preacher must know the Gospel—the facts contained in the Bible, faithfully received and rationally interpreted.

Mr. R. J. Rows, J.P., spoke as a layman, and gave a powerful address. He emphasized the fact that of salvation to his people. Congregations are gripped by a preacher when they feel he has come from God with a message to them; and that has been the characteristic of preachers in all times of spiritual awakening. In the minds of a number of thinking people there is an indisposition to receive doctrinal statements. "Seeing the bitterness and division arising out of doctrinal statements," they argue, "why have them at all?" But we cannot have an earnest Church without an intelligent presentation of doctrine. Doctrines do not create religion, though they react upon it and strengthen it; but an earnest religion will express itself in objective statement.

It is foolish to conclude that, because two men differ in their presentation of a great belief, one of them must be wrong. They both may be broken lights of God, and complements the one of the other. Remember this—that earnestness is absolutely essential.

The great cry of God, as pathetic as was ever put into language, is, "My son, give Me thy heart." When I say heart, that the heart is the point of least resistance to God, I do not mean a passing spasm of the emotions, issuing in hysterics. I mean all those deep-searching intuitions which the two great Apostles tell us find God—that which Coleridge indicated when he said, "My head was with Spinoza, but my heart was with Paul and John." We want also

DEFINITE PRONOUNCEMENT AS TO CHRIST.

The message of the pulpit that will satisfy the toiling, sinning, suffering, sorrowing men and women is a Christ, who is comfort to the mourner, rest to the weary, life to the dead, salvation to the lost. All this Christ is, as the Son of God. We want also an equally distinct message as to the relation of men with each other. There never was a time in the history of our race when men so fully realized that they were members one of another.

In an earnest address, Rev. Dr. S. C. Rankin (Texas) spoke of the absolute necessity of a Divine call for every preacher. The second requisite is an adequate mental equipment for the duties of the ministry. There must be, again, an abounding love for and unfailing sympathy with humanity. These will bring the preacher into kinship with his fellow-men, and make them responsive to his message.

An interesting conversation followed, in which many points were emphasized. Preachers were urged to make themselves familiar with the daily life of their people; while the necessity of preparation on the part of the pew as well as the pulpit was also insisted upon.

The afternoon session was devoted to considering "How to Mobilize the Whole Church?" Rev. Dr. Brook read a forcible paper on the subject. The grand objective of the Church was shown to be nothing less than the evangelization of the whole world, with the secondary object of making the best possible of each atom of the human mass, and bringing the chaotic relations of men into a Divine order. Dr. Brook insisted that now is the supremely opportune moment for a grand, final effort—at the beginning of this new century. A coincidence of magnificent opportunities exists now—the wealth of national resources, through discovery and invention; the universality of education; the political power of the middle class; the enormous political preponderance in the world of those nations whose Christianity was of the purest type. Humanly speaking, the great need is for money and men, and with the weapons God has provided, with commonsense and good leaders, great things may be done.

Rev. Dr. Young (St. Louis) protested against over-organization; and Mr. Wm. Windsor (Manchester) warned the Conference against divisions, advocating a world-wide simultaneous mission.

Home and Foreign Missions.

The subject of Foreign Missions was relegated to the last day of the Conference. This was felt by many to be a mistake, and a resolution was passed instructing the Special Committee to give missionary work an earlier and more prominent place in the proceedings of the next Œcumenical gathering. Rev. F. Galpin read an earnest and telling paper on "The Work Before Us," in which he set forth the far-reaching character of the Church's commission, and the sacredness of her duty. Does the Church realize the force of its obligation in this matter? To help on the work it is essential that we should be possessed of a clear and true missionary view of the needs and conditions of the heathen world. This will remove misconceptions, and destroy apathy. Christendom, and, he feared, Methodism, too, is sometimes alarmingly indifferent to mission work. The Church at home can do much in assisting missionaries to protest against the degradation of the weaker races by traders in drink and others. He pleaded for by Methodism for the promotion of the missionary cause.

Rev. Dr. Leonard (New York) spoke of the remarkable development of the means for facilitating the spread of the Gospel; and Mr. J. B. McCutcheon (Belfast) urged on the home churches a greater enthusiasm. By special permission of the Conference, Dr. Young J. Allen (Methodist Episcopal Church) was allowed extra time on account of the intense interest of his address. Dr. Allen was commissioned by the Chinese Government to write an account of the Chino-Japanese War, a work of ten volumes. Answering his own question as to the effect of the recent trouble in China, he declared that the prospects of the missionary cause in that land were brighter and more hopeful than they had ever been in the past. He showed how old restrictions are everywhere breaking down, and how the reform movement is spreading among all classes, so that now an edict has been proclaimed, requiring that in all the examinations of the country there shall be required a knowledge of Western ideas and teaching. The present is the missionary's opportunity. He must be able to take his part in educational and such work.

A short discussion followed, and among those who took part was Rev. H. Mann (South Germany), who pathetically told of the parents of Barbara Heck and Philip Embury being driven out of Germany to England and Ireland for the sake of liberty of conscience. They went to America, and began Methodism there, and now that Church sent her missionaries to the Fatherland, where they were successful. They had 30,000 members, 40,000 Sunday school scholars, and 230 deaconesses. Bishop Hartzell urged the need of a wider and bolder Christian statesmanship. He vividly enumerated the dark places of the earth which are being opened up by the best commercial men. Rev. Dr. D. W. Carter spoke for Cuba, where, when the American flag was unfurled, the first work was the inspection of prisons and the liberation of prisoners.

The afternoon session opened with an inspiring paper by Rev. Dr. W. R. Lambuth, on

OUR RESOURCES FOR THE WORK.

After dealing with auxiliary forces, the speaker referred to the need for capturing the great cities, and for the benefit of his countrymen gave with much enthusiasm an account of the missions he had inspected in London. The London Wesleyan Mission, he said, provides a splendid illustration of masterful ability in solving the problem of city evangelization, and the result has been the rehabilitation of the old churches, the building of new, the rescue of men, women, and children, the gathering in of a large number of young people, and their mobilization for active work. Turning to foreign missionary work, he declared that the home pastors practically hold the key to the situation. Silent pulpits on this question are the cause of the lack of generosity and the indifference shown in America. Prayer, he emphasized, as the SUPREME RESOURCE OF AN AGGRESSIVE CHURCH.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald spoke on "The Accumulation of Moral and Spiritual Capital." Among other resources, he referred to the deeper insight into the will of God, into the kingdom of Christ and the destinies of man, which are now possessed by the Christian Church, and which, he believed, are largely the result of quickened, patient, and successful Biblical study. There are also the influences of a century of modern missionary history, and the teachings growing out of a hundred years of experience.

An earnest address was given by Rev. Dr. W. Burt, who reminded the Conference that the great resource for this work is spirituality, and the question is whether Methodism was producing men and women who were filled with this spiritual power. Every one who has a true experience of the living Christ must seek to influence some other life. This was the way of our Lord, and could not be improved upon. If Methodists everywhere would seek an endowment of strength and power from on high, the world would soon be won. Pentecost was the answer of God to a praying Church, and another such answer would come as the result of effectual prayer.

No discussion followed, as the Conference had decided to close its sessions by holding a special service in memory of the late President McKinley. This was full of solemnity and deep feeling. The audience, which filled the chapel in every part, included the American Ambassador and suite. The singing was led by the choir of the Children's Home, and the service was simple and touching, and was conducted by Rev. Dr. Stephenson, who paid an affectionate tribute to the departed President. Bishop Vincent also spoke, and before dispersing, the delegates joined in a farewell hymn, many being deeply moved as the final verse was sung:—

Live till the Lord in glory come,
And wait his heaven to share;
Our Saviour now prepares our home:
Go on—we'll meet you there.

Now—Hereafter.

Thy will be done! We say it now
With trembling and with tears;
We shall not weep God's will to do
Thro' the eternal years!

The ways of life are strange and dark,
We ask but to be blest,
Nor deem that grief and travail sore
Lead onward to our rest.

By different ways, by pastures green,
Or desert wild and bare;
Christ's little flock at last shall meet
Beneath his shelt'ring care.

One fold, one Shepherd, one dear home,
Where none can err or stray!
God grant us grace his will to know,
And follow all the way.

From Treffen to Prague.

AMONG those attending the Conference at Treffen was Sister Anna Nitsch, of the Deaconess Home at Bucharest, formerly a branch of Kaiserswerth, and established there at the wish of the Queen of Roumania. Meeting a great need, the sisters had a rich field of activity, when suddenly a call came from Germany requiring them to return to the homeland, where some new orphanages near Berlin were in need of their assistance. The Queen at once telegraphed and wrote to the German Empress, who willingly seconded her request that they might remain, but without avail. After much prayer for guidance, the Sister Superior severed her connection with Kaiserswerth, and, under her leadership, an independent work was established, which prospered and increased until, two years ago, the Liberal Government of Roumania would compel the sisters to give up their right to the internal government of the establishment. This was aiming a death-blow at its spiritual life, the opinion of the Liberals being that the Bible was nothing but a paper-pope, with which they should contend as with the living Pope.

As the sisters refused their signature to an unconditional supervision, all their buildings, to which the State had chiefly contributed, were taken away from them, and they were obliged to begin anew. These were deep waters through which they had to pass, and they are not out of them yet, for the monetary struggle is great; but having committed all things to Him who is a faithful Saviour, even to the uttermost, they look up to Him for daily deliverance.

This having been communicated at the breakfast-table of our kind hostess, the Countess de la Tour, the question was raised later on, why there should be throughout the country such

A DEARTH OF DEACONESSES?

Besides other causes pertaining more to spiritual concerns, one was named which may hardly be thought worthy to be considered, but upon which all the ladies present agreed. One of them frankly confessed that in years gone by she had been exercised as to becoming a deaconess herself, but felt repelled by the unbecoming, and at times, especially in the hot season, most uncomfortable uniform into which a Continental deaconess is forced for her lifetime. This seems to us, with all due respect to the law-makers, a perfectly needless tyranny. Because an inconvenient, ugly garb had been worn for centuries, there is no reason why it should not be made more convenient now. Besides, every woman ought to have a right to exercise her own taste in her hours off duty.

Jesus tells woman to imitate Mary; but He does not tell her to dress in black, because this is the better part. We are rejoicing Christians, and not mourning ones.

Vienna.

Leaving Treffen on Saturday, August 17, we turned our faces towards the "Kaiserstadt" (Vienna). It was a charming journey, though the beauty of nature was marred in places by grotesque figures fixed to wooden crosses and imitation Calvaries, with the fourteen "stations of the cross" marked by tiny chapels, reminding us of the Romish travesty of our beautiful Gospel.

The night was approaching as we reached the magnificent Semmering group of mountains, renowned for their natural beauty, and for the early triumph of engineering skill in carrying the railway through them. As it was the eve of the aged Emperor's birthday, nearly all the hotels and stations were illuminated, and under the darkening veil of night the effect was charming.

On the Lord's Day at Vienna we attended in the morning a Baptist service at 61, Margareten Street, where Dr. Baedeker delivered one of his unmistakable, straightly pointed Gospel messages. In the afternoon he and Mr. Morgan addressed a fair gathering of Tcheks at Landgutgasse 39, District X.—the headquarters of the Vienna branch of Dr. Clark's Mission, about which we will speak hereafter.

There being about 300,000 Tcheks at Vienna, it is of great importance that the Gospel should find its way to them. Mr. Vaclav Cejnar, a Tchek himself, is in charge of the work, and is heart and soul in it. Meetings are held in five different parts of the city, and though free tract distribution is forbidden, the number that find their way into circulation, in a manner that does not offend the law, amounts yearly to 20,000.

As a result of the recent Anti-Alcohol Congress at Vienna, Mr. Cejnar, after some difficulties, was able to obtain permission to form a Temperance Society, and to give lectures on Temperance questions and the Bible. This is an advanced step, the importance of which is most appreciated by those best acquainted with the innumerable obstacles an Austrian evangelist has to cope with.

On Monday we called at the British and Foreign Bible Society depôt, meeting here (in the absence of the agent, Rev. W. H. Millard) with Mr. Hofer, who is much interested in the Vienna Y.M.C.A. We visited the premises, which are compact and well adapted to their purpose. Financially, the institution has an uphill experience.

Prague.

And now to Prague. No traveller is likely to be disappointed with the Bohemian capital, so rich in historical monuments and interesting architecture; but under the guidance of a son of the country who is at the same time a Christian brother, Prague has a different physiognomy from that which the man, guide-book in hand, can see.

A story is current about John of Nepomuck, whose name may not be known to many English Protestants. He is a product of the Romish saint factory, and is said to have been the virtuous confessor of a Bohemian queen. On refusing to divulge the secret of her confession to the wrathful king, he was thrown from the bridge into the Moldau. Here, for a few minutes, his body was seen floating on the water with five stars shining around his head; then all disappeared.

Though history can only prove the existence of one John of Nepomuck, who was neither a confessor nor the good man that this legend makes him, the statue of the Patron of Bohemia on Prague's oldest bridge, and the spot marked from which he fell, continues to attract year by year hundreds of pilgrims from Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia. They have their own Nepomucks in stone, clay, and wood. In renovating once such a statue, the workmen found, underneath the upper layer, another face. Whose? John Huss's. The fact is, and this time that centuries ago the people, who in their own minds had canonized Huss, began to erect statues to him. The priests, well aware of the danger, instead of pointing the ignorant to Him to whom worship alone is due, quickly supplied a substitute, which would at the same time strengthen the power of the confessional. To all appearance they succeeded. Prague, once the centre of vigorous Protestant activity, seems crushed at Rome's feet. The statue of Loyola on the church of the Jesuits is surrounded by a halo, the symbol of divinity, which even Spain does not accord to him, her pet-saint.

From a high column in the market place, erected by the grateful Catholics, in 1650, to commemorate the Virgin's victory over the Protestants at the Battle of White Mountain, Maria Victorias proudly raises her head. In the lower part of the column a picture of Mary is fixed into a niche, to which pious Romanist women address their invocations. On this memorable spot the blood of twenty-eight Protestant champions was shed on June 21, 1621. The Prague of to-day, with its proud archbishopric, its 107 spires, its sixty Catholic churches, and twenty-seven rich monasteries and convents, seems a bulwark of Romish power. Yet, underneath it all, there is a current of life. The spirit of Huss still lives, for the Word of God is always the same, and where it takes root the miracle of a new life is performed in the soul.

"Preaching that Wins."

THE TRUE INWARDNESS OF THE GOSPEL.

SPEAKING about evangelists, a reverend gentleman said he regarded their work as rather unnecessary in a locality well supplied with a regular ministry. I said that was precisely what had been said of his own denomination a short time ago by a neighbouring clergyman. I ventured to add that I scarcely ever knew a Christian—a real spiritual one—who did not trace his conversion to some other source than the pastor of his church. I was speaking of the ordinary village churches, and not of those of cities. A revival, an evangelist, a private Christian, or a book, seemed to be, more frequently than not, the ordinary instrumentality of conversion.

Have we not all heard many earnest pastors conspicuously fail in attempting to give a Gospel address. Their "life-line" was good as far as it reached; but it was too short. Like the Priest and Levite, it came near the sinner, but did not touch him. If there was a message, it was not just for him as he was—a sinner. It was for the penitent or believer; but it contained nothing to make him so. The discourse may have brought the burden of sin on the soul, but gave no relief. The troubled were directed to give their hearts to God, but felt all the more oppressed when they tried to do so and failed. How can one give the heart to God till he first believes in God's love to him. "We love Him, because He first loved us." Some preachers seem not to realise that

THE GOSPEL IS A MESSAGE.

They discourse on systems, theories, doctrines, duties, Christian experiences all the way from the City of Destruction to the Celestial City; but they have no Gospel for "every creature," no message from God to their hearers. Perhaps many real Christians fail here; unable through previous training to translate the life they possess into words. Trained in the theologic groove of their party, and to an orthodox sermonizing style, they may not be able to get out of the rut. In preaching as well as in other things, we need to go back to primitive times, when the ambassador did not hesitate to say, "To you is the word of this salvation sent."

Perhaps if missionaries were more of evangelist than teacher, their success would be greater. The Apostles proclaimed the Gospel without much preparatory instruction. They usually appealed at once, with the remedy, to the consciousness of sin that is common to all. They did not institute schools to train the people that they should become Christians eventually. But they insisted that they should BECOME CHRISTIANS ON THE SPOT.

Their first teaching was Christ, and their subsequent teaching was the same. "As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him."

Indeed, the Apostles seemed to leave their converts much to themselves and their mutual exhortations, with the Spirit of Christ as their great Teacher, to guide them into the truths which had been delivered to them. If the heathen converts are now as thoroughly converted as people were in Paul's time, and if more teachers from among themselves were encouraged, it might be beneficial to the people, and helpful to the missionary societies, by abating the demand for highly-educated teachers.

Much study of the circumstantials of Christianity is not in all cases profitable, as it has a tendency to divert the mind from essentials. The truth that is the life of the soul may be expressed in a sentence. It is mostly so at every spiritual crisis. Anything elaborate is unfit for the soul in its conflict with Satan in the wilderness or at the hour of death. A plain promise—"it is written"—seems the most effectual weapon. Paul frequently sums up the Gospel in few words, such as "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, and rose again."

"Fast in God."

A TRIBUTE TO ALFRED THE GREAT.

PERHAPS there is no life recorded in the page of so-called secular history which more plainly preaches the lesson of faith in God than that of our Saxon king, whose commemoration was kept last week at Winchester; and while the figure of Alfred and the story of his life and work are prominent before us, it may be of interest to consider his position as a religious teacher.

We know, it has been said, very little of the inner life of our great king, but yet we can bring into court four witnesses to the depth and reality of his faith in God. 1st, that of his deeds; 2nd, that of his contemporary and biographer, Asser; 3rd, that of his jewel; 4th, that of his writings.

THE WITNESS OF HIS DEEDS.

We need not detail the well-known facts of his life; how, in spite of what seemed overwhelming difficulties, he drove back the heathen Danes, and laid the foundation of a united and Christian England. Only one who had "the faith which overcometh the world" could have done what Alfred did. In spite of the might of his foes, his own physical weakness, his disappointments, those "wounds of the mind" of which he speaks, Alfred manfully held to his post. Even though we cannot altogether approve of his attempt to revive monastic institutions, we must remember that there were times when the monasteries accomplished some useful work, and that in the institutions at Athelney and Shaftesbury we may see an expression of Alfred's belief that "more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of;" and that provision must be made to supply men's spiritual as well as their temporal necessities, if they are to be more than beasts. Indeed, the more one studies this early period of our history, the more one feels inclined to think that if it were better known by those who reject belief in God, they would be compelled to say of Alfred what a sceptic did of John Keble: "His life seems to us one of the strongest bits of evidence as to the existence of God."

THE WITNESS OF ASSER

is also well known, and need not, therefore, detain us long. To him we owe our knowledge that Alfred not only was regular in his attendance at church, but, unknown to his courtiers, spent time at night in private prayer; and that he always carried about with him a little book or manual in which were copied psalms, prayers, and extracts from the Scriptures and writings of holy men. By this means "he thickly stored the cells of his mind with many various flowers of Divine Scripture." Asser also tells us that when Alfred was still quite young, he recognised how easy it is to forget God when one is strong and well, and thus be led into sin; and that, consequently, he prayed that he might have sent him some infirmity which, while not rendering him useless, would help to keep him in conscious dependence upon God. His prayer was answered, and our astonishment at what Alfred accomplished within the comparatively short span of life allotted to him is increased, when we remember that he laboured under physical disability,

THE WITNESS OF THE ALFRED JEWEL.

This jewel, which was found 200 years ago at Athelney, the place where Alfred took refuge from the Danes, is a small enamelled ornament bearing the inscription, "Alfred ordered me to be made." It is now in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, and it seems more than probable that a religious significance may be attached to it. As to this, however, we must refer our readers to the recent book of Rev. S. Earle, Professor of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford, "The Alfred Jewel: An Historical Essay." While not accepting all the conclusions of the learned professor, his supposition that, in the jewel we have a symbolic representation of Alfred's belief that the religion of Christ must triumph over that of Woden and Thor, fits in so well with what we know of Alfred from other sources that we may well accept it. Alfred did not have all the light which we enjoy to-day, and was not altogether in advance of his age in matters of religious faith, but he carried his religion into everyday life; and may not his consistency of conduct shame some of us who find witnessing for Christ under certain circumstances so hard?

THE WITNESS OF ALFRED'S WRITINGS.

For the benefit of his subjects, he made free translations of the works of Boethius, a Roman philosopher; Orosius, a Spaniard; Pope Gregory; and Bede, the monk of Wearmouth. Here he would omit a portion, and there add thoughts of his own; and from these we learn something of his views on life, and how man should conduct himself in this world. Like the Apostle Paul, he believed that the man who would go safely through this world must "endure hardness." "No wise man," he says, "should desire a soft life, if he careth for any worship here from the world, or for eternal life after this life is ended." "The glory of this world passeth away" wrote the beloved disciple, and Alfred, too, despised that passing fame, "bereft of all that is good." "Glory of this world! Why do foolish men with a false voice call thee glory? Thou art not so."

That Alfred recognised what man needs for his journey through life, we know from his elaboration of John vii. 38, which he gives in his prologue to the "Pastoral Care." A few lines only from those given by Prof. Earle may be quoted here:

This is now the watering which the world's Creator for refreshment promised us who till the field.
He said it was his will that in the world henceforth out of the inward soul waters aye enduring flow of loyal believers under heaven.

  There is little doubt that of this watering the well-spring is in the heavenly kingdom;
  for it is the Holy Ghost.

A final quotation from Alfred's writings must suffice us. In the fourth book of his translation of Boethius, Alfred inserted a beautiful simile (for which again we refer our readers to Prof. Earle's book), and at its close we have the point of the comparison clearly brought out:—"Those men are the freest from care (whether about the anxieties of this life or of the next) who are fast in God; but in whatever degree they are asunder from God, in the same degree are they worried and harassed both in mind and in body." Yes, that was the secret of King Alfred's life. He was "fast in God." In that fastness he welded together a kingdom which since his day has grown into a vast empire; and though the England of to-day is very different from his, and our difficulties are not his, yet across the distance of a thousand years his example shines brightly for our encouragement and stimulus. Ought we not to "thank God and take courage" for our warfare, from this record of one who, "strong in faith," lived his life to the glory of God?

Convention in Norway.

I AM glad to be able to inform you about a movement, on lines similar to those of the conventions at Keswick and Blankenburg (Germany), which has been recently set on foot in Norway. In response to an invitation issued by seven ministers and editors of Christian papers among the different denominations, a large body of Christians came together in the end of August, at Laurvik, a town in Southern Norway.

Inspiring meetings, of which one was attended by more than 3,000 persons, were held in the different churches and in the large public park. The deepening of the spiritual life and the practical work for unity were the essential themes. It was agreed (D.V.) to continue such meetings every year.

Prayer-Book Revision.

IN a recent issue we inserted a communication, bearing this title, from a correspondent who deplored the prevalence of sacerdotal teaching in the Church of England, and who criticised the service for the Ordering of Priests as "the seed-plot which has produced these false pretensions." Our correspondent indicated the unscriptural character of sacerdotalism—"every believer is one of the Royal priesthood," and concluded with the words: "All Evangelical clergymen earnestly desire that in the above and other parts the Prayer Book should be revised."

REVISION NOT DESIRED.

Several readers have written us on the points thus raised. Most of them, though avowed and earnest Evangelicals, say that they are by no means in favour of revision of the Prayer Book In the words of one of them, Rev. SIDNEY PIKE (Hampstead): "If this were done, would it not be done primarily by Convocation, with the subsequent sanction of Parliament? Have we any guarantee—is there a probability—that the revision would proceed on Evangelical lines? Might not the door which lets out "priest," or any other word or phrase objected to, let in something worse? Therefore, though an Evangelical clergyman, I do not desire that the Prayer Book be revised."

Mr. H. D. PRITCHETT (Darlington) points out that the fact that Sacerdotalists appeal to the Prayer Book by no means constitutes it "the seed-plot of false pretensions." All manner of sects claim Scripture support for their views; but we do not, on that account, denounce the Scriptures! "Can it be (he asks) that the compilers of the Ordination Service, drawn up in 1550, by Cranmer, Ridley, and others (and revised in 1552), who laid down their lives because of their opposition to Rome, and to whom all England owes a stupendous debt of gratitude, left in that service the very foundation and cardinal principle of Romish teaching—no salvation except through a human priest?"

NO SACRIFICING PRIEST.

Recommending inquirers to study the Homilies, the Articles, and the Prayer Book generally, Mr. Pritchett shows that the word "priest," when applied to a minister in the Church of England, is simply "presbyter" writ short; this is universally admitted, and in the Latin version of the Articles (of equal value with the English) "priest" is never rendered by sacerdos (a sacrificer), but by presbyter. Throughout the Prayer Book the words "priest" and "minister" are used interchangeably; while no office is defined and no acts mentioned calling for or requiring a sacrificing priest. "All the great divines for centuries since the Reformation have acknowledged this, and it has only been left to traitors in the nineteenth century to arrogate to themselves sacerdotal standing or functions."

Regarding the words uttered by the bishops on the imposition of hands, Mr. Pritchett writes:—"Your correspondent makes a common error in reading into the words, 'Receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a priest,' the conclusion that the Bishops claim the power to bestow the Holy Spirit. The compilers of the Prayer Book never made any such claim. It is simply a prayer, or fervent desire that the Holy Ghost may be with them. In the address to the candidates, they are told that they 'have need to pray earnestly for the Holy Spirit,' and that they, the Bishops, have good hope that they (the candidates) will 'continually pray for the heavenly assistance of the Holy Ghost.' This does not look as if the bishops presumed mechanically to impart the Holy Spirit. The very presence of the 'Amen' at the end shows that the words are a prayer."

As to the words, "Whose sins thou dost forgive, they are forgiven," &c., Mr. Pritchett writes: "If they are Popish in the Prayer Book, then they cannot be otherwise in John xx. 23. Compare John xx. 19 with Luke xxiv. 33, and it will appear evident that the commission to remit and retain did not simply extend to the Apostles but to the disciples—'they that were with them'—'the laity,' as we might say."

The Story of a Well-Dressing.

ONCE a year, on the threshold of summer, the folk of Tissington, in the heart of Dovedale, assemble to give thanks for the abundant water-springs which keep their village cool and sweet. From all over the dales of lovely Derbyshire the people come in the month of May to join in the homely celebration known as "the dressing of the wells," which is the festival of the year.

The "dressings" are really charming pieces of mosaic floral work, for which the choicest blooms of cottage gardens are brought together. Each spring or well is almost hidden in flowers, in the centre of which is some picture or emblem, and daintily-worked text, arranged by families or friendly circles. The decorating of the wells is a cherished privilege, handed down for generations, and there is always an earnest desire to excel. People with long memories of the well-dressing say that it was never better done than this year.

The custom is centuries old; by whom and when it was introduced is uncertain. It has spread into many other villages, and a very pretty story is told of its origin in Tissington.

Once upon a time, so it is said, there was a great drought in the land. The pastures were burned bare, flowing rivers wasted to a trickle, and there was suffering for want of water. But to the very end of this rainless time the five wells of Tissington ran full and clear. So one day the grateful villagers dressed the wells with flowers, and marked the day as a holiday for all time. It is not a story we are bound to believe, though for want of a better—we do not say prettier—it holds the field in the ancient village.

When the thanksgiving service—the first part of the festival—is concluded in the time-worn parish church, where lie the old Fitzherberts, a procession is formed, consisting of the clergy from the neighbouring parishes, members of the choir and congregation, and the visitors. In this fashion a circuit is made of the five wells, and songs of praise are rendered. In all cases a hymn is selected for the occasion, "As pants the hart for cooling streams," being one of the favourites. So the procession winds along the green lanes from well to well, the young voices ringing clear in the open air. With the singing out of doors, and the "Amen" being said, the ceremony ends, though for the villagers and the young people there are many innocent pleasures in the afternoon.

One of the wells this year bore the text, "The Lord is my Shepherd," reminding us that the Good Shepherd leads us by, or near, the still waters. He knows the way to the fountain where we may find refreshment in the day of pilgrimage and toil.

Another had the inscription, "Come ye to the waters." Each one of us is in these words urged to come to those waters of which we read in Ezekiel that they issue out of the sanctuary. They are pure and holy, and in them we may be cleansed from all sin and live for ever.

What is known as the Hall Well, a beautiful spring, was inscribed "Christ is gone up," teaching us that inasmuch as Christ has ascended, there will be a perennial and eternal flowing of the waters, which nothing can check or turn save our own sins. We do not depend on any fluctuating or insufficient supplies, because Christ, the Source of living waters, liveth evermore. While the throne of God and of the Lamb stands, and the river of the water of life proceeds from it clear as crystal, so long will it be possible for us to have an unfading spiritual beauty and a tender, sweet, fresh spring time in the soul.

Happy are they who "draw water with joy out of the wells of salvation" every day and all the year round.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.
23rd Quarterly Prize Competition.

July to September.

RULES.

☞ Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is strictly observed, especially Nos. 5, 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—
   I. Those under ten years of age.
   II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   III. Those over thirteen and under fifteen.
   IV. Those between fifteen and eighteen.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.
4. At the top of your paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and Age last birthday.
5. The questions must be answered in the Right Order. The answers must be written on either Foolscap or Quarto size sheets, and on one side of the paper only. Number your Answers exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. ☞ Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Wednesday Oct. 9. The results will be announced on Oct. 17.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. Chapter and Verse must be given wherever possible.
11. Those who cannot do all the questions set for their division must do as many as they can, and will receive marks accordingly. No papers can be re-examined. And don't forget Rule 5!

☞ Any seniors who are over Eighteen years of age may do the Competition, and have their names included in the lists, but will not be eligible for the prizes.

MISSIONS: THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM (Psa. lxxii.).

IT is a terrible thought that one thousand millions of our race are wandering in darkness and the shadow of death, without hope, and without God. Of these thirty-five millions pass annually into Christless graves. In China alone, taking the lowest computation of its mighty populations, it is estimated that 1,400 die every hour, and that 33,000 Chinese daily pass beyond our reach.

And how awful the need! I have been struck by three things in the course of my travellings, especially in Eastern lands.

(1) The terrible injustice and tyranny to the poor. If a man goes to the law court for justice, he must have money enough to bribe his judges and the court officials, or he will be certainly defeated. For the most part it is wiser to bear an injustice than resist it. There is special significance, therefore, in this Psalm: He shall judge the poor, the needy, shall redeem their souls, and break in pieces the oppressor (vv. 2, 4, 12, 13, 14).

(2) The awful sin. We dare not put in words the full story of the immorality which we have seen, and of which we have heard. There is sin and shame everywhere. Evil is enthroned, deified, and worshipped. Buddhism,* Hindooism, and Mohammedanism, are corrupt to the core. There is sin in Christian countries, but it is condemned by the religion of Christ and by public opinion, whereas it is condoned, and even advocated, by the religions I have named. It is a part of them. There is special emphasis, therefore, in the references of this Psalm to the righteousness of the Saviour's reign (vv. 1, 2, 3, 7, 17).

(3) The degradation. Women are degraded, their intellects dwarfed, their worst passions excited, taught that they have no soul, agitated by jealousy, envy, intrigue, and hate, so that Mrs. Bishop says that 200 times she has been asked for poison to do away with some other woman or child which had become an object of jealous hatred. Then think what sickness means. It is believed to be the work of demons. The sick person is an object of loathing and terror, is starved, beaten, blistered, and exposed to nameless barbarities.

And how little has been done! In China the average is one missionary to half a million of people, as though there was but one minister for Glasgow or Manchester. Whereas the Moravians send out one missionary for every sixty members, other Churches have but one for every 5,000. And whereas Great Britain spends each year £140,000,000 on drink, £16,000,000 on smoking, and hoards £240,000,000, the whole of her contributions to missionary operations amount to only £1,500,000.

But notwithstanding all, the Kingdom is certainly coming. The dawn is breaking over the hills of darkness; the handful of corn on the top of the mountains is bringing forth thirty, sixty, and one-hundred fold. The showers are permeating the arid ground. The system of irrigating the sandy soil with the river of life is being carried farther and farther through the world.

The actual numbers gathered into churches represent a very small part of the result of missions during the last century. There are tens of thousands in their homes and harems who believe in Christ, and pray to Him, though they have never openly professed his name. Myriads of Bibles are in circulation, and myriads have learnt to read them in our mission schools. The great idolatries of the past are shorn of their glory, and have lost hold on their professed adherents. The ground is honeycombed with trains of gunpowder, and only awaits the single spark. We may cherish a great hope for the world. It is becoming ripe for Christ. The darkness is departing, and the true light shining. Let us hasten by prayer, by gift, by the consecration of our lives, the coming of the day of God. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

At the Conference on Free Church Girls' Guilds, held at the Memorial Hall, Miss E. M. Weatherley, member of the National Council, showed that the Guild movement would not in any way conflict with C.E., but might serve as an adjunct to it.

On receipt of the sad news of President McKinley's death, Rev. W. Knight Chaplin cabled to the officers of the American United C.E. Society on behalf of the Christian Endeavour Union of Great Britain and Ireland an expression of the sympathy of all British Endeavourers.

It was reported at the Triennial Colonial Convention, New Zealand, that, since the last Convention, £4,000 has been raised for missionary funds, fifteen members have entered the ministry, and thirty-nine have become missionaries. The total membership is 7,645. The New Zealand Societies are to be affiliated with the Australian Union; a paid travelling secretary is to be appointed for extension work.

A friend, writing from Wakkerstroom, Transvaal, says: "A C.E. Society has been started at Wakkerstroom, in connection with the Union Church. In spite of the small numbers, the Society has already justified its existence. A pleasing feature has been the interest and help of Christian soldiers. The vice-president was for some time a member of the Society in connection with Rev. F. B. Meyer's church in London."

Christian Endeavourers have special cause to mourn the loss of Mr. McKinley, for he was, in a very real way, friendly to their cause. Every year he occupied the Presidential chair, Mr. McKinley sent a telegram to the annual C.E. Conventions in America. The last was sent on July 6 of the present year, to the Twentieth Annual C.E. Convention, held in Cincinnati. It was as follows:—"Upon the assembling of the International Christian Endeavour Convention this evening please extend to those present my cordial greeting and best wishes for the success of the association. I regret that it is impossible for me to be with you on this occasion.—WILLIAM MCKINLEY." Greetings were also received from the late President at the World's C.E. Convention, held in London last year.

JOSEPH SOLD INTO EGYPT (Gen. xxxvii. 12-36).

GOLDEN TEXT—Acts vii. 9.

CONNECTIVE STORY.

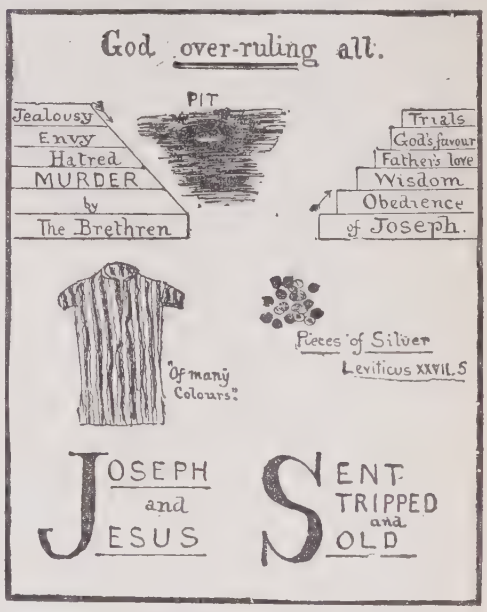
WE left Jacob at Peniel; God changed Esau's wrath, and the dreaded meeting proved the beginning of friendship. Esau finally settled in Edom, east of the Dead Sea. Jacob stayed awhile in Succoth, then crossed the Jordan and bought some land in Shechem, pitching his tents and building an altar. This is a fertile valley, one of the loveliest spots in Canaan; but he had troubles in his family, and God told him to remove to Bethel. There God appeared to him and renewed the Covenant. Rachel died while they journeyed from Bethel, and was buried near to Bethlehem. At last, after about thirty years absence, Jacob returned to his father's home, found his mother dead, but the old man still alive. Isaac died soon after, and Jacob, or "Israel," dwelt at Mamre in Hebron with his two youngest sons, while the ten older ones fed their father's flocks at Shechem, some sixty miles distant.

JOSEPH, THE BELOVED SON (3).

His father's darling, because he was Rachel's child, born when his father was ninety years old; also because he was a good boy, conscientious and trustworthy (2), a God-fearing boy, to whom God spoke in dreams. The beginnings of Joseph's future greatness are found in his character as a boy. He was obedient to his father's will, and undertook a long journey to his disagreeable and wicked brothers (13). In many respects a splendid example for our young lads. (Let the children point out the good traits in him.)

THE BROTHERS (4, 11).

They had moved to Dothan on the edge of the plain of Esdraelon, seventeen miles further north (17). They conspired to kill Joseph when they saw him coming, dressed in his "coat of many colours." Reuben, the eldest, seems to have been the best, and was the means of saving Joseph's life. He intended to rescue him from the pit afterwards (29, 30). Judah was a leader among the brethren, and avaricious; he gets rid of his brother without murder, while Reuben was absent. Mark the great sin of jealousy and envy. First they will kill, then starve to death, then make a profit out of their brother's sorrow, and are perfectly callous to the cries of the boy (v. 25, and Gen. xlii. 21, 22), and the heart-breaking sorrow of the old father (34). Let us take warning from these awful crimes, which began with jealousy against a younger brother (Matt. v. 22).



THE ISHMEELITES (25).

Descended from Abraham's son Ishmael, also Midianites (28, 36), from Abraham's sons Medan and Midian. They were near neighbours, and joined together in caravans and travelled to Egypt, which was at this time the great world-power, carrying spices, &c., for which there was a great trade, so much being used there in embalming the dead. The spice was "gum tragacanth," which is found in Syria; the "balm of Gilead" was in great renown, and "ludanum" (myrrh), or "the fragrant rose of Cistus," is found in Arabia, Syria, and Palestine. This caravan is a true picture of one in the present day.

JOSEPH A TYPE OF JESUS CHRIST.

In Joseph we find the most remarkable types of Christ. (1) The beloved son (v. 3 and Matt. iii. 17). (2) The special coat (v. 3 and John xix. 23). (3) Despised and hated by his brethren (v. 4 and John i. 11; vii. 5). (4) Envy (v. 11 and Matt. xxvii. 18). (5) The father pondering his sayings (v. 11 and Luke ii. 51). (6) Sent by the father (v. 13 and John xii. 49). (7) He willingly accepted the mission (v. 13 and Psa. xl. 7). (8) He sought for his brethren (v. 16 and Luke xix. 10). (9) They conspired against him (v. 18 and Matt. xxvii. 1). (10) Stripped of his coat (v. 23 and John xix. 23, 24). (11) Watched by his enemies (v. 25 and Matt. xxvii. 36). (12) Sold for twenty pieces of silver (v. 28 and Matt. xxvi. 14, 15).

LESSON POINTS.

1. God had a great work for Joseph to do, and his troubles were to prepare him for that future.
2. Training in youth, obedience and trust, go to make great men.
3. Beware of the seeds of envy, which will grow to hatred or murder.
4. God over-rules the designs of the wicked.
5. Do right, and leave the results with God.

About Books.

REVELATION AND CORRUPTION.

A WORK of great interest at the present time is—The Church, The Churches, and the Mysteries; or, Revelation and Corruption. By G. H. Pember, M.A. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The author has for some years been well known to the Christian public, through his writings in exposition of Scripture prophecy and in denunciation of modern forms of apostasy and wickedness. In these pages he combines this two-fold ministry; on the one hand, he opens up Biblical revelation, on the other he brings to light some of the hidden things of darkness as they are found in Paganism and reflected by a paganized Christianity.

The first part of the book deals with the Church as a Divine institution—"the great assembly now being summoned by God out of every tribe and tongue and people and nation, the complete and heavenly body which the Lord will shortly present unto Himself as a glorious Church not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing." The ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, also the Gifts of Ministry and the Gifts of the Spirit, are then considered in detail, and ecclesiastical theories or conventional forms are held of little account alongside plain Scripture teaching. While recognising the propriety of local assemblies being called "churches," and regarded as miniatures of the whole Church, Mr. Pember holds that it is unscriptural to apply the designation to the aggregation of all the assemblies of any particular sect, or to all the assemblies of any kingdom or country.

From the opening chapter onwards, our author shows the fundamental importance of sound views regarding the Church. When dealing with the ordinances, he is able to do more; he explains how serious error came in, and also from whence it came. In a way the second part of the book is thus anticipated; but only so far as to excite a reasonable curiosity as to the measure in which Pagan error can be shown to be responsible for Christian apostasy. The curtain is drawn upon what are known as the Lesser and the Greater Mysteries, with the rites attendant upon initiation. Here we get traces of fasting, confession, baptismal expiation and regeneration, holy water, and the sign of the Cross. These chapters bring the work into the small class devoted to exhibiting the appalling extent to which the Church of Christ has declined from its pristine purity—in fact to prove that Catholicism is "a blend of Paganism and Christianity."

This volume, though complete in itself, is also an introduction to the third volume in the series of which it forms a part, dealing with "The Great Prophecies of the Centuries Concerning the Church." Mr. Pember felt it to be necessary to present the Scriptural idea of the Church before proceeding to consider the Divine forecast of its course upon earth. The pages are full of instruction; saying so much, does not imply that we acquiesce in all the views expressed. The author writes from conviction, and even where, on minor questions, we feel that his ground may be uncertain or insecure, we consider his words with attention, for he advances nothing but what he has deeply pondered and carefully weighed as a student of Scripture and a servant of Christ.

The demand for successive editions of Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell's book, "The Temperance Problem and Social Reform," is evidence of the wide interest in attempts at the solution of the difficulty by means of public management. British Gothenburg Experiments (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) supplies full information of the experience of the various trusts and companies that have been formed throughout the country under the leadership of Earl Grey.

The issue of the annual volume of The Herald of Mercy, under the title, Strayed from Home, and other Readings (1s. Morgan & Scott), puts a cheap and valuable auxiliary to personal word and testimony within the reach of the district visitor and other Christian workers. Short, crisp, and varied Evangelical articles are interspersed with telling narratives and well-chosen poems, all rendered yet more bright and interesting by the abundant use of attractive pictures. On every page the Gospel of the grace of God is presented; and the present issue is well fitted to prove as helpful as its predecessors "in speaking to the unconverted, as well as in stimulating the Lord's people to increased love and service." As each leaf is complete in itself, the book lends itself, like the monthly issues, to cutting up into leaflets, after it has served its end in volume form.

Among timely literature a useful place is filled by The Millenary of King Alfred the Great (1s. Longmans), Sermon by Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, rector of St. Mildred's, Bread Street, and secretary of the Christian Evidence Society.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Charles Cook's Work.

THE concluding services of Mr. Charles Cook's thirteenth annual campaign in Hyde Park are proving effective in reaching and impressing the unconverted. Among recent notable services was that in memory of President McKinley. Last Lord's Day Mr. Cook announced that he had again secured the Metropolitan Theatre for the twenty-seventh year. The opening meeting is fixed for Sunday, October 6.

Free Churches Mission Car.

In connection with the Gospel car movement of the National Council of Free Churches Rev. Jesse Mayo has been holding a number of evangelistic services in Sussex. Rev. Arthur J Summerhill, writing for the Petersfield Free Church Council, says: "The friends on the spot, including Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Salvationists, have co-operated heartily. Mr. Mayo has won the respect and confidence of all. Practical, pointed, and timely, his addresses have been listened to with eager attention by increasing crowds. With the absence of anything like sensationalism, there has been spiritual fervour which has compelled an earnest hearing. Power has rested upon the gatherings, and much good has been accomplished.

The Baptist Church, Forres.

A fruitful three weeks' mission has been held in the Baptist Church, Forres, N.B. Pastor E. J. Goodman conducted the open-air and the Sabbath indoor meetings, and other speakers during the first fortnight were Revs. Joseph Johnston, M.A. (U.F. Church, Forres), and the following Baptist ministers:—Revs. W. D. Hankinson (Elgin), John Yeomans (Lossiemouth), and C. W. Adams (Hopeman). Every evening quite a crowd of men listened attentively to the preaching of the Gospel in the High Street. The concluding week was wholly taken by Rev. Alex. Bremner. From first to last the services were well attended, and great interest was manifested. Mr. Hugh McCallum, of Paisley Road Baptist Church, Glasgow, kindly gave his services as Gospel soloist for the first two weeks, and his singing was greatly appreciated. Mr. Reid and the Misses Nicholson helped with the singing at the other meetings. There has been a most encouraging work in the church, and lasting good is sure to follow the truth declared in the Master's name. G.

Work in Glasgow.

The month's campaign in connection with Pastor D. J. Findlay's work in the St. George's Cross Tabernacle has been productive of real and aggressive effort, with much blessing. Fresh ground has been continually opened up, and the removal of the afternoon meetings for Bible study to the large hall of the Christian Institute has been amply justified.

Situated in the centre of the city, and near the business quarter, it has been good to see the large attendances. Mr. Varley's clear and incisive studies of the Scriptures suit the Scotch mind well, and the numbers of men seen at nearly all the meetings show what a firm hold the mission has taken.

Sunday last was a remarkable day, the Tabernacle at 11, and St. Andrew's Hall at 3 and 7 p.m., being none too large for the great audiences. Deep interest prevailed as the result of Mr. Varley's striking address, and the night saw the workers returning home with the joy of harvest.

The missionary brethren are beginning to reach the city in view of the Conference which begins on Saturday next, and will be maintained through the whole of Sunday and Monday. The Conference promises to be of deep interest, and to prove a strong incentive to missionary effort. St. Andrew's Hall has been secured for the great gathering on Sunday night, when Messrs. W. B. Sloan, of London, C. F. Reeve, of Poona, Hugh Paton, Henry Varley, D. J. Findlay, and several missionary brethren will take part.

The Sunday evangelistic services in the City Hall, and the week-night gatherings in St. James' Hall, conducted by Mr. Bennett Anderson, have been abundantly fruitful. The evangelist has been constrained to remain till the end of September.

Mr. J. J. Browne, London City Mission, reports that blessing was given in connection with his recent visit to Sidmouth.

Mr. Mears, colporteur, of Ealing and Brentford, has had a happy and fruitful mission, with his wife and daughters, in the village of Belton, Leicestershire. Several outdoor meetings were held and largely attended; the cottages and public-houses were visited and the good seed sown broadcast.

Mr. Josiah Nix has had a time of blessing with the fishermen at Stornoway and Fraserburgh. In the halls and open air he has preached the Gospel to crowds of people, and many have sought the Saviour. During the coming winter arrangements have been made for him to visit Newcastle, Hornsey (London), Birkenhead, Liverpool, and other important centres.

Mr. T. Swanston Smith is paying a brief visit to Scotland. In connection with the Carrubbers Close Mission in Edinburgh he will address the temperance meeting in the large hall on Saturday evening next (28th inst.), take part in the closing of the open-air services on the Calton Hill on Sunday afternoon, and address the evangelistic gathering in the large hall on Sunday night. Mr. Smith will also give the address at the noon prayer-meeting on Monday, and preach the Gospel again in the large hall on Monday evening.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

At Wimbledon the Weaver Brothers have had a fruitful mission. Notwithstanding the wet weather the meetings have been well sustained, and each evening souls have sought the Lord.

The congregations at Harlesden, although not so large as in some other centres, have been most appreciative of the efforts of Mr. Leonard Weaver. Miss Angel has been the soloist, and the meetings proved spiritually helpful.

The enthusiasm with which the Deptford tent was opened has continued night by night. Mr. William Grove's homely addresses have been graciously blessed, and the singing of Madame Annie Ryall has influenced many.

As was anticipated, the extension of the mission at Leyton aroused a large measure of interest, and the missioners were listened to with eager attention. Mr. Chas. Inglis and Mr. R. S. Bradbrook had charge till Friday last. On Saturday Mr. Leonard Weaver delivered a fervent temperance address illustrated by the lantern views. Miss Angel was the soloist. The meetings on Lord's Day, conducted by Mr. J. T. Vine and Mr. R. S. Bradbrook were memorable occasions, a number of decisions being recorded by the workers.

Revival times have been experienced in the Clapham Road tent during the past week. Mr. J. T. Vine's preaching was with power, bringing conviction to many hearts. The singing of Mr. and Mrs. Burton was also effective. On Saturday last Mr. R. S. Bradbrook addressed a large gathering, illustrating the Gospel, and enforcing the principle of total abstinence by a splendid collection of lime-light views. The Weaver Bros. have commenced a week's mission.

Oswestry Tent Mission.

Messrs. G. Bollard and W. Pinches have brought their tent mission at Oswestry to a close after a service which has been carried on throughout the summer season. Numbers of the unconverted have sought the Saviour, and the members of the various churches have been blessed.

The attendances, despite occasional inclemency of the weather, were most encouraging, and at the close of each service the congregation would resolve itself in small groups, and enter in free conversation about the things of God, keeping a particular look-out for any anxious one needing encouragement. Among other instances, a whole family has become converted During the season about forty workers visited the town in order to assist in the meetings, some of them staying for weeks together, and working hard in tract distributing and open-air services, as well as speaking in the tent. An open-air meeting was held each Saturday evening in the centre of the town. T. R. C.

For some weeks Mr. G. J. Comber has been conducting fruitful tent missions at Brentwood, Mountnessing, and Ingatestone. At each place Christians have been blessed, and souls have sought the Saviour. Our hearts are full of praise to God. G. F. B.

At Leven, Fifeshire, Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelization Society, London, has just concluded a fortnight's mission. The Faith Mission workers closed their meetings, and joined in the effort. The tent was crowded on the Sunday evenings, and on week nights there were capital audiences. Great interest was aroused, resulting in deep conviction on the part of many, and in some seeking pardon. A. C.

A month's tent mission, under the auspices of the Free Church Council, has just been concluded at Rushden, Northants. The missioner was Mr. Charles Noakes, of the Evangelization Society. During the first week of the mission the meetings were rather small; but as the evangelist became known the people came in larger numbers, till the tent was crowded even on week nights. Many have been led to accept the Lord Jesus as their Saviour.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission to be held at St. Paul's Church, Stratford, E., November 9-19, conducted by Rev. S. A. Selwyn.

For a mission at Whitefield's Tabernac'e, Tottenham Court Road, N.W., by Mr. W. R. Lane, Sept. 29-Oct. 7.

For blessing upon the Gospel services which are being held every Monday at noon at the Dock Gates, Millwall, E.

For blessing upon a mission to artisans, September 30-October 13, at Mile End Artisans' Y.M.C.A., London, E.

For a mission to young men to be held at the Brighton Y.M.C.A., October 6-13, conducted by Mr. T. A. Bailey, of the Leper Mission.

Praise.

For victory given to Dr. Long in dismissal of the summons brought against him by Limerick Corporation, September 20.

Church of England.

Rev. J. Piper, vicar of St. Paul's, Upper Holloway, has announced that he will shortly be leaving the parish. It is understood that he has been appointed rector of Atlow, Ashbourne, in succession to Rev. H. C. Binns, who is resigning owing to failing health.

In view of the long and distinguished services of Dean Barlow, while vicar of Islington, it is hoped to present him with a testimonial, in recognition of the sterling character of his work. Although the fund is, naturally, promoted by members of the Church of England, it is suggested that those belonging to other bodies may like to take part. The treasurer is Mr. J. Douglass Mathews, 78, Highbury New Park, N.

The Bishop of Ipswich, on Thursday last, opened a Home for Inebriate Women at Hammond Lodge, a roomy house at Terrington, near Kings Lynn. The Home has been established by the Church of England Temperance Society, with the aid of subscriptions from the dioceses of Lincoln, Ely, Norwich, Oxford, and Peterborough, and will accommodate thirty-three patients. There are greenhouses and a garden, and fifteen acres are available for exercise and recreation. Every patient is required to stay at least twelve months.

Congregational.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon is expected to spend the first Sunday of October at Montreal, and then proceed to Toronto, where he will confer with the representatives of Canadian Congregationalism before going on to the National (American) Council at Portland, Maine.

The services of Rev. D. H. Reid have been jointly secured by the Colonial Missionary Society of England and the Home Missionary Society of Canada as a special missioner for the mining districts of British Columbia. He has entered upon his work at Phœnix, the centre of large industrial works.

In connection with Cliftonville Church, Hove (Rev. Ambrose D. Spong), a forward movement was inaugurated a year ago by the opening of Rutland Hall and Schools in the west of the town. The first anniversary of this movement has just been celebrated, when a very gratifying report was presented.

Anniversary services in connection with the prosperous village church at Thatcham, Berks, have been held. Rev. F. Griffith-Jones, B.A., of Balham, preached in the afternoon to a large congregation. The chapel was again well filled for the evening meeting, when Mr. Griffith-Jones delivered a practical and interesting address on "How to make a Happy Church."

Baptist.

Rev. Arthur Sowerby, of the Missionary Society, is returning to his station at Shansi, China. He was the only missionary who escaped the massacre in that province. He will be accompanied by Rev. Joshua Turner.

At a missionary meeting at Yeovil, it was reported that over £100 had been raised locally during the year in behalf of the Society, and this notwithstanding very heavy home claims and the demands of the Twentieth Century Fund.

A meeting has been held at the Mission House, Furnival Street, E.C., to consider the proposal to form a medical auxiliary in connection with the Missionary Society and the Zenana Mission. Dr. Percy Lush presided, and Dr. Herbert Lankester (C.M.S.) gave an interesting account of the medical work of his own Society. Two schemes are to be considered.

Rev. J. H. Moore has handed over to the Baptist Union the church he erected some years ago in Oxford, of which he has been pastor for the past four years. Rev. A. F. Riley, publicly accepting the chapel on behalf of the Union, said that it was a great thing for a minister to go into a neighbourhood and build a church at his own expense, minister in it, and then give the chapel and site to the Baptist Union and say he would stand aside for some young man to come in.

Methodist.

A Wesleyan Mission on the lines of the Central Mission in Manchester has been started in Sheffield. Rev. H. H. May, the appointed missioner, began work on Sunday in the Albert Hall, which has been engaged for Sunday services throughout the winter.

Rev. H. Bramley Hart, Wesleyan Methodist, after thirteen years' work in Paris, has returned to England. In succession to him the Conference have appointed Rev. J. W. Lightley, from Bolton (Bridge Street), a native of South Shields, who has commenced his ministry at the Rue Roquepine Church.

In Trimdon Street, Sunderland, a prosperous Wesleyan mission has been worked, but has been hindered through want of suitable accommodation. A large hall, capable of holding between 600 and 700 people, with other necessary accommodation, and estimated to cost some £5,000, is to be provided, and foundation-stones have been laid.

Mr. Mortimer Menpes, who recently published a book on South Africa, in the course of which he made extraordinary allegations against Wesleyan chaplains with the British troops, while praising the Romanists, has written to Rev. R. W. Allen, saying: "I gave credence to undue information. I am, therefore, the more distressed at the misunderstanding. I regret exceedingly that that chapter was introduced into the book at all."

Presbyterian.

During the summer months, Rev. G. M. Nicol, of Trinity Church, Dudley, has conducted open-air services in various courts, assisted by church members.

Rev. J. G. Train has returned to Norwood after his recent holiday. He preached two stirring sermons and gave an address to the children on the late President McKinley.

At the meeting of Yorkshire Presbytery on the 10th inst., on the motion of Rev. W. Harcus, Convener of the Religion and Morals Committee, the following resolution was agreed to:—"That the Presbytery calls the attention of sessions to the important recommendation of Synod regarding the Million Pledge Crusade of the Free Churches, the intention of which is to secure a million new total abstinence pledges during this, the first year of the new century. The Presbytery earnestly hopes that action in the line of the recommendation of the Synod will be taken, if not already done, without delay by every congregation within its bounds, and instructs the clerk to transmit this resolution to the session clerk of each congregation."

Society of Friends.

A large and deeply interested and sympathetic company of Friends and others gathered at Devonshire House on the 5th inst., to meet the eleven missionaries shortly going out to China, and Herbert F. Standing returning to Madagascar. The floor of the women's meeting-house was comfortably filled; representatives from all Friends' mission stations in London attended in considerable numbers.

Sarah Southall, of Birmingham, has attained her hundredth birthday. Though bedridden for some years, she still has a lively mind, and takes great interest in the affairs of her relations and acquaintances. In a recent letter she said, "I have not been a strong person, and have been laid by with many illnesses, but I believe that taking a teetotal pledge some sixty-five years back has prolonged my life."

The foundation-stone of the new Mission Hall, class-rooms, and coffee-house at Halton, Hastings, was laid by Caleb R. Kemp on the 11th inst, John Armitage presiding. Robert H. Penney, of Brighton, Major-General Luard, Charles Brunger (late superintendent), P. P. Vidler (superintendent of the Adult School), and other friends and neighbours, were also present. The spiritual work is pursued quietly, but with energy, and the mission-hall had become a necessity.

The second anniversary of the Gospel Protestant Mission, Christchurch, Ecclesall Road, Sheffield, was celebrated on September 15-17. On the Lord's Day Mr. Henry Bellamy and Charles J. Brooks preached morning and evening respectively and at a public meeting on September 17, Mr. E. T. Hodgson gave a graphic account of the mission, and said that the work continues to make good progress. The Mission was commenced over four years ago, and it is now eighteen months since the iron church was erected in a central position in Ecclesall Road. All the work of the Mission is undertaken by voluntary workers.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. J. WADE, the immediate successor of Rev. P. Brontë in the living of Haworth, has died at Macclesfield, aged sixty-nine. Mr. Wade, who retired three years ago, held the living of Haworth for thirty-seven years, and it was during his incumbency that the Brontë church was replaced by the present building.—Miss ISABELLA THOBURN, president of Lucknow College for Women and Girls, and sister of Bishop Thoburn.—Aged ninety, Rev. THOMAS ADAMS BAYLEY, of Australia, who was the oldest Free Methodist minister living; he entered the ministry in 1836. Mr. Bayley was at one time well known in this country, and served on the Connexional Committee, as well as occupying the position of president.—Mr. EDWIN PERRY, of Bow, E., a well-known Wesleyan. He first started the Old Ford cause, in a private house. It was afterwards transferred to a schoolroom, and at the present time there is a chapel capable of seating 1,000 people. For many years he had the largest society class in East London.—Rev. JOHN VERNON WILLS, M.A., Oxon., rector of Milstead, Sittingbourne, aged fifty-five.—On September 11, at South Sheen, St. Leonards-on-Sea, Rev. FREDERICK YOUNG, M.A., formerly rector of Pett, Sussex, aged seventy.—At Clifton, on September 15, Rev. J. B. WATSON, late vicar of St. John's, Wimborne. Mr. Watson was very highly esteemed by a large body of friends in Dorsetshire and Gloucestershire. His spirituality of character, consistent maintenance of Evangelical truth, and liberal support of the Lord's work at home and abroad, will long be remembered by all who knew him.—At Belfast, Mr. SAMUEL MCKEOWN, a devoted Christian worker.

Notes & Comments

The Million Pledges Crusade. The large gatherings addressed last week by Dr. Henry were characterized by fitting enthusiasm. But unless enthusiasm crystallizes into substantial monetary help there will be a big deficit, which will seriously cripple the progress of the Crusade. We hope that our readers will rise to the occasion with their accustomed liberality and promptness.

Foundation Truths of the Gospel. For the information of many inquirers, we are glad to be able to announce the immediate publication in volume form of the Essays recently contributed to our columns on Foundation Truths of the Gospel. The book will appear on Monday next, October 7. (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) The pages furnish a succinct statement of Scripture teaching on "those things which are most surely believed among us." From many quarters we have received letters commending the timeliness of the publication, and we sincerely trust that the friends of Evangelical religion will assist in circulating the book. Young people and Christian workers will find it of special service.

The Evangelistic Hymn-Book. Our publishers have just issued a greatly improved edition of The (Halfpenny) Evangelistic Hymn-Book (3s. per 100). A large clear type has been used to meet the needs of elderly people; a number of hymns have been introduced which have not appeared in any previous collection; and we feel assured that the book will commend itself more than ever to Christian workers. There is also a very compact edition with music (1s.), bound in cloth.

The Evangel of the Risen Christ. Many friends will welcome the publication of The Evangel of the Risen Christ, by Mr. Henry Varley. (3s. 6d. Alfred Holness.) The author is well-known as a preacher all over the country. His words have been with power; and in this volume we find a timely message, showing that the true corrective for much error—especially in the directions of Romanism and Ritualism—is to be found in the presentation of truth regarding the Resurrection and the Risen Lord.

The Garden City. The splendid experiment made by Mr. George Cadbury, in building Bournville—an ideal village for working men, in which over-crowding is rendered simply impossible—is evidently destined to have far-reaching results. A "Garden City" Conference has been already established, and a first movement has been made in the direction of removing people from the squalor of large towns into the beautiful surroundings of the country. Mr. Cadbury proves conclusively that his experiment is a boon all round—to master as well as to men. The gain in health and buoyancy to these now country dwellers is immense. With gardens to entice them, working men have no need of the public-house. It is a noble idea, and eminently practical, and we wish the utmost success to the gentlemen who are now occupied with extending the principle to great industrial centres. The country was made by God for man, and it is natural that there should be a return to it.

Grimsby and Penrhyn. It is regrettable to the last degree—if "regrettable" is not far too mild a word—that the disastrous strikes at Grimsby and Penrhyn have endured so long, and have been accompanied, so far as Grimsby is concerned, with scenes of violence. The saddest consequence of all is the terrible suffering which innocent women and children are called upon to bear. The accounts of these given by special correspondents are heartrending. The country cannot afford to endure the shock of these recurring industrial upheavals. They are a menace to our commerce and to our morals. The radical cause of them is, without question, contempt for the Golden Rule. But if individuals ignore this rule, and so bring distress upon a land, ought not the rulers to take some steps to settle differences involving so much wretchedness? We are glad to hear of the virtual termination of the Grimsby trouble.

Purity in Public Office. We had, last week, a most excellent speech from Lord Rosebery upon municipal purity; and almost at the same time, Saxony gave to the world a sharp and salutary lesson upon the need of purity in financial journalism. The financial editors of several leading Saxon newspapers have been peremptorily dismissed from their posts on account of their corruption in misleading the public in financial affairs. A number of small tradesmen and others, misled by false representations, have suffered terribly, and a gloomy prospect is in store for many others. There is, as Lord Rosebery said, terrible temptation for men holding public offices, but it is very serious when the public office of journalism is made the medium of bringing ruin to many people in order that a few may unduly benefit thereby. Saxony is not the only country in which unscrupulous financial editors flourish, and we wish that certain newspaper proprietors nearer home had the courage to follow the noble example of Saxon proprietors in removing from their posts all offenders of this class.

The English Sunday. In an earnest and thorough discussion, at the Oxford Diocesan Conference on Thursday last, an effective point was made by Rev. Canon Ducat relating to the increasing secularization of the Lord's Day. He touched the heart of the matter, so far as it refers to human rest and recreation, by showing that the increase of people's amusements on Sundays was at the expense of other people's labour; that is to say, that one section of the community cared absolutely nothing for the weal of the other section; mean self-interest ruled their minds. It is not too strong, this indictment. Sunday concerts and bands, grand dinner parties, river excursions, railway outings, amusements, &c., all entail a kind of slavery upon servants. Those who live in a whirl on the Sunday obtain no real rest for themselves, and effectually deprive other people of it. The old hateful selfishness is at the bottom of the whole thing. And, always, selfishness is antagonistic towards God and man; hence both God and man are ignored on the Lord's Day.

The Decay of the Week-Night Service. A correspondent in a contemporary makes a strong appeal to ministers to make an effort to revive the "week-night service," which has recently fallen on degenerate days. He claims that ministers are mainly responsible for this, through the perfunctoriness of their preparation, and a tone of depression which should be conspicuously absent from a service meant to uplift and help the tired and often worried people who attend. The music is also usually of the poorest, and the choir conspicuous by its absence; while the meeting is often held at an hour too early for the comfortable attendance of busy people. It is remarkable that in such exceptional cases as have recently occurred of a successful revival in the week-night service, we find that it is held in the church (not the schoolroom behind) with a full choir and organ, and that the minister makes it as important a feature of his work as the Sunday services.

It Ought to be Revived. It may not be possible to follow the same plan everywhere; but something ought unquestionably to be done to rescue so important an institution as the week-night service from the decay that has fallen on it in many places. It is the only purely spiritual opportunity of the week in most modern churches—the Saturday prayer-meeting has already disappeared to a great extent, and it ought to be a rallying point for the aspirations and devotional fervour of the members. Is it a matter of impossibility to devise a form of service which shall satisfy this craving for the things of the Spirit? This is a question worthy of being considered with deep solicitude by all churches and their ministers. But we are not sure that the decline is not traceable to the substitution of the week-night "service" for the week-night "prayer-meeting," which used to be the index of a church's spiritual life.

Modern Preaching—Its Strength and Weakness. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, in speaking recently on modern preaching, pointed out one or two gains and losses in the methods of preachers. One of the gains is the substitution of a natural, humanized style of address, as compared with the formal structure and laboured climaxes of sermons of a generation ago. The losses are more in the substance of the preaching. While the love of God has been preached with a new fervour, many have allowed "the awe of God" to die out of their preaching. If the New Testament is right, God is a consuming fire, and the "terror of the Lord" is as essential an attribute as his pity. This note of warning, of appeal, of agony at the unspeakable consequences of sin, is conspicuous by its absence rather than its emphasis in modern preaching. Are we falling on a day of little things, of mean enthusiasms, of formality, largely owing to the lack of this strenuous note in the pulpit?

Information or Conviction? The Chairman of a Northern Union of Free Churches has been telling his brethren that one of their functions as preachers is to interpret the best literature bearing upon human character and destiny, and that they ought to be students of history, science, and philosophy, since it is more than ever imperative that there should be an informing ministry. Such a ministry, he declared, would lead people to love the Bible—the best of all literature. This is a very common sentiment, but, to our mind, utterly fallacious. A minister's chief business is not to give information in the literary sense; his business is to aim at conviction of sin, and impress the need for the Saviour. Information there must be, but not that mélange of human speculation which so often does duty for the authoritative Word of God. The servants of Christ must, like their Lord, speak with authority if men are to be convicted of sin and need. And that authority comes directly from the Holy Spirit, not through fallible human literature.

"The World Never Moves." Canon Newbolt uttered wise words when speaking of worldly clergymen. He said: "You may talk about meeting the world half way; but the world never moves." This idea of compromise with the secular order and ideal, in order to win it for Christ, has haunted many a reformer; but it has never succeeded. "Every new earth," it has been well said, "comes by way of Heaven." Only from above come the uplifting, purifying, saving forces of life; and they act, not by compromise, but by transformation. "Be not conformed to this world," was the appeal of the Apostle, and it is a word that still rings in the ears of those who would lower the Christian standard, and concede to the "spirit of the age" little or much, in the mistaken hope of a half-way arrangement. It must be all or nothing in the spiritual life.

The Testimony of Christ's Enemies. A recent writer — Miss Joan Mary Fry—in an interesting study of the teaching of the four Gospels in regard to the Divinity of Jesus, incidentally calls attention to a singular fact to which sufficient prominence has not, so far as we know, been given in previous essays of the kind. Miss Fry says:—

> It would seem as if it had been a simple matter for Jesus to tell his disciples who He was, and what He came to do; and yet the most elementary study is sufficient to make us aware that his reserve on these subjects is as striking as his disclosures. The use of the titles, "Son of Man" and "Son of God," is most instructive in showing the non-doctrinal character both of his teaching, and of the records which preserve it. "Son of Man," his own epithet for Himself, is only used by Him, and is not found on the lips of others, with the single exception of Stephen. "Son of God," far from being a constant self-designation, is never in the Synoptists, and only twice in John recorded as his own name for Himself. It is very curious to note that out of the seventeen times that it is found in the first three Gospels, thirteen are occasions when the words come from adversaries or opposers, or in very many cases from demons.

The Test of Reverses. The ability to bear well, and even joyfully, a reverse in life is one of the greatest proofs of the reality of our faith in God. What we call a "calamity" is simply a Father's testing of the value of our confidence in Him. Reverses most clearly reveal whether our attachment is to the accidental things of life, or to the centre of life itself. If the former, the testing time will be followed by fear or anger, an illness, or, in the worst case, the entire repudiation of all religious obligation. If to the latter, then, whatever happens, the soul abides in peace, softly saying to itself, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." It is well for us all to look to the object of our faith, and to be thoroughly assured that we are really trusting in the living God, and not in the gifts which He has granted to us. Our Lord promises his disciples perpetual peace, but solely upon the condition that they perpetually trust Him, and Him alone.

The Omnivorous Reader. We are hearing very much in praise of Free Libraries; but there is a less satisfactory side, of which but little is said. Setting aside the fact that the news-rooms of these institutions are largely used by persons addicted to betting and "sport," and that the circulating departments issue to the public thousands of novels of a silly, and in many cases of a positively objectionable, type—injury is done in other ways. A famous American author has recently wisely said:—

> The Free Libraries tempt us to read too much and oblige us to read too hastily. . . . Our excessive reading may be a vice or a mania; it is certainly a disease. The way to literary health is through the ownership of the books we read, and books are now so cheap that hardly anyone who loves them need deny himself. . . . When you have them in your heart and head, you may put them on your shelf, secure that, whatever misfortune befalls you, your property in them cannot be wholly alienated.

Education and Crime. There is some food for serious reflection in the annual report, just issued, of the Prison Commissioners. A pleasing thing about the report is the falling off in the number of convicted prisoners. This is something to be thankful for. There were nearly 5,000 less sentences last year than in the previous one. The sad thing is to find a marked increase in the use of foul and abusive language by convicts. All sense of decency seems lost by many of the men. The chaplain of Dartmoor prison thus accounts for it:

> I may be wrong, but the conviction is forcing itself upon me that one of the causes of crime is the faulty and unsuitable character of our present system of education. The one and sole idea seems to be to turn lads out of school equipped for the requirements of every day life; in a word, to make them sharp business men.
> The question of moral training occupies no place in the curriculum of the most modern educational system.

Here is the root of the whole matter. The country will find out one day at what price it has excluded the fear of God from the education of its youth.

Remedial Measures. The most gratifying portion of the Prisons report, however, is that which points to the wider adoption of remedial treatment. A special prison will now be set apart for the reception of prisoners between sixteen and twenty-one years of age, who will be collected from other gaols and submitted to reformatory agencies, one of these being the new Association of Visitors. A "State Inebriate Reformatory" for women also has been opened, and a prison at Warwick will be utilized for male drunkards. These unhappy inebriates possibly would not have required accommodation at the cost of the taxpayer if the Government had commenced at the right end, by dealing with the cause. A Reformatory for the Brewer and Distiller would be better still.

Extended London. The programme of the London United Electric Tramways Company, involving, when their scheme is in full operation, fifty-eight miles of transit, points to the only solution of the housing problem that has a chance of success. In the body social, as in the body physical, congestion of the centre can only be relieved by withdrawing the blood to the extremities. We wish, however, that some restraining influence could be placed upon the all-day Sunday traffic, which is certainly an instance of supply creating demand, and not vice versâ. It is important, too, that the Christian Church should keep an eye on the new suburbs, and at once secure land for the erection of buildings in prominent spots. The brewers and publicans are always well ahead of time in the matter of securing first-class sites.

The Third Commandment. Along with that objectionable freedom of manners and decline of courtesy which have developed in our midst of late years, there has been a lamentable growth of the habit of swearing. In public conveyances and in public places, it is now only too frequently the case that the ears are offended by persons who pollute even their ordinary conversation with shocking, and even blasphemous words and phrases. It is satisfactory therefore to notice that the Middlesex County Council has passed a bye-law against the use of bad language in public places, and that offenders have recently been summoned and fined. The East Ham Council have instructed their tram conductors to expel such offenders from the cars; but, as the offence is a punishable one, it is to be hoped that not only they and the authorities throughout the country, but also private individuals, will take steps to check a practice which is both offensive and sinful.

The White Slave Traffic. The horrible system by which young women are cajoled abroad under false promises of employment, only to find themselves trapped for immoral purposes, is rousing the European Governments to something like concerted action for its suppression. So far it has been found impossible to define in which country the legal offence involved in the traffic has been committed. A conference is in progress having for its aim a working international law, or agreement, which will remove this difficulty, and enable the representatives of law and order to track down the culprits in any European country. This disgraceful traffic has been going on for years, to the moral and spiritual destruction of thousands of innocent women, and it is high time that it should be visited with prohibitive punishments.

Immigrant Refugees. One of the incidental effects of the attitude of the French Government towards the religious orders is a considerable influx of monks and nuns into this country. Already a large number have arrived, and more are coming. At present they are refugees, ignorant of the language, and of all English ways and ideas. Such an immigration, however, in times gone by, has more than once resulted in active propagandism, and it is not unlikely that, if these refugees are forced to remain, they may ultimately inaugurate a campaign for the "conversion of England." In view of the insidious manner in which these orders have always carried on their work of proselytism, the nation would do well to be watchful of our visitors, while showing them personal courtesy as refugees from their own land.

The Logic of Conscience.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

CONSCIENCE has a method of reasoning quite as clear and conclusive as that of the intellect; once grant the postulates, and you are driven, or drawn, to an inevitable conclusion. We may call the process mental, but it is prompted, guided, and ended by the force of conscience, which will give no peace, save as it is obeyed step by step. Admit the great Christian truths that God loves all men, that He gave his Son to be the propitiation for their sins, and that He is not willing that any should perish, and as sure as any demonstration in Euclid come the various steps by which men are emancipated from every evil. The simple ethical commands of the Gospel also all propel the conscience in the direction to which its great principles and facts point. If reformers only knew it, the old and familiar words of Scripture, by which the Christian mind is enlightened, contain the germs of all progress.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS AND SLAVERY.

I know of no instance in which the steady advance of conscience from point to point is so clearly seen as in the deliverance of the Society of Friends from all complicity with slavery in America. In the eighteenth century large numbers of slaves were owned by Friends, and when, in 1714, a feeling of uneasiness arose concerning it, a Yearly Meeting could not be persuaded to do more than give an expression of opinion adverse to the importation of Negroes from Africa; "yet this was only caution, and not censure." In 1727 the practice was censured, though it was still continued by some. In 1758 it was prohibited. Then came the inevitable question of dealing in slaves, and of holding slaves at all, and the Christian conscience declared against both, and prompted a measure of manumission, accompanied by a sufficient provision for those set free. Conscience, moved by tenderness towards both slaves and slave-owners, kept pressing its demands, and in 1776 "the subordinate meetings were directed to deny the right of membership to such as persisted in holding their fellow men as property." Some Friends were disowned for not complying with this advice. The next requirement of this inexorable Christian conscience was that compensation should be given—not to the masters—but to the freed slaves by their former masters for their past services! Any former slaveholder who refused to comply with the award of committees appointed to fix the amount of compensation, should, "after due care and labour with him, be disowned from the Society." "This was effectual; settlements without disownment were made to the satisfaction of all parties, and every case was disposed of previous to the year 1787." Conscience finally brought this Christian society to the only logical, safe, and abiding conclusion; and after that event the members became consistent and powerful apostles of emancipation, and, as was sure to be the case, were listened to with respect. When allowed to speak and act, conscience will never rest short of absolute consistency.

THE DRINK QUESTION.

For two generations the consciences of a large number of English Christians have been troubled about the drunkenness of the English nation, but, hitherto, no advance has been made beyond the position of persuading individuals to become abstainers, and securing some improvements in the licensing laws. But this falls far short of what conscience will require and ultimately obtain. The connection between the Church of Christ, which should be without spot and blameless, and the drink traffic, which is saturated with moral pollution, is becoming intolerable. It is a scandal to Christianity that a system so destructive of everything good, so gigantic, so dangerous to the State, so opposed to the extension of the Kingdom of God in the earth, should have been allowed to grow up to its present dimensions, and should be tolerated from year to year. It gives even the enemy cause to blaspheme, for he can see that if Christianity were properly applied to life, if only to the life of the Church, this monstrosity would ultimately be removed. It cannot be reconciled with the spirit and precepts of the Gospel. Though no express command has been spoken against drinking intoxicating liquors, yet their use as a beverage by men who profess to love their fellows wounds the conscience and raises a protest.

WHERE SHALL THE CHURCH BEGIN?

If among her own members the Church is to accomplish any reform, where is she to begin? Conscience points, in the first instance, to the trader, the man who manufactures, the man who sells, the man who makes gain, and says that he ought not to be allowed to hold office in the Church. It is revolting, or is becoming so, to the feeling of the Church, that anyone who bears the honoured name of Christian should be promoting a trade which is ruining and destroying in perdition thousands upon thousands of souls every year. His hands cannot be clean. He has intimate fellowship with the works of darkness and with the workers of iniquity. He is a stumbling block in the way of God's little children.

I am reminded of the case of a Church member, a brewer, who, with mistaken kindness, persuaded a fellow member, a widow, to take charge of a public-house for a living. At the end of a year she returned the key, saying, "Well, sir, you may be able to be a Christian and have a brewery, but I cannot be a Christian and keep a public-house." Is it not time the Church said to all makers and sellers and shareholders, "You cannot be office bearers of any sort"? The individual conscience has in numerous instances compelled men to give up the trade, to withdraw from breweries and distilleries, and refuse grocers' licences; and even, as lawyers, decline to invest money in the trade for clients, and IT SEEMS REASONABLE THAT THESE SHOULD NOW BE SUPPORTED BY THE CONSCIENCE OF THE WHOLE CHURCH.

Of course, it would sooner or later be required, for consistency's sake, that the members should also not be users of drink. The Divine logic would not stop short of that. But, in the meantime, it must be remembered that all along the line, in the fight against custom, love of gain, pride, appetite, and indifference, there will be constant need for patience and gentleness and love. We have brothers to convince and win; and we must give "due care and labour" to do it. But we cannot wait for ever. As the gentle "caution" of the Friends passed into "censure" and "prohibition" and "denial of membership," so will it have to be in the near future. Then will come a day of glorious prosperity.

Homeless Little Ones.—Those who labour among the poor, or have to do with rescue agencies, know how deeply the need is felt for such institutions as the Haven for Homeless Little Ones. The work of Mrs. Ransome Wallis at Castle House, Walton-on-the-Hill, Surrey, has long been acknowledged by a wide circle of Christian friends, and her efforts in a sad sphere of service have been abundantly rewarded. The excessive mortality among illegitimate children is, in many cases, the result of neglect—frequently wilful and criminal. Through the "Haven," numbers of little ones have survived the perils of infancy, while mothers have been saved from deeper sin and ruin. Copies of the annual report will be gladly forwarded on application to Mrs. Wallis.

Churches and Evangelists.

"IS the rightful mission of the Evangelist to the churches or to the world?" This question was raised at the Evangelists' Conference last week, and it was evident that opinion was divided. We should say he is sent to both; and that his work is to bring the Gospel message home to the unconverted wherever they are found—in the churches or outside them. Doubtless one evangelist is specially fitted to reach "outsiders," and another can obtain a hearing in the churches which would be denied to his brother.

That the churches often do not understand the evangelist, is as true as that, in many cases, he does not understand them. In some instances, we fear neither has a great desire to understand the other. Happily of late years the spirit of evangelism has greatly increased amongst Nonconformist churches; and who are the men who are sought after to conduct evangelistic missions? Those who for years have had to bear up against the covert, or more or less open, scorn of churches, which

HAVE NOT BELIEVED IN EVANGELISM

—after the manner of a Methodist bishop at the Œcumenical Conference the other day, who said, "The evangelical specialist is my horror!" But the time has come now for a bringing together of the churches and the evangelist, and the position and the worth of the latter is being more and more recognized. It will be well, therefore, if he study the conditions, so that he may wisely use the opportunity to the full. An evangelist who proclaims himself as indifferent or antagonistic to the interests of the churches will find his work greatly limited as to its permanence.

The greatest weakness of evangelism has been its

INABILITY TO NURTURE THE CONVERTS.

For this reason, if for no other, it needs the support of the churches, and one of the most hopeful features of the case to-day is that the latter are waking up to their duty in this respect—and it is time they did.

Some time ago there was a really remarkable work of God in a certain district of London, the notable feature being the ingathering of scores of working-men, with their wives and families. But a godly minister in the neighbourhood remarked to us: "We ministers are in despair; for there is not one of our churches here in which these converts would feel at home." It was a sad reflection upon the conditions of church life, and upon congregations who were so occupied with their own spiritual comfort, that they could not care for the wanderers being gathered in.

We cannot altogether ignore, much as we may deplore it, the undoubted in our midst. Nor is this one-sided, for the working-man, even if converted, is quite as ill at ease in an average middle-class church or chapel as are the seat-holders at his presence. It seems as if there must be places and forms of worship which shall be suited to varied classes. The domestic servant prefers not to attend the same place of worship as her master or mistress, and people of all classes will go where they feel at home. It seems to us, therefore, that the churches' duty is to provide accommodation, whether in subsidiary mission halls or otherwise, for all classes of converts. Every church should have its own mission hall. On the other hand, the evangelist should work in harmony with the churches, lest the results of his work be scattered and lost.

Compromising with Brewers.

DEEP interest attaches to an experiment which is being made in Birmingham, with a view to obtaining a substantial reduction in the number of public-houses. It is frankly admitted by the licensing justices that there were too many such houses in the city; and they recently asked the brewers concerned to consider a scheme of voluntary surrender, but without success.

The police authorities then felt compelled to take decisive action, and formally objected to the renewal of the licences for 105 houses situated within three well-defined areas, the ground of objection in every case being that the licence was not required to supply the wants of the neighbourhood.

Matters having been thus brought to a head, the next proposal appears to have come from the brewing interest; and has led to the appointment of a joint commission consisting of three justices and three brewers, Mr. Arthur Chamberlain (chairman of the licensing justices) being chairman, with a casting vote in case of disagreement. This commission is to inquire into the circumstances of each licence within the specified areas; and an undertaking has been given by the Birmingham Property Company that every condemned licence will be absolutely surrendered.

This commission has, of course, no legal authority, and the justices have declared their intention, should it fail in securing the object in view, to resume their full and absolute powers of withdrawing licences. We may expect to see the experiment, if successful, repeated in other directions, and none familiar with the more degraded areas of our large cities can view such a result with any feeling save satisfaction. Yet the arrangement is a compromise peculiarly beset with danger, and it is well to consider the far-reaching nature of some of the consequences involved.

(1) It introduces the principle of compensation, and practically admits a right in this respect which justices, with power only to grant licences from year to year, cannot legally exercise, and which is opposed to the real sentiment of the country.

(2) It assumes that the brewers have a right to consultation in regard to licences. If this were once admitted, even for the sake of an immediate diminution of licences, the chief aim of temperance reform might by that very admission be indefinitely postponed.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

It is satisfactory to find the chairman of the licensing authorities of a great city examining personally into the true condition of the worst districts; but Mr. Arthur Chamberlain appears, to some extent at least, to put the effect before the cause, when he declares his conviction that it is impossible to expect any material diminution of drinking while the conditions of life remain as they are. The Christian worker, who penetrates not only into such districts, but into the houses, can testify that in many cases the necessity for living amid such surroundings has been produced by intemperate habits, and these have been fostered by the shameful extent to which the temptation to drink is forced upon the people.

Mr. Chamberlain feels very strongly the restrictions by which licensing justices are limited, and has tabulated three necessary and simple alterations in the law: (1) No licence should be granted without the consent of the committee, and beer licences under acts before 1869 (of which there are many in Birmingham) should be put on the same footing as others. (2) All clubs selling intoxicants should be licensed and regulated. (3) No appeal should lie from the decision of the local committee. If local authorities would press forward a measure dealing with these points, it would be loyally supported by temperance advocates, and would be more likely to obtain the support of the Government than if proposed by the recognised temperance party.

But at the best this consultation with the brewers is a risky experiment. Will Satan cast out Satan?

A Triple Call to Faith.

(2 Thess. 2, 15, 16.)

By Rev. W. T. TURPIN, M.A., Eastbourne.

"STAND FAST."

THIS is the divine rallying-voice to faith at all times, but it comes with special force and persuasiveness to us whose lot is cast in days of darkness and difficulty on all sides. The very opposite to this voice marks the temper and spirit of our times. To abandon the very foundations of the faith, to surrender them into the hands of the enemy, suits well an ease-loving age in which the martyr-spirit that burned so brightly in the bosoms of a great crowd of witnesses of former days is sadly absent.

Let us ever thank God for the message "in the Lord" as we have it in Phil. iv. 1. Here, indeed, is solid rock and sure foundation; come what may, the blessed words, "Thou remainest," and "Thou art the same," assure faith of the abiding and unchanging blessed ness of all that He is in the glory of his Person. What a grand mistake they make, who regard things seen and material, even at their best, as forming any resting place for the heart! Alas, how substantial to many is the land of shadows, and how eagerly these are pursued, though with the inevitable result of continual weariness and vexation of spirit.

In the case of the Christians at Thessalonica, these words were intended to have a special force, because of what the Apostle had written concerning the Antichrist—"the lie" in which all previous delusions of Satan will be consummated; in view of this, the Holy Ghost, through the Apostle, says "Stand firm." But we also have another word, viz.,

"HOLD FAST."

This word "hold" is emphatic; the great aim of the enemy is to induce us to surrender the faith; his plea and pretext is varied and suited to each particular time and occasion; but the object is alike in all. Here we have also a striking proof of how the Word of God contemplated all time, and was not in anywise exhausted in its primary and especial application to the event or circumstances which called it forth. That which is calculated most of all to endear it to the affections of the people of God, is its relation to Christ. He is the centre of the circle of truth; apart from Him it may become but the ideas of some idolized teacher, accepted as some new and "clearer light," or as it has been designated, "advanced truth," this being in reality the bait which covers Satan's hook, the wile by which he deceives and entraps.

That which we are here exhorted to hold fast, is found in the pages of the precious Word of God; what a priceless blessing to us in this "day of puny little man" (see 1 Cor. iv. 3, ανθρωπινης ἡμερας), is God's most holy Word. What a mercy to be delivered from the snare of handing over both faith and conscience into the custody of elevated dust! What a mercy to be delivered from a surrender of our loyalty to Christ, and our individual responsibility in respect of his Word, to any man or body of men, whatever their assumption be, either as to extra piety or critical learning. A keeper of conscience and guide of conduct would soon plunge us in the meshes of a net of bondage, worse even than that of Rome.

There is the greater need just now to press this point upon Christian men and women, by reason of the fatal tendency in the direction of man exaltation, not exceeded in the history of the professing Church. Those who formerly denounced in no measured terms, the commonest respect for any ecclesiastical office, now wildly embrace it under another name. What God in his grace has given us is well worth our tenaciously holding fast. "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation, so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not required of any man that it should be believed as an article of the faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation" (Articles of Religion, vi.).

"HIMSELF."

How true it is that "if there be a blessing in the world besides the Lord Himself in grace, it is to have God's Word as He Himself has given it to us, like that Lord Himself, which is divine and heavenly, but perfectly suited and adapted to man, and to the heart of man." Our last word is one of sweet and affectionate import: "Our Lord, Jesus Christ Himself"; and the word "Myself," so frequently uttered by our Lord, and in such tender associations and connections. For example, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself" (John xiv. 3). How comforting must that word have been in the ears of those whose troubled hearts the blessed Lord thus cheered and encouraged.

Then when his great atoning work was finished, and He was risen from the dead, we find it is just the same. In Luke xxiv. 39, there is a record of how He reassures his poor disciples in these words: "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I Myself." And now, while his faithful people wait in expectancy, and eagerly look for the break of day and morning dawn, the hope which cheers them and brightens up the dark yet far-spent night of his absence, is just the same, viz., "the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout" (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17).

Yet what power is in that word "Himself!" While passing through the fiery trials of life, we have with us "Himself." When cast out and despised by the world, we have "Himself;" when slighted and even disowned by our fellow disciples, we have Himself; and thus, whatever may be our position, or lot, with Himself as our all, we can say in the beautiful words of dear Miss F. R. Havergal:

But with Him—Oh, with Jesus!
Are any words so blest?
With Jesus everlasting joy,
And everlasting rest!
With Jesus—all the empty heart
Filled with his perfect love;
With Jesus—perfect peace below,
And perfect bliss above.

Harvest Festival.

Thou crownest the year with thy goodness.

O God of Heaven, whose mighty hand
Hath laid earth's deep foundations;
Whose lightnings run at strong command,
Whose clouds drop rich oblations:
We magnify thy majesty,
We marvel at thy splendour,
In rev'rent awe we bow the knee,
Great Maker and Defender!

But not as Lord of power and might
Thy trembling creatures bless Thee,
In closest bond, by purchased right,
As "Father" they address Thee.
No thrills of dread assail their breast,
No breath of chill despair;
Their human hearts find deep'ning rest
In love, and trust, and prayer.

Thy Fatherhood hath crowned our days
With mercies new each morning,
Thy streams, the air, thy sun's warm rays,
Earth's quickening and adorning.
We count the stars—thy blessings far
Exceed their hosts unending;
By grace we have, through grace we are,
Love ever o'er us bending.

Apart from Thee we plant in vain
Each root and seed upspringing;
The early and the latter rain,
Abundant fruitage bringing.
Thine ancient promises avail,
Thy faithfulness still reigneth,
Seed time and harvest never fail,
Nor shall—while earth remaineth.

Accept our homage, gracious Lord
Of thankful adoration!
For harvest gifts in love outpour'd
O'er every land and nation.
May we be golden grain, what time
The Angel Reapers gather
The Sheaves of Christ from every clime,
Rejoicing to the Father.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

THE fervour with which the Million New Pledges Crusade is being taken up in various parts of the country affords strong confirmation of the view that the time is ripe for a combined movement in the interests of temperance.

The meetings of the past week have been remarkable for their large attendances and enthusiasm, and some hundreds of pledges have been secured. The Provinces have caught the generous flame kindled in the Metropolis, and there is every prospect of Rev. Dr. Henry's campaign surpassing the most hopeful anticipations that had been formed.

EXETER HALL.

Following the reception to Dr. Henry in the Lower Exeter Hall on Tuesday, September 24, a public meeting was held in the large hall, Alderman G. White, M.P., of Norwich, presiding. After Rev. F. B. Meyer had led in prayer, the Chairman said that the campaign had begun with the promise of rich fruit. The country is being stirred to a fresh realization of the iniquity of the traffic, and the movement will doubtless have a stimulating effect upon our legislators.

After some hearty words from Mr. J. T. Sears, J.P., describing the progress of the campaign, Dr. Henry gave a powerful address. At the outset, he said that the ravages of the drink traffic ought to fire every Christian heart to do battle with this monstrous iniquity of the modern world; the prime evil of the home, of religion, and of the State. To combat it, the Churches must unite their forces, and then, colossal as its power may be, by the blessing of God it shall be destroyed. "The things that have hitherto divided must be subordinated; instead of emphasizing points of difference, we must emphasize those of agreement, and, if there can possibly be one burning question upon which unity is possible, it must surely be that of strong drink. We need, too, to create a public sentiment by turning light upon the public-house, so that the people may truly understand its relations to crime, profanity, Sabbath desecration, impurity, and many other terrible evils. If the people can only be brought to realize the ravages of strong drink, they will rise up, as with a besom of destruction, and sweep it from the land."

"VOTING THE DRAMSHOP OUT."

Proceeding, Dr. Henry pleaded for a better use of the voting powers of the Christian citizen, in order to secure the election, both in local and national councils, of "sane, sober men." In America, owing largely to the energy which has been put into this important department of work, magnificent progress is being made with the principle of local option. In New York State, more than one-third of the cities have "voted the dram-shop out," and remarkable developments of a similar nature are reported from Georgia, Mississippi, and other States, while it is beyond dispute that the most prosperous of all the States in the Union are those which place the most powerful restraints on the traffic.

WOMEN AND THE TRAFFIC.

In America, women seldom visit the drinking saloons, and barmaids are unknown; yet out of 10,000 murders committed under the Stars and Stripes, over 3,000 were those of women, killed by their drunken husbands. Not one State allows children to enter a dram-shop; in New York the age limit is eighteen years. The need of legislation is still greater in Britain for the defence of the wives, the mothers, and the children of the land.

In a telling peroration, Dr. Henry set forth reasons both from the Christian and the patriotic standpoints for joining the ranks of British abstainers, who are already seven millions strong. "If you are a Christian, sign the pledge for your Lord's sake, since He can never be King while alcohol reigns. The Union Jack represents wonderful power, and that power entails heavy responsibility. May the time come when the national flag shall no longer float above a public-house!"

Dr. Henry's address was listened to with eager attention throughout. The Fisk Jubilee Singers again rendered valuable help by their delightful singing of "Do you think I'd make a soldier?" "He arose," and other characteristic hymns from their rich repertory.

QUEEN'S HALL.

The chairman of the afternoon gathering at Queen's Hall, on Thursday, was Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, who voiced the sympathy of the Church of England, and brought an encouraging message from the Archbishop of Canterbury, in which Dr. Temple wished all prosperity to the crusade.

After Mr. Robert Scott had pointed out the need for increased interest in the financial side of the Campaign, Dr. Henry gave a powerful address, contending that the total resources of Christianity must be brought to bear upon the drink evil. He enlarged, with cogency and force, upon four reasons for this: (1) For self-preservation. "Unless England conquers the drink, the drink will conquer England." Moreover, from all parts of the world the difficulties in the way of securing conversions to Christ, and the degradation and spiritual unconcern of the masses, are attributed by the best of the pastors, missionaries, and evangelists, to the benumbing and baneful influences of strong drink. (2) For liberty. The object of the great and beneficial revolutions and reformations in the records of the human race was to set men free, physically, mentally, spiritually, but the public-house is the foe of liberty and the fruitful source of unheard-of bondage. We must have freedom to do right, and, if the drink curse stands in the way, as it does, then it must be swept away. (3) For the love of humanity. "I remember that Jesus Christ hung upon Golgotha's brow that all might be saved. We therefore love the publican, but we hate his business, and seek to save him from its befouling influence. It is a business whose history is written in blood, in lost souls, in endless agony. If we are to save the victims, if we are to make Christ King, we must unite to destroy the shameful trade." (4) For love of country. A sincere desire for the national welfare should inspire us to labour for the deliverance of Britain from the snares and woes created by the drink traffic.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

The meeting in the evening, in St. James's Hall was of an equally encouraging nature, the proceedings being under the presidency of Rev. Thos. Champness. The Fisk Jubilee Singers were in attendance, and delighted the audience. The Chairman, in a brief address, remarked that he was glad to know that America could send the help which England greatly needs in fighting the drink evil. We are face to face with many difficulties, for we have made so many blunders. The Englishman requires to be knocked down several times before he knows that he is fighting. We have a strongly organized foe to fight, and courage must be brought to the task. We must be prepared to deny self and expose ourselves to jeers and sneers. God will some day laugh over the destruction of his foes. All the enemies of God and righteousness shall yet bow in the dust, and among them the liquor traffic.

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

Dr. Henry met with a cordial reception, and delivered a characteristic and vigorous address. He spoke of the formation of the Anti-Saloon League of New York State, and the remarkable results which have followed these combined efforts to arouse the Churches to assume the responsibility of contending with the drink evil. So great has been the progress of the organization that there are now nearly 300 persons devoting their time to prosecuting the work of the League. Dr. Henry again emphasized the fact that the time has come for the Christian Church to be made the home of an intelligent campaign against the drink. The people of God must accept the responsibility for the success or failure of temperance reform. Christians must adopt this work as part and parcel of the service they owe to God. To command success, the crusade must be interdenominational, for no one sect or party can fight the evil alone.

Passing to the question of supporting temperance movements, the speaker urged the importance of Christians giving heartily towards the suppression of the dram-shop. Dr. Henry closed a moving appeal with the words of David: "Through God we shall do valiantly, for He it is that shall tread down our enemies."

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon and his Church have contributed largely to the success of the campaign in London. No fewer than four public meetings have been held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, in addition to a Sunday evening service, and on each occasion Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers were accorded a warm greeting. At the meeting on Friday afternoon last, Sir George Williams presided over a large and sympathetic audience.

Dr. Henry's message was founded on Ezekiel xix. 1-9, particularly the words, "It became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men." Such a lion is the drink traffic; it "devours men." Proceeding, Dr. Henry described the gorgeous drink palaces of America, the haunt of the wicked and profligate. In one city may be found apartments fitted up for and known as "kids' saloons," where boys and girls learn to drink, smoke, and gamble. The drink traffic brutalizes and degrades. From the prisons of the world the voice of the inmates declares that nine-tenths of their number are there through strong drink. From the workhouse and the asylum the same testimony meets us. Moreover, more than half the criminals of the world are under twenty-five years of age; the nations are thus bereft of their youth, suffering more from the ravages of drink than from famine, fire, and plague.

Taking the words, "Then the nations set against him on every side," as the foundation of a plea for concord and co-operation, Dr. Henry went on to urge that unity is the first necessity in temperance reform. "All the moral forces, upon whose ranks inroads are being made by the devouring beast, must come together." Dr. Henry illustrated his point by a vivid description of an American wolf-hunt, in which settlers from all countries, of all grades of society, of all denominations, united to destroy the wolves that threatened their homes. "Union and advance are necessary, because we are loyal to Jesus Christ. Let us work, then, to end the reign of King Alcohol. We may take courage, in spite of the overwhelming opposition, in spite of the wealth and political strength of the public-house interest, for, over against its vast powers, we have—God. The Infinite and Almighty, whose plan shall prevail, is with us.

At night, Rev. F. B. Meyer presided, and again commended the Crusade to the prayers and encouragement of his hearers. Dr. Henry's address was clear and convincing.

SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE.

Rev. W. Cuff's well-known church in East London was crowded on Saturday night last. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided, and among others who took part was Mr. G. Noakes, who attacked the drink traffic with characteristic force.

Dr. Henry, who followed, addressed himself first to the economic aspect of the question more especially as it affects working men; and, secondly, he appealed to Christian people. No industry pays such a poor return to the working man as the drink trade; the enormous sum of £160,000,000 sterling is invested in the traffic, and only 1 or 2 per cent. goes into the pockets of the labourer.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE HALL.

The two services held at Mildmay on last Lord's Day were thronged. At night the crowd was so great that many were unable to gain admission. Colonel Morton presided both afternoon and evening. Dr. Henry's addresses made a deep impression upon the people, who listened with profound attention.

On Monday afternoon Mr. B. Broomhall, who presided, drew lessons of encouragement from his long and useful labours in the cause, and appealed with directness and vigour for a general and whole-hearted effort on the part of Christian people to deal effectively with the traffic. Dr. Henry, in spite of the exhausting character of Sunday's services, gave another impassioned address that called forth enthusiastic approval. In the evening the people commenced to throng into the building immediately the doors opened, and some time prior to the commencement of the meeting the capacious building was filled. Colonel Morton, speaking from the chair, referred in terms of cordial sympathy to the aims of the crusade; and Mr. Robert Scott, who followed, pointed out that the campaign, in order to be maintained on the scale which is necessary, should be afforded liberal financial support.

Dr. Henry's address was full of hope for the future. With point and acumen he marshalled many facts that are rich with encouragement for the temperance worker. He set forth the testimony of many responsible people in various departments of life, regarding them as a "jury" to try strong drink. Among the "jurors" included were: The insurance actuary, the railroad manager, the banker, the gaol governor, "Mr. Modern Science," a representative Christian woman, and the athlete. The verdict of all is, "Abstain." Dr. Henry concluded by enumerating some names of the great men of England and America who have declared against alcohol, and concluded with a noble and pathetic call to his hearers to forsake the drink and unite to counteract the degrading and demoralizing evil.

The Housing Problem.

In no direction of social reform has more satisfactory progress been made in recent years than in that of the housing of the working classes. The conference of the Garden City Association, held at Birmingham September 20 and 21, has given to the world an object lesson in what has been done in one district, and may be done in others. Meeting on the opening day in the heart of the crowded city, the next day was spent at Bournville, and the delegates saw some of the features of the community which Messrs. Cadbury had founded round about their cocoa and chocolate manufactory. Mr. George Cadbury, who recently made over the model village with its trim garden-girt dwellings, almshouses, recreation grounds, &c., to a body of trustees, to be preserved for all time to the common weal, conducted the visitors over the estate, and entertained them at luncheon.

The whole property, worth, perhaps, £170,000, has been handed over to a public trust, and the income, already amounting to £6,000 a year, will be spent in building more cottages and acquiring more land. There are 200 applicants on the books for houses, and the trust is steadily building to meet the demand. It is a "snowball" institution, which must go on getting bigger and bigger. Its income grows at compound interest.

At the final session Earl Grey presided, and the first paper was contributed by Mr. Ralph Neville, K.C., who discussed the practicability of co-operative creation of garden-cities. He spoke of the physical and social evils arising from the crowding of the population into great towns, and of the difficulty caused by the enhanced value of space, which was in the hands of private owners. The remedy he proposed was:—

The purchase, at agricultural prices, of land for a city.

The retention, for the benefit of the community, of the increased value of the land created by the community.

The permanent restriction of the area to be covered by buildings.

He further maintained that the presence of a large population in the centre of an agricultural estate would ensure alike the fertilization of the land and the disposal of its products. He admitted the scheme would require a large sum of money to start it; but he believed the money provided would prove to be safely invested at 4 or 5 per cent., while the project would, if successful, render an incalculable service to the Empire. The lines laid down for the garden-city, Mr. Neville mentioned, allowed five persons to the acre.

In a paper on the advantages of co-operative dwellings, Mr. H. Clapham Lauder urged that the establishment of homes containing private sleeping and sitting rooms and common dining room, kitchen, reading, and recreation rooms, bath room, &c., would not only effect a great reform over the present wasteful and inefficient system of household economy, but would be helpful to the social life.

The Chairman said he had been haunted by visions of the degeneration of Englishmen, through the conditions of town life, and the pernicious effect of our industrial system, whereby the worker was a hireling and not a partner; and by the thought that there were thousands and thousands of his fellow-countrymen who had no place to which they could go to escape from the dull monotony or unsavoury surroundings of their life, save the public-house. His visit to Bournville had blown away those nightmares. He saw a light on the mountain-top.

Christianity the True Religion.—I see many contrary religions, all of which must be false but one. Each of them claims credit upon its own authority, and deals out its threatenings against all who disbelieve it. I do not, therefore, take them at their word. For they can all do alike in this respect just as every man can call himself a prophet. But in Christianity I see the accomplishment of prophecies, and an infinite number of miracles, attested beyond all reasonable doubt, and these I find in no other religion.—Pascal.

The Bible League.

Sir,—On behalf of the Council of the Bible League, may I be permitted to say a word as to the special object of our mission?

We do not exist either simply or mainly for the purpose of controversy or conflict with the Higher Criticism and its allies. While one great purpose of our organization is to expose and to resist the varied attacks made upon the inspiration and infallibility of the Holy Scriptures, it is by no means the only purpose. We hold strongly that controversy is of no avail in the service of truth, unless preeminently spiritual in its nature and methods. Mere argument, or pugilistic attack, avail nothing in the warfare of faith—they are not parts of the panoply of God. The Spirit of Christ, both in the objective and subjective sense, must be in those who take the position of defenders of the faith, otherwise their very advocacy of the truth may be turned into a hurtful channel, and become destructive, rather than helpful, to the cause espoused. We are desirous of being understood to exist as a League wholly for spiritual purposes, and to be bent on using none but spiritual means for their accomplishment.

We do not attack men, but false principles and erroneous teachings, adopted and promulgated by them; and we do this, not in the spirit of antagonism or ill-will, but of love and jealous concern for

THE WORD AND WORK OF GOD.

It is a source of deep sorrow to us that in the prosecution of our work we are oft constrained to place ourselves in opposition to some whom, apart from their lamentable attitude to the Book of God, we respect and admire. Their position in relation to the destructive criticism of Old and New Testament alike is, to us, a matter of wonder and surprise; and to have to point out the inconsistency and dangerous effect of their position is a real cause of sadness and regret. That we are placed, on such points, hors de combat with them is a matter of necessity, not of choice. The result of the admissions made, and the course taken of late years in reference to Bible criticism, is more disastrous than can be declared.

The coming autumn and winter present many openings for our work, and we are looking forward with faith and hope to a vigorous and successful campaign. Will your readers kindly give us a place in their prayers, and, as the Lord may direct, co-operate with us at a time when so much is done to lower the tone of reverence and faith in reference to the Holy Book?—Faithfully yours,

W. Fuller Gooch, Hon. Sec.

The Children's Home.

Many will hear with satisfaction of the continued advance of the Children's Home and Orphanage, which was founded by Rev. Dr. Bowman Stephenson. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Walker, of Bolton, have recently presented, as an addition to the institution, a new house at Edgworth, which will accommodate twenty-five girls. Three new houses are to be begun forthwith at Farnborough, in Hampshire, where fifty more boys will be sheltered.

At present there are nearly eighty children who have been passed for admission for whom there is no accommodation. This pressure, however, will be partly relieved by the departure for Canada early in October of a party of boys.

We commend the work of this Institution, which is greatly in need of increased funds, to the sympathetic interest and prayers of all our readers.

Christian Evidences.—The books selected by the Christian Evidence Society for their examination, April 11, 1902, are:—Gibson's "Rock v. Sand"; Stewart's "Handbook of Christian Evidences," and Ingram's "New Testament Difficulties," second series; Butler's "Analogy," with Eagar's "Butler's 'Analogy' and Modern Thought," or Phillipps' "Cumulative Evidences"; Flints' "Theism"; Wright's "Scientific Aspects of Christian Evidences"; Dods' "Introduction to the New Testament," and Perowne on "Galatians." Any persons may offer themselves as candidates. For copies of the regulations address Rev. C. Lloyd Engstrom, 26, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

Cripples & Chrysanthemums.

THE watercress and flower-selling trades of the London streets are practically monopolized by women and girls, the majority of whom, in addition to enduring the temptations and perils entailed by their position, are forced by poverty to make their abode in wretched homes. They stand, therefore, in urgent need of Christian sympathy and guidance.

It is now nearly thirty-five years since the neglected condition of this rough but industrious class attracted the attention of Mr. John A. Groom, the flower-girls' friend, and led him to commence, in a humble but common-sense way, an evangelistic and philanthropic mission in their interests. In those days, prior to the demolition of many rookeries and to manifold improvements in the laws which govern the welfare of children, the lot of the girl-hawker was indeed a sad one.

LONDON IN THE SIXTIES.

Farringdon and Covent Garden Markets—then the principal markets for watercress and flowers—opened at four o'clock in the morning. Children with naked feet and scanty garments, gathered from far-off districts for a few handfuls of watercress, in snow, hail, fog, and frost, many hours before daylight. The cress was bought, washed at a pump, and tied in bunches, and then the weary trudge homeward commenced. The most profitable "stock-in-trade" of the impostors in those days was an afflicted child—blind, lame, or subject to fits. The more pitiable the condition, the better for the purpose of exciting the sympathy of the tender-hearted, and the greater amount secured for self-indulgence. Flowers were an excuse for begging; hunger sharpened the wits of the child, and taught it to whine for money, or to seize the opportunity to steal.

With the greatly increased demand for flowers which has come with the large extension of the Channel Isles and Scilly Isles' trade in cut flowers, many more women have found employment as sellers, so that Mr. Groom's early breakfast and club room, which is open every market morning, is a boon to them. A pint of cocoa and two slices of bread and butter are given to all the needy women. They may sit, arrange their flowers, see their friend the missionary, and make application for help, or give information regarding any who are ill, so as to ensure an immediate visit from a deaconess. A Bible-reading is held in connection with these breakfasts.

HOMES FOR WAIF CHILDREN.

Many other branches of work have been initiated from time to time. In the Servants' Training Home some thousands of girls have taken advantage of the opportunity there presented of entering upon a safer method of earning a livelihood. The five Homes for orphan and waif children, at Clacton-on-Sea, have sheltered many unhappy and abandoned little ones, and next month is to see the completion of the Orphan Home Scheme, by the opening of seven additional cottages—a ceremony which is to be performed by H.R.H. Princess Christian.

THE "CRIPPLES" WORK-ROOM.

There are six London branches, each of which is a centre of Christian activity; the women in the various districts attend their own branch, where there are Gospel services, clubs, &c., as at the headquarters in Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell. But perhaps the most interesting of all the departments is that which deals with crippled girls, and the chief feature of which is the Industrial Training Institution, where hundreds have been instructed and helped to support themselves. The scene in the clean and capacious work-room is at once beautiful and pathetic. At the long tables sit the girls, all of whom suffer from some grave deformity, but who evidently find peculiar satisfaction in the interesting character of their employment. Around the room are superb examples of their taste and dexterity in the manipulation of such material as stiff lawn and wire, tinted paper and indiarubber. Graceful sprays of evergreen and glorious masses of seeming chrysanthemum bloom transform the plain apartment into a bower delightful to the eye. The adaptation of a vegetable product, notably in the manufacture of damask roses, is so effective that it is almost impossible to distinguish between the real and the counterfeit flower.

A glance at the methods of manufacture shows that the petals are first dipped in various dyes, and then curled and marked with delicate tracery by means of a goffering iron, some of the neatest work being accomplished by a young woman who is partially blind, and has therefore to rely more upon the sense of touch than that of sight. There is necessarily a development of intelligence and artistic power in this fascinating employment which is wanting in merely mechanical occupations, and one cannot fail to note a mental alertness among the girls, which contrasts almost weirdly with the bodily weaknesses that are so evident.

The Mission has acquired, from time to time, a number of the houses in Sekforde Street; they form a kind of model village, each dwelling being under the direction of a lady who "mothers" the group of girls allotted to her care. The chief aims are: to teach each girl the flower-making trade so thoroughly that she may be able to support herself; then to place her in lodgings where she will be carefully tended; to see that she is supplied with work, and always to exercise a friendly interest in her spiritual and temporal welfare.

SAVED FROM THE WORKHOUSE.

But for this system of industrial training it may well be doubted if there would be any means open to all poor crippled and deformed sisters of gaining an independent livelihood; the probability is that they would become a charge either upon the rates or the generosity of the charitable.

By an initial expenditure of only £10 per head, Mr. Groom transforms a dependent into a wage-earner, and he therefore feels that the mission has a claim to encouragement from the economic, as well as the Christian standpoint. Friends may do much for these industrious cripple-girls by purchasing some of their floral productions, which are so perfectly finished as to do credit to any drawing-room in the land. It should be mentioned, too, that visitors to the Homes receive a hearty welcome.

Founded and maintained on Christian principles, the mission continues essentially evangelistic in all its varied operations, and it is a source of inspiration to the workers to know that many who were once strangers to the truth, are now devoted followers of the Master. The coming of winter means much to Mr. Groom, for he has then to undertake large and important relief measures in addition to the regular responsibilities of the mission, and it is naturally to Christian people that he looks for sympathy and support.

In Berkshire Villages.

THE hamlet of Vernham Deane, near Hungerford, Berks, is now the centre of a flourishing mission. In issuing the first annual report, Mrs. Sydney Watson says, "We dare to say to God's glory that this year's work has resulted in the conversion of many souls. More than a hundred adult total abstinence pledges have been taken and kept. A Christian Endeavour Society of over sixty active members was started in February last, and has flourished amazingly, proving a great help to the work in every way.

"At Buttermere, four miles from Vernham, where we have held an unbroken series of Sunday afternoon services throughout the year, the work has been most blessed, the converts there being of the heartiest, sturdiest, most self-denying character we have ever come in contact with. We have taken and fitted up a cottage here in which we hold a Sunday school in the morning and Gospel services in the afternoon. There are yearning hands stretched out to us in other directions, but our means will not permit of further extension unless our friends help us. We have personally borne, and are still bearing, the bulk of the expense as well as the labour. The great need of a counteracting influence to the public-house led to the opening of a reading-room last October, which has proved an immense blessing to the place and people. Much of the decided spiritual fruit among young men of the place is the direct result of this room." Mrs. Watson may be addressed "The Firs," Vernham Deane, near Hungerford, Berks.

East London Evangelism.

IN his account of the progress of the East London Wesleyan Mission, Rev. Peter Thompson writes hopefully of evangelistic labours among the poor. One or two sample cases will be read with interest:—

"Can I be saved?" said an old man to me one day at the Chapel gates. "For sixty years God has been speaking to me, and I have despised Him. I am now seventy-four years of age, and He won't take me in now, will He?" But God did save him, and the light in his face tells of the daily joy in his heart. He comes regularly to the services and his class, and he is doing his best to give the rest of his days to the service of God.

NOW IN THE MISSION BAND.

"I want to know more about Jesus Christ," said a man of about thirty-five to me one day. "I am a Jew, and I am not happy." It was with unspeakable joy that I told him about Him of whom Moses and the prophets did write. Carefully and clearly I explained how the sacrifice of God's Son for the sin of the world was necessary and all-sufficient. With a great eagerness he accepted Jesus, and the joy of forgiveness came to his soul. This happened over a year ago. He has since become a member, and is a most faithful worker in our Mission Band.

A young fellow from the country came to London, and found work in the East End. He was asked by one of our members to attend St. George's Chapel. I noticed how intent he was as I preached, and after the service I spoke to him. He had never attended a Methodist Chapel before, nor had he even realised his need of a Saviour. He continued to attend our services, all the time listening most attentively. Then one Sunday evening he boldly came out before the congregation, and surrendered to Christ. He is most sincere, and is making good progress in the Christian life, At class a little while ago he said, "I can never thank God enough for leading me here."

"NOTHING SHORT OF A MIRACLE."

A sister tells of a drunkard's home, so changed that it seems nothing short of a miracle. Eighteen months ago his wife was converted, and her life from that day has been so utterly given up to God that she produced a great impression on her ungodly husband. Still he continued to get more and more under the influence of strong drink. His language at such times, she says, was not fit for his little children to hear, and his conduct towards her, on account of her religion, amounted to persecution. . . . For over a week he had been drinking heavily, having no sleep for three nights, for he was tearing up and down stairs and opening windows to "fling out the evil spirits that haunted the room." His faithful wife followed him the night long, and at one time saved him from throwing himself out. Next day he was in the shop as usual, but towards evening it seemed as though God's Spirit laid hold of him. Coming to his wife, the man asked if she would go upstairs and pray for him. They went together, and there, in broken sentences, with delirium still upon him, he sobbed out his repentance. Old things have passed away, and to-day he is a living witness that Christ has still power on earth to forgive sins. The love for the drink is broken, and he is at every service with his wife and children, a gentleman in appearance, and a Christian in heart and life. A magnificent answer to prayer!

China Inland Mission.—In connection with the China Inland Mission, sixty-seven missionaries are sailing this autumn, of whom forty-six are already on their way, and the remaining twenty-one are soon to follow. There are fifty returning, and seventeen fresh workers in these parties.

Literature for South African Families.—Mr. E. D. Nicol, Grove House, Sunderland, has received from South Africa a list of names of families living in loneliness and solitude by whom gifts of literature will be warmly appreciated. The majority of these are far away from any church or means of worship. Mr. Nicol will supply names to friends willing to participate in this service.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, October 6. 1 Corinthians xvi.

THE opening verses indicate clearly the reverence which was beginning to gather around the Lord's Day in the early Church. It was apparently the day for worship and Christian fellowship. We are also taught of the best method of gathering money for God's work, by the littles, and by the regular setting apart, as God hath prospered. It is also of great interest to notice the special care with which the Apostle regarded money matters, insisting that all contributions should be placed in other hands than his own. What an untold number of defalcations and misunderstandings would be saved if Christian men refused to handle money, save in the presence of others, and with their endorsement. Never touch public money, save in the presence, and with the concurrence, of your fellow-officers or fellow-workers.

In making your plans, let them ever be as the Lord may permit (7); always subordinate your private interests to the service of the Master (9); never be daunted by difficulties, for if God brings his children into impassable places, it is that they may see his delivering hand (9).

The Apostle was very generous in his references to, and dealings with, his friends. Though Timothy was somewhat wanting in virile strength, Paul was ever eager to make his way easier; and though Apollos had rivalled him in the affections of many, he was desirous for him to visit Corinth again. He could not forget the household which yielded him his first-fruits. His solitude was greatly cheered by the advent of his friends from Corinth. The Apostle was so human, so true to his friendships, so humble in classing himself with the simplest. But note the outflaming of that passionate love to Christ, which felt that any who failed to love Him must be accursed at his coming, not simply for their want of love, but for the worthless character which the want of love denoted.

MONDAY, October 7. 2 Corinthians i.

Titus had been sent to Corinth to enforce the injunctions of the first Epistle; and the Apostle was weary to see him and hear his report. It would appear that it was of a mixed character. The majority of the Church manifested the deepest penitence for the sins which had so stirred Paul's spirit; but there was still a strong minority, who insisted on the Apostle producing letters of recommendation, and charged him with being insincere and fickle. It was under the conflicting emotions evoked by these statements that this Epistle was written, which is full of personal affection, tenderness, warning, and appeal.

The Epistle may have been written at Philippi or Thessalonica, and it was conveyed to Corinth by Titus, accompanied by two others, who were specially commissioned to attend to the collection.

There are some tender phrases in this chapter, well worthy of our consideration: that all comfort emanates from God; that He allows us to be in sorrow, to have the joy of wiping our tears, and teaching us the art of consolation; that our God delivered, delivers, and will deliver; that He will come to our rescue, even when we despair of life, opening a door of hope in the very valley of Achor. We learn also that our Father does not vacillate, that his answer to the soul is an everlasting yea, and that Jesus Christ is his ratification of the promises of the Old Testament. It is He who has put us into Christ, and He will keep us there, anointing us for service, sealing us for safety, and giving the guarantee and earnest of heaven, by his Spirit in our heart.

TUESDAY, October 8. 2 Corinthians ii.

We remember the severity with which the holy Apostle dealt with the sin of 1 Cor. v. The majority of the Church had withdrawn from the offender, and the way in which church-discipline had been carried out in regard to him had evidently brought about his true repentance. The Apostle was naturally very glad at this result. It was a justification of the sorrow and pain which he had caused them; and now he called upon them to forgive the offender, and rejoice with the joy of Luke xv. over the returning prodigal. To leave the penitent further out in the cold might drive him to despair, and so give Satan an advantage.

What a splendid outburst we have in verses 14-17. The Apostle imagines himself as part of the triumphal procession of his Master through the world. First he is a captive in his conquering and glorious train; then he is one of the incense-bearers, scattering perfumes; then it would almost appear that he had become the perfume itself, associated with the dying memories of those who were being lost through their own wilful rejection of the Gospel, and with the unspeakable joy of such as were being saved. Notice that salvation and perishing are described as being part of a great process.

Wouldst thou be sufficient for the awful responsibilities of thy ministry? Seek a transparent purity, amid which God's Holy Spirit may not be ashamed, for He is the source of all spiritual might.

WEDNESDAY, October 9. 2 Corinthians iii.

Paul fancies that he is being challenged for letters of commendation, and repudiates the claim. "No," he cries, "not while the converts, who have been won through my preaching, abound everywhere!" Let us so live that our characters may be as tractlets, clearly and legibly printed, and circulating everywhere through the world, so that they who refuse to read religious literature may be compelled to admit the incontestable evidence of holy and consecrated lives. O Spirit of Jesus, write on us, as on living tablets, in letters of fire, Thy dear name!

From this writing of the name of Jesus on our hearts, his quick mind flies on to that other writing by the finger of God on the stone tablets of Sinai. He seems to see the law in the hands of the great Lawgiver, as he descends from Sinai; and in the light that shines on the noble brow of Moses he finds an emblem of the light and glory, the splendour of the ancient law. Granted that it was evanescent, yet it was beautiful whilst it remained. And thus he is led to the irresistible climax, that if the old covenant, which was unto condemnation and death, and transitory in its persistence, was characterized by so much glory, the new must be far more glorious, since it is life-giving and eternal. And if that were so, surely there was no need to employ more than great plainness of speech. Why accuse him of lack of eloquence? Such a theme made eloquence needless. Why accuse him of plainness and simplicity of utterance? Were not these better than, like Moses, to employ a veil of type, symbol, and metaphor? There are no veils for us! With unveiled face, we see, and reflect, God's glory in Jesus, and, as we reflect, we are permanently transfigured.

THURSDAY, October 10. 2 Corinthians iv.

The first aim of Gospel preaching is to awaken the dormant conscience of man. To do this, we must manifest the truth as it is in Jesus. As the King of England, immured in his prison, recognised the voice of his friend the troubadour, as he sang outside the castle walls a strain familiar to them both, and responded to it bar by bar, so does conscience awaken, and respond to the truth, recognising it as the voice of God. This is the highest endorsement that the minister of the Gospel can have.

Why, then, does the Gospel seem to fail in so many cases? It is not for any defect in its fair excellence. The light of God shines on the face of Jesus, and is thence reflected on the page of the Gospel; and if it fails to reach any individual soul, it is not because of any arbitrary decree on the part of God, but because film after film, scale after scale, of worldliness, has gathered over the retina of the soul's eye. Every time we yield to temptation our vision becomes dimmer, and ere we can see and appreciate God's light, as great a miracle has to be wrought on us as the creation of light.

Few men have been more conscious of their weakness than the Apostle Paul. He confesses here that he was troubled, perplexed, persecuted, and cast down, always bearing about the dying of Jesus, and delivered unto death. But he gratefully accepted all these disabilities, knowing that, in spite of them all—nay, because of them all—he was more able to abound in resurrection glory. With the decay of the outward, there came the renewal of the unseen and spiritual. Yes, indeed, it was through the affliction that the eternal weight of glory was wrought. The pendulum which swang into the dark, swang back into the light.

Our mortal life is a pilgrimage, and our body is a tent, so slight, so transitory, so easily taken down; but what does that matter, since there is awaiting us a mansion built by God? Often in this veil of flesh we groan, and long to put on over it, as a robe, the heavenly dwelling, so that in a moment, at the coming of the Lord, the mortal might be swallowed up of life. For us who die before that advent, there will, doubtless, be a clothing; but it would be sweet to avoid the pangs of mortal suffering, if it might be so. But even if that be not granted, and it be our lot to die, death shall lose its terrors, because it shall admit us into the immediate presence of our Lord. With such a thought, we are impelled to endeavour to be pleasing in his sight, that when all disguise is stripped off, we may stand accepted.

When a man has that thought before him, how independent he becomes of human opinion; even if they think him mad, he is content. The love of Christ constrains; the death of Christ has lifted into an altogether new relationship, in which the spirit has become identified with the new creation, in which considerations of self no longer dominate.

But he who is thus drawn Christward is equally full of yearnings towards men. He beseeches them to accept the reconciliation, which, so far as God is concerned, was perfected when the Saviour was, on our behalf, "struck with the doom of sin." Yea, it seems as though he had become the very mouthpiece of God Himself.

SATURDAY, October 12. 2 Corinthians vi.

Alas for us that we have the mysterious power of thwarting, and rendering null, the Divine grace! There are acceptable times; but we may abuse them. There are days of salvation; but we may let them slip.

The Apostle had not forgotten the challenge for commendatory letters, and here cites the only commendation he cared to give (4). His commendation was not in words, but in deeds. "In much endurance, in tribulations, in necessities, in pressure of circumstances, in blows, in prisons, in tumults, in toils, in spells of sleeplessness, in fastings"—such are the circumstances through which the militant Church moves to its reward. "In pureness, in knowledge, in longsuffering, in tenderness, in the Holy Spirit, in love unfeigned"—such are the spirit and temper of the persecuted and witnessing Church. "In the word of truth, in the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right and left"—such are the weapons of our warfare. "By glory and dishonour, by ill report and good report; as undeceivers, and yet true; as being ignored, and yet recognized; as dying, and, behold, we live; as being chastened, and not being slain; as being grieved, and yet rejoicing; as paupers, yet enriching many; as having nothing, yet as having all things in full possession"—such are the antitheses of the Christian life, according as it is viewed from above, or from beneath; from the standpoint of Heaven, or of earth.

Well might the Apostle turn from such an impassioned outburst to plead with his converts that they should repay him in kind, by withdrawing from everything that savoured of darkness, idols, and the world that lay in the wicked one.

THE LATE

Mr. John Colville, M.P.

A GREAT vacant place was left in the public and Christian life of Scotland by the removal through death, on August 22, of Mr. John Colville, M.P. for North-East Lanarkshire. He was stricken down with a severe attack of zymotic diarrhœa, and in less than forty-eight hours passed from the midst of a life of varied activity to be with the Lord whom he loved and served with all the powers of his being.

The news came to the town of Motherwell with painful suddenness, and spread rapidly. It was the theme on all lips, and the stoutest hearts were bowed, as the whole community for miles around felt deeply that a great and good man had fallen. The streets assumed the aspect of deep and heartfelt mourning. Flags were at half-mast on public works and civic buildings.

The following extract, taken from the Motherwell Times, indicates well the large-hearted and many-sided man, and shows how vigorously he maintained his testimony and example as a devoted Christian, amid the claims which pressed upon his time and strength.

Mr. Colville was forty-nine years of age, having been born at Glasgow on July 3, 1852. He was educated at Hamilton and Gartsherrie Academies, and on the completion of his studies settled down in Motherwell, where his father had established the Dalzell Iron and Steel Works. All his life Mr. Colville has been an extremely busy public man. He was a Town Councillor of the burgh, and Provost from 1888 till he entered Parliament in 1895; and in the course of his public career was a member of the School Board of the County Council of Lanark; was at one time an officer in the local Volunteers, and at the time of his death was President of the Lanarkshire Christian Union. He was one of the founders of the Cairns United Free Church, and his name has found a place as patron or office-bearer in almost every club or society which has for its object the advancement or welfare of the people amongst whom he lived.

As a temperance advocate and Christian worker he was well-known. Mr. John Colville's name, in fact, was a household word everywhere in the district, and he was so closely identified with everything in the town, and took such an active and personal interest in everything, no matter how commonplace, and was so enthusiastic in all that he did, that Motherwell without John Colville will not be what it used to be.

On the Sunday prior to his decease, Mr. Colville preached to a crowd in the open-air from "Yield yourselves unto God." The address was full of power, and his fervent appeals went home to many hearts. Whilst at Keswick a few weeks before, one of the speakers had given a striking address from the words, "The government shall be upon his shoulder." Mr. Colville spoke of the great blessing these words had been made to him, and when death was hastening rapidly, his latest utterance contained these restful and timely words.

Though sharing the advantages of being brought up in a godly home, it was not until he reached the age of twenty-one that he became specially interested in spiritual things. In January, 1874, a devoted Christian who visited his father's house, had come from Edinburgh, where Messrs. Moody and Sankey were holding their wonderful mission. This brother was telling of some of the scenes witnessed, and words heard. Turning to young Mr. Colville, who sat next to him, he said, "Isn't that grand?" On the spur of the moment, and without taking time to consider his reply, he said, "Yes." No sooner had he done so, than his conscience rose up and challenged his "Yes." The truth is that the Holy Spirit was beginning to work in that heart and mind.

In the following month, the beloved American brethren left Edinburgh and began their mission in Glasgow. Mr. Colville was present at the first meeting. Mr. Moody preached on "The Love of God," a subject adapted, indeed, for wounded and longing souls. To this hearer no relief came, though night after night he was present at the services. At one of the after-meetings, a young man about his own age, said, "Isn't this glorious?" "It may be to others," said Mr. Colville, "but not so to me." "What!" said the other, "are you not converted?" The question went home.

A little later Mr. Colville was present in Ewing Place Church, when 101 young men rose in token of their desire to be Christ's, but liberty and peace with God came not to him. It was at the close of the month that Christ was revealed, and life eternal came.

On the last Thursday of the month, his sister, who had received Christ some time before, and who had returned home with him at the close of the evening meeting, sat down at his side to endeavour to bring things to a point. He was wretched, while she was rejoicing in the fact of his deep anxiety, knowing that it was the darkness before the break of salvation's day. She read passage after passage from God's Word; but it was not till near midnight that he was enabled to cast himself upon the Saviour's great promise, "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." His diary for the day following—Friday, 27th February—contains the entry, "Found this morning—Jesus mine." Rejoicing henceforth in the knowledge of his redemption, forgiveness, and acceptance in the Beloved, he has been "a burning and shining light" in the Church and the world.

Much might be written of Mr. Colville's life in Motherwell. As one of the heads of the Dalzell Steel and Iron Works he has been eminently successful as a business man. Loved and highly esteemed by his fellow townsmen, as well as the thousands of workmen he employed, he was returned by a large majority to the House of Commons at the last two General Elections. His Christian and manly personality, his consistent and unselfish life, had won for him the esteem and confidence of all. His home and public life stood out a splendid testimony to the Lord Jesus.

So recently as the last Keswick Convention his frank and joyous countenance endorsed his words in the Market Place, where he told his experience, and preached Christ to the people. And now he has gone from us! The weight of his Christian character exceeded vastly in its sphere the goodly output of all iron-smelting and steel-fashionings.

The writer has been told that 40,000 people were computed as attending the funeral. Many of the hardy sons of toil were turned at once to seek John Colville's Lord. The Sunday after the funeral, his chair as president of his large working-men's afternoon meeting was empty and draped in black. The friend who came could scarcely speak. Tears and sobs held the hearers, and many were there who will date that as the day when they found the Lord.

The Sunday following showed a marked increase of spiritual interest. The men wanted to know their leader and employer's Lord. Numbers came forward in order to yield their hearts to Christ. One tall and burly workman cried out, "I want to know the Lord Jesus. I have been two hours in the wood among the trees crying to God to have mercy upon me." Then the inquiry was made, "What led you to this?" and the tearful and frank response was, "Mr. Colville's death."

From one whose position as a constant helper in Mr. Colville's work brought him necessarily into an inner circle, I have learned that wonderful words were heard in the calm of "the peace of God which passeth all understanding," and keeps the heart and mind. "And now for a reaping time," was the quiet and expectant expression of the brave and loving helpmeet ere the earth had received the empty casket of this devoted husband, and noble energetic servant of the Lord. Yes, it is true, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." There is sorrow with us now, but we shall see him again, and our hearts shall rejoice.

At Twilight.

FREQUENTLY upon the moorlands, or by the sea where there are broad horizons, across the clear evening sky, and climbing higher as the twilight deepens and night approaches, there comes a faint purple arch which is the domed shadow of the world, the forerunner of starlight and of the soft summer night. There is an element of pathos about it, for it is evanescent, and it fades with the eve that gave it birth. One may often see something of the kind in human life, but the pathos is changed to pain, for the shadow precedes not the starlight, but the gloom and darkness of a life that is closing without that light which giveth life eternal. The shadow of the world creeps over the closing years, shutting out heaven. The evening has drawn on, almost imperceptibly, during the eager pursuit of riches, or the pursuit of a profitless ambition, and the twilight deepens over a life that is without God. In the season of weakness and declining faculties, the thoughts and faculties cannot rise above the things of earth, and the domed shadow of the world shuts out "the Light of men."

The Gospel in Austria.

THE motive of faithful Gospel preaching is not to make proselytes, but to enlighten the souls of men, and the logical, yea, necessary, result of such enlightenment is the breaking of ties with empty forms and customs, and an increasing desire to worship God in spirit and in truth. In this sense there was a "Los von Rom" movement among the Tcheks, long before the present German movement started. It did not come by leaps and bounds like the latter, but was the slow, natural growth of prayerful evangelistic labours, and individual dealing with men and women, who one by one turned to God, and consequently from Rome, until the nucleus of a Free Church was formed.

"We were not sent by the American Board in 1872," says Dr. A. W. Clark, "with any other purpose than that of helping already existing agencies; but the fact that the Lutheran Reformed Churches of Austria and Bohemia are ready to receive anyone calling himself a Protestant, whether his life conforms to Christ's requirements or not, led some thirty awakened souls, who insisted on conversion as essential to membership in Christ's Church, to organize in 1880 a Congregational Church."

The following statistics, from an annual report dated May, 1901, give an idea of the development of these free churches:—One station and fifty outstations in different parts of Bohemia and Austria; thirteen churches; 1,215 full members—that is, communion members—of whom 180 were received during the last year. There are 321 children in the Sunday-schools; twelve preachers; several colporteurs; thirteen Y.M.C.A.'s; seventeen Y.W.C.A.'s; one rescue and reform home for fallen women. Average congregation all told, 2,332; adherents, 3,035. Contributions by the people, £775. Literature circulated in one year: Bibles, 187; New Testaments, 8,582; Gospel portions, 9,568; other religious books, 15,000; tracts, papers, &c., 140,000.

Dr. Clark, in his teaching, does not antagonize Roman institutions. He and his helpers (who are all of Tchek nationality) simply preach the Gospel, fully persuaded that the best way of freeing people from the bondage of Rome is to give them the very best instead of the semi-good. Once in conscious possession of the kernel, they will readily drop the husk.

We had the pleasure of meeting with a young ex-priest, who, under the direction of Dr. Clark, is preparing for Evangelical work in his church. One of his sisters had followed him to Prague with the intention of bringing him to "his senses." In a very short time, however, she was brought to the Saviour herself. Now brother and sister are joined in prayer for a halting, dear old mother, and an antagonizing sister. Looking at the bright, shining faces of the two, one cannot doubt that the First Love (may it never fade!) has taken possession of them.

Dr. Baedeker has much hope in the Slavic nations, and Dr. Clark, from his long experience, corroborates this view. Many are eager to hear the Gospel, and in proportion as they receive it into their lives, they will and must rise in the scale of nations. This mission of Dr. Clark's has the pulse-beat of a strong man. We were able to ascertain this at its prayer-meeting, generally considered the thermometer of a church's life.

During previous days my husband had been addressing Tchek Christians in different parts of the city, and wondered now whether he should go to the Saturday prayer-meeting, not being able to understand the language. We went, however, and were surprised to find such a goodly number present. There was no halting, no pause, no silence, no waiting for the deacons to do it, but with one accord all shared in the privilege of pouring out their hearts to God, men and women closely following each other for more than an hour without rising from their knees. This was one of the most genuine prayer-meetings we have ever attended, and we would not have missed the opportunity for anything. With regard to in Austria, excluding Hungary, but including Bohemia, we have gathered the following valuable and interesting information from a paper, by Dr. A. W. Clark, Prague, which will, I believe, appear in the Continental Presbyterian, mentioned in a previous letter:—

"In the seventeen provinces of Austria there were, according to the last census, 436,352 Protestants of the Augsburg and the Helvetic Confessions. Added to these the Baptists, Congregationalists or Free Reformed, Methodists, and Moravians (Brethren Church), it is safe to affirm that over 450,000 reside in Austria. This number includes a large proportion of only nominal Christians.

"Bohemia contains more Protestants than any other province of Austria proper. Cyril and Methodius came from the East in 865 to Moravia and Bohemia, preaching in the people's language, and giving them the Bible.

"The general corruption in the church demanding reform roused John Huss to vigorous protest. He died a martyr at Constance in 1415. His followers, the Taborites, were defeated at Lipan in 1434. From their ashes there arose in 1457 the 'Unitas Fratrum' (Brethren's Union), now known as the Moravians. At the time of Luther's Reformation, they had more than 200 churches in Bohemia and Moravia. Alarmed at the progress of the Jesuits in Styria, where the people were largely Protestants, the Bohemian Christians secured, on paper, in 1609 from Rudolph II., religious freedom and equal rights with Catholics, which, however, were not respected by the Jesuits.

"The motto of Ferdinand II. being—'Rather rule over a desert than over a land peopled with heretics,' this emperor did his utmost to exterminate the Protestants. After the unfortunate battle of the White Mountain in November, 1620, Bohemia lay humbled at his feet. He died in 1637.

"In 1650, there were still 200,000 Evangelicals in Bohemia. Renewed persecution, after the peace of Westphalia in 1648, drove 30,000 more away to Germany, 160,000 joined outwardly the Roman Church; 10,000 were thrown into prison, and sentenced to labour as slaves or to die as martyrs.

"A limited toleration being granted by Emperor Joseph in 1781, some 90,000 citizens declared themselves as Protestants, much to the surprise and annoyance of the Jesuits.

"The present Emperor, Franz Joseph, removed by an imperial decree the many limitations still resting upon the Protestants, and since then there has been cheering progress.

"The number of Lutheran pastors is now 150. This number, and the number of their churches, is constantly increasing. The majority of the 'Los von Rom' movement join the Lutherans. The Reformed Church has ninety pastors. Both churches have over 100 branches, or outstations, and a good number of vicars (assistants).

"Religious instruction in public and higher schools is obligatory. To provide trained Evangelical teachers for the children, there are normal schools at Bielitz for Germans (107 pupils) and at Kaslau for Bohemians (thirty-six pupils).

"In Krabschitz, near Raudnitz, there is an Evangelical Boarding School for Bohemian girls, founded by Pastor Schubert over twenty-five years ago, which has sent out more than 700 pupils. The buildings were erected, for the most part, by American friends. The Moravians have two churches, with about twenty branches and preaching-places, their work, with the exception of one branch, being confined to Bohemia. The Methodists began their evangelistic work in Vienna over twenty-five years ago. For the last five years they have been allowed to work undisturbed, and with marked success. There are two Methodist churches in Vienna, where the Gospel is preached in eight different places. They have also three branches in Hungary, and three in Austria. The Baptists (the oldest church founded in Vienna) have three halls in that city, two preachers, and five unpaid helpers. In Graz (Styria) a small church was founded in 1882. It has no appointed preacher, but is well cared for by the Religious Tract Society (London), introduced into Graz by Dr. A. W. Clark, of the American Board. Galicia has one Baptist church, with several branches, one preacher, ten unpaid assistants. There are two Baptist churches in Bohemia, and one in Moravia." W. M.

An Urgent Call from Bombay.

DEAR SIR,—Appeals have reached me from the secretaries respectively of the "Christian Women Workers' Union of Western India," and the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union," of Bombay, asking that I would make known among Christians in Britain the need that exists for consecrated women workers of ability and education to give themselves to a special work in that city.

In your obituary notices you have already recorded the removal of Miss Helen Richardson, whose Christlike and self-denying labours on behalf of the poor and outcast made her name a household word in Bombay. One of the last concerns of this devoted sister was the open and flagrant immorality in the Bombay streets, and more especially the cruel fate of the numbers of young women and girls from the Continent of Europe, who are continually brought there by the INFAMOUS TRADERS IN FLESH AND BLOOD.

To cry unto God on behalf of this state of things, two special days of prayer were held at Miss Richardson's Home about a month before her death, attended by many Christian workers who shared her concern with our now glorified friend. The appeals I allude to have reached me as an outcome of this concern, one written before, and the other since Miss Richardson's removal. The tenor of both is alike. I quote from the second:

The Christian workers of Bombay and Poona have had very strongly laid upon them the burden of responsibility for foreign young women who are brought here for immoral purposes. Missionaries and others have done what they could to reach them, but it is felt by everyone that the work demands the entire time and energy of one who is definitely set apart for it.

Miss Richardson, who up to the time of her death was deeply interested in this work, said that it could be most efficiently carried on if there were two who could come together, one for individual work, and the other to take charge of a home to which rescued girls should be brought and kept, until free passage to their native town is obtained from the Consul. If, however, only one can be found for this work, she should by all means come.

Those who come should be linguists to a certain extent, as almost every European nationality is to be found among these women. They should also have had experience in rescue work at home. . . .

It is with the hope of enlisting your sympathy and help that we send this appeal, trusting you may be guided to those whom God surely intends for his work in this needy corner of the world.

Here is a call for some one possessing a deep and abiding love for God and souls, and the necessary linguistic ability. French and German are a necessity. I should not myself lay so much stress on previous experience of rescue work. A preliminary month might be spent in visiting some experienced rescue workers in England by anyone who felt the call was to them. There should be two, but the concern of one might be carried out by a helper found in India, if a second did not offer here. Having had much experience of this kind of work in Bombay, during more than ten years in that city, I should be able and willing to give information to any who wish to know more of this matter, and who feel the call of God to be to them. The Indian Famine.

THE Indian correspondent of The Standard takes a gloomy view of the near future in our great dependency, and one which does not give much ground for the hope that the experience of the recent famine period is being fully appreciated by the Administration. He says that if the spectre of famine has disappeared into the background that of the plague remains, and that there is every probability the next few weeks will see "a general recrudescence of the pestilence." Already there is a great rise in the mortality, and in some districts, according to the writer, "the plague is allowed to proceed on its way practically unchecked," though last winter in Calcutta alone there were 7,016 deaths from the disease. It would appear that we are not yet alive to our responsibilities in regard to the native races. Making all allowances for the difficulties in the way of drastic sanitary measures, it cannot be overlooked that the first duty of a Government is to govern. But, as the Government is, or ought to be, only the practical expression of the will and mind of the people, the responsibility reaches each and every citizen.

DISTRESSED SANTHALS.

A pathetic description of the Santhals is given in the Bombay Guardian by Rev. A. J. Meik, of Babondia, who says:—"The poor Santhal cultivators have in some places sown their paddy three and four times, and it has all been destroyed. On the first occasion, as soon as the plants sprang up, the sun completely burnt up the seedlings. They again sowed, and then, as soon as the seedlings were ready to be transplanted, the grasshoppers, of which we have had a regular plague, destroyed them. The third and fourth times the poor people, hoping against hope, again sowed their seed, and we had a slight shower of rain, and were in high hopes of transplanting; but a swarm of locusts paid us two visits and devoured the paddy seedlings, the Indian corn, the jauli, and gundlie crops. The three latter crops are the staple food of the poor Santhals till the paddy is harvested.

"To add to their misery, smallpox has broken out, and in three weeks 450 people have taken medicines from me, twenty have died, fifteen women being made widows, and fifty children orphans. We have given paddy seed, seedlings, and help to men from ten villages, and numbers of others have come in for help; but I have had to refuse it to them as I have spent my last pice and given away my last grain of paddy. It seems that we are going to have a greater famine here this year than we have ever had before. The money lenders and merchants have stopped advances on seeing the state of affairs."

Rev. Dennis Osborne, writing from Poona under date September 6, tells of the thankfulness expressed by Christian workers for the further consignment of foods and cotton cloths which the generosity of our readers enabled us to dispatch. "If your British readers could but see the avidity and eagerness with which missionaries and representatives of all Churches and Missions crowded in to obtain a share of the supplies, for the poor orphans dependent upon them, they would realize that the want is by no means over."

In one of the applications referred to by Mr. Osborne, Rev. Sydney Nicholson, of the L.M.S., Gooty, South India, says: "Through lack of rain a time of real distress has come, and very many, especially widows and old people, are on the verge of starvation. Our own Society is in straitened circumstances, and the state of the people gets worse. We shall be grateful for the smallest help in grain, clothes, or money."

Conference of Evangelists.

YEAR by year the annual Conference of Evangelists, held at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., grows in significance and usefulness. This was unmistakably demonstrated on Wednesday of last week, when the third convention took place. Christian workers recognise how much stimulus and encouragement result from unitedly seeking a closer walk with the Unseen, and how fellow-servants in the Gospel may be cheered and helped by brotherly intercourse one with another. The Conference opened at ten o'clock.

Mr. M. H. Hodder, who presided, in welcoming the company, apologized for the absence of his co-convener, Mr. R. C. Morgan, who is at present in Russia. A message of greeting to the Conference had been received from him, and this was read by Mr. G. E. Morgan, M.A. An interesting feature of Mr. Morgan's letter was the thought (suggested by Dr. Baedeker) that one interpretation of John xx. 23 (taken in conjunction with its context and Ezek. iii. 17-21) may be that those who in the power of the Holy Ghost preach the Gospel, instrumentally "loose" the sins of those who believe, and instrumentally "retain" the sins of those who believe not.

PLANTING AND WATERING.

The first subject for consideration was "The Evangelist in Relation to the Regular Work of the Churches," and was dealt with by Mr. W. R. Lane, in a practical and lucid address. He directed attention to three expressions of the Apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. iii. 6, 8, 7—"I have planted, Apollos watered;" "He that planteth and he that watereth are one;" "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth." It would have been well if ministers, as well as evangelists, in large numbers, could have listened to this sensible and reasonable address. It would have softened much of their prejudice, and disposed of many of their misconceptions.

At the outset, Mr. Lane pointed out that these words of the Apostle indicate the liberty which God always acts upon. "I have planted, Apollos watered," shows an interesting diversity and division of labour. In taking a mission, it is always a great help to know that many workers have been in the field. Sometimes the evangelist arrives at harvest time, as a reaper, which means that there has been a great deal of work done beforehand—the winter ploughing, always solitary work, requiring more toil and perseverance than the evangelist himself could often command. It is a source of strength to remember that before a mission, and behind the forces that are at work, there are the influence, prayers, teaching, and training by fathers, mothers, teachers, and ministers—

THE DIVISION OF LABOUR.

Passing to the consideration of the second expression—"He that planteth and he that watereth are one"—Mr. Lane emphasized the unity of all great work. Paul and Apollos were one in this labour. There is a beautiful harmony and inward spiritual unity between the plodding toil of the pastor, and the irregular work which the evangelist is called to do in a mission. Paul and Apollos were one in heart. It is a comfort to remember that the aim of one and all is the same. The wife of the pastor of a church which had witnessed a great revival asked, "Why cannot we always have such meetings?" In the order of things it is impossible. A pastor cannot be always doing what the evangelist does when he comes along. But there is no contradiction between the pastor's regular labour and the evangelist's irregular work.

The third expression: "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth," that should mark labour of every kind, preventing friction, and bringing glory to the Lord of the Harvest.

A few words were spoken by Rev. J. Wilson (Woolwich), concerning the labour needed for breaking up the fallow ground, and the sowing of the seed long before the time of reaping. As an illustration, he gave an instance which occurred some eleven years ago, the result of which had only come to his knowledge recently. Passing a public-house, he noticed a little girl leaving with a jug of drink. By some means the pitcher fell to the ground, and was smashed. On seeing the distress of the child, Mr. Wilson gave her 2s. with which to purchase a new jug. The landlady, who had witnessed this occurrence, was so deeply impressed by the act that she was found at chapel on the following Sunday, and eventually gave herself to Christ. Her husband was also brought under Christian influence, and soon gave up the public-house and returned to his tools.

Reverting to the subject of the relation of the evangelist to the regular work of the churches, Mr. George Morgan spoke of which had familiarized him with the feeling that exists towards the evangelist. He had always endeavoured to put the evangelist in a most favourable light in the churches; but he had met evangelists who thought that nothing whatever had been done before their mission. The pastor, who has been working, as it were, underground so long, sees that the Christian life means more than "only believe." An evangelist who met with phenomenal success in the churches made a practice of asking, "Why do you wish for salvation? Is it merely to have your sins forgiven? Is that all? That is only the beginning." Such teaching brought him into line with that of the pastor, by insisting that growth should follow birth.

Others who spoke upon the subject included Mr. Ned Wright, Rev. G. Turner, Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, Mr. D. M. Cameron; and Mr. Leonard Weaver, who contended that the evangelist was sent to the world, rather than to the Church.

Mr. A. Garstin presided at the noon meeting, when the address was given by Rev. Dr. J. Robertson. The miraculous draught of fishes was the basis of a thoughtful and telling discourse. The miracles of Jesus were shown to be not so much wonders as teaching. There was wonder, but that was supernatural. It was the action of this miracle that tells, not the wonder. God never takes a boat from us without returning it full of blessing. Simon's call was inward as well as outward; and the call to evangelistic work is to proceed from a knowledge of self and realization of God. In the blaze of day Peter was not afraid to launch out into the deep and risk his fisherman's name, but leaps into faith.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

In the afternoon a number of testimonies were given from those engaged in the London Tent Campaign. Mr. W. Grove reported a revival at Deptford. Encouraging tidings came from Clapham; and Mr. Bewley Weaver spoke of a remarkable season of blessing at Wimbledon. The Conference afterwards listened to a stirring address by Mr. Barry Wake on "Open-Air Preaching." He declared that while our Saviour preached in synagogues and the Temple, his most signal victories were obtained when He spoke in the open-air; and it was when the cry arose, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," that men were healed of their diseases and saved from their sins. Speaking of the various efforts which are now common to reach the masses, Mr. Wake referred to the open-air preaching on Epsom Downs and Doncaster, among other places, at which souls had been won for Christ. He saw no reason why such places as Trafalgar Square and St. Paul's Churchyard should not be made centres from which the Gospel should be proclaimed. Forty-two years ago he preached his first sermon in the open-air in Lincoln's Inn Fields.

The subject was continued by Mr. Charles Cook, whose work in Hyde Park, extending over thirty years, is so well known. Open-air preaching must be considered a Divine institution, since the command had been given—"Go ye out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in." Not only is it a Divine institution, but in many quarters a despised method. He thanked God for every earnest brother in the Church of England and in the Free Churches who is willing to take his stand in the open-air. Mr. Cook went on to speak with regret of the when this branch of Christian service is suggested. He said, without hesitation, that the greatest blessings which have followed the preaching of the Gospel have been experienced outside churches and chapels, and appealed for larger sympathy and deeper interest in the efforts which are made to reach those who will not enter the House of God.

Considerable discussion followed, when various phases of open-air evangelization were dealt with. Prominent workers of long standing related their experiences, and while few suggestions were made as to new and improved methods to be adopted, some useful hints, and helpful counsels were given. Among those who spoke were Rev. Wilson Carlile, Mr. Edward Hurditch, Dr. Schofield, Rev. Thos. Jackson, and Mr. A. Garstin. The Conference was brought to a fitting and happy termination by a social gathering.

Quiet Day at Sunderland.

THE Free Church Council of Sunderland, of which Pastor F. E. Marsh is the secretary, held a quiet day on Friday last. Three sessions were held, morning, afternoon, and evening, a portion being spent in waiting upon God, which was felt to be a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The following brief outline of the addresses will indicate the tone of the gatherings:—

Rev. J. S. Wood said, "In our service for God we are apt to miss God Himself. Hence the need of quiet waiting upon Him, and a spirit of quiet restfulness in Him, while active for Him. The cream only rises upon milk when it is still. Quiet is good for two reasons; first, it is good for God, for it gives Him a chance to deal with us; second, it is good for us, for we have time to hear the Lord speak."

The subject of "Fellowship in Rest," was dealt with by Rev. D. Ross, who pointed out—(1) Fellowship in the sense of a common need. Look at others and it will send you out of yourselves, and this in turn will send you to the Lord. (2) Fellowship in a common privilege. Christ wants us to realise what He is. We want to see our common privilege in Him that we may take a common interest in each other. (3) Fellowship, because it prepares for service. The tired one appreciates rest, and the rested one is prepared to tire himself again.

Rev. W. Bainbridge spoke upon "The Valley of Blessing." He said, "The air is pure, the soil is good, the water is excellent, and the victory sure in this valley."

In the afternoon, Mr. J. D. Johnson spoke upon essentials for power in service; and Rev. J. Burkitt spoke upon the spirit of solicitude. The speaker instanced Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Paul, and the Lord Himself as outstanding examples of solicitude, and said that men with a mission are always concerned about it. The address was a soul-stirring one.

A Bible reading was given in the evening by Pastor F. E. Marsh, on the conditions of answered prayer, viz.: (1) Separation from sin (Psa. lxvi. 18). (2) Righteousness of life (James v. 16). (3) Fervency of spirit (James v. 16). (4) Obedience to God's command (John xv. 7). (5) Scripture-guided thought (John xv. 7). (6) Unity of purpose (Matt. xviii. 19). (7) Spirit environed (Jude 20). (8) Faith (Heb. xi. 6). (9) Acquiescence in God's will (1 John v. 14, 15).

The closing address was given by Mr. Reader Harris, K.C., upon the lines on which the Holy Spirit works.

Union Tabernacle, S.W.

AN effort is being made at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth, S.W. by Pastor D. M. Cameron to secure the erection of a small hall at the rear of the main building, in order to afford accommodation for Sunday schools, Bible classes, Band of Hope meetings and other gatherings in connection with the church work. A suitably-situated plot of freehold land has been secured, and towards the total outlay, which is estimated at £300, a considerable balance is still required.

Mr. Cameron, writing from 32, Larkhall Rise, Clapham, S.W., says: "The district is densely populated by the poorer classes, and the numbers continue to increase year by year." Much good work is undertaken by the workers at the Tabernacle, who labour devotedly to attract and influence the people.

Conference at Glasgow.

THE twenty-second annual Conference at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, commenced on Saturday last under the presidency of Pastor D. J. Findlay. The first meeting saw between 1,200 and 1,500 believers assembled. From all parts in and around Glasgow the people came, and large numbers of well-known preachers, missionaries, and workers crowded the building to its utmost capacity. Undenominational in its character, largely missionary in its intention, and designed to increase the spiritual life of those coming to share its yearly gatherings, the quality and power of this autumn re-union of believers was vigorously in evidence.

We seldom remember a conference in which the grace and power of the Holy Spirit were more manifestly present. There was the reality of fervency in prayer, and deep conviction of the presence of the Great Head of the Church. Coupled with strong desires for the indwelling presence and power of the Holy One of God, there was deep interest shown in the clear and bright expositions of the Word of God which formed the staple element in each address that was given. The written Word ran into the Living Word until all present felt that they were with the Great King of assemblies. A pleasant and welcome feature was the rendering of charming songs of praise by some of the sisters in Christ. We shall not soon forget the power that was in the meeting when the whole company rose and joined in the glad refrain—

"We shall shine as the stars of the morning."

The addresses were of a high order, sound in teaching, heart-searching in character, and eminently practical. At the afternoon session Mr. Hugh Paton, Mr. E. J. Cooper (China), Mr. C. F. Reeve (Poona), and Mr. Henry Varley, were the speakers. "In demonstration of the Spirit and with power," may be written of the addresses which, without prior arrangement, ran into one another with singular complement and fitness. Where so much was excellent, it might seem invidious to single out any for special notice; but Mr. Reeve's searching words concerning the Burnt Offering, were felt by many as very instructive and timely. The "whole burnt offering" was shown to be a life wholly God's, and therefore wholly given to, accepted, and consumed by Him.

Mr. E. J. Cooper referred to the terrible wrongs inflicted upon China in connection with the opium traffic, and concluded his address by affirming that God had so overruled the terrible events of the past two years that many of the missionaries had returned to their spheres of service in safety, such as, for certainty, they had not known formerly; nay, more than this, that there is not a single province in China that is not open to missionary effort. In words of intelligent and burning zeal he besought the Christians in Britain not to miss this wonderful opportunity to evangelize China. Thus, again, are we seeing the startling truth of the sorrowful words that "the blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church."

At the evening session the spirit of fervent prayer prevailed, and mingled with the missionary spirit that pervaded the crowded assembly. Mr. W. B. Sloan gave a graphic account of his visit to China, and told how wonderfully the power and peace of God had possessed the suffering bands of missionary brethren and sisters. How many of these had met the missionary martyr's death.

Confirming Mr. Cooper's testimony that verily God has set before us an open door in that dark land, Mr. Sloan said: "Let us go in the strength of the Lord to possess the land for Christ," and closed with a quiet but impassioned appeal to many present to give themselves to this great field of missionary enterprize. Mr. Findlay then in burning words brought home to many hearts the supreme claims of the great Eastern harvest fields.

Despite heavy rain, which continued all day on Sunday, the meetings lacked neither numbers nor power. The early prayer-meeting, the Bible reading at 10.0 by Mr. Reeve, and the morning service at 11.30, all evidenced the rising of the tide. Messrs. Findlay, Sloan, and Varley were the speakers. Mr. Varley's address on Nehemiah and his heroic wall-building, as also Mr. Sloan's address on the importance of fervent and continued prayer, were both timely and helpful. The afternoon session was well attended, but it remained for the evening service in St. Andrew's Hall to tell its story of the hold which Mr. Varley's campaign and the Conference had upon thousands in the City. It was a cheering sight to witness the great gathering from the platform, and to hear the great sound of voices as the service began.

Mr. Sloan spoke with power, following the fervent prayer offered by Mr. Oatts. It was Mr. Varley's last address in the great hall. The attention of the vast audience was very marked. The audience was deeply moved, and twice gave expression to the deep feeling that held sway. The after meeting saw many who professed to receive the Word of Life. Breaking up shortly before 9 o'clock, hundreds formed in procession and returned to the tabernacle.

Then followed the quiet and precious service, where some hundreds of believers gathered to the table of the Lord. It was a joy to see twenty-two, mainly young men and women, for the first time partaking of the feast which tells of Christ's great love. It was indeed a memorable day. The meetings closed on Monday night, when another scene of deep interest and blessing was witnessed.

Many came to the last service to bid God-speed to Mr. Varley, who left on Tuesday morning for a special mission in Inverness commencing the same evening.

Scottish Notes.

THE printing machines in the Glasgow International Exhibition are being utilized by Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, to print over a quarter of a million striking Gospel tracts, which are distributed to the visitors.

A Conference of ministers, probationers, and elders of the Church of Scotland has been arranged in Craiglockhart Hydropathic, from November 11 to 13, and will be presided over by Rev. George Wilson. The general subject, "Personal Dealing in the Emerging Opportunities of our Christian Service," has been chosen largely in order to give those attending an opportunity of telling by what methods, books, or passages of Scripture they have been helped in guiding others through the essential stages of the spiritual life. More opportunity will also be given this year for prayer and intercession.

The Rothesay Convention was a time of much blessing to many. Among the speakers were Mr. Walter B. Sloan (China Inland Mission), Rev. A. Allan, Miss B. Porter (South Africa General Mission), Miss Simeon (Lanarkshire Christian Union), and the Messrs. Govan. On Lord's Day evening, Mr. James Govan spoke to a more general meeting, and at the close over thirty persons came forward to be dealt with personally. The sudden call to Mr. William Govan, referred to in another column, lent an added solemnity to the later gatherings. The funeral service, conducted by Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, was a time which those who were present will not soon forget. At the concluding meeting of the Convention seventy-four persons voiced their testimony to blessing received.

At the sixty-fifth annual meeting of Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society, held last week, Mr. Richard Cameron (president), who has been connected with the Society for fifty-two years, mentioned that the organization was founded by four working men, and at first had a hard struggle for bare existence against prejudice, interest, and scorn. Speaking of the state of affairs in Edinburgh before the passing of the Forbes-Mackenzie Act, Mr. Cameron said that a corps of 200 enumerators, organized by the Society, took a census one Sunday forenoon in the spring of 1852, of the number of visits paid to public-houses, which were then allowed to remain open except during church services, and the total was found to amount to 41,000. The result so startled the community that a second census was taken at the instance of Lord Provost Duncan M'Laren, and an even larger number was reached. A profound sensation was caused not only in the city but throughout Scotland, and the statistics were greatly helpful in securing the passing of the Forbes-Mackenzie Act.

Dublin Christian Convention.

At the opening meeting, last Monday, of the twenty-eighth Dublin Convention, there was a crowded attendance. As usual, three local ministers, members of the Committee, and representing different denominations, delivered addresses of welcome, Rev. J. D. Smylie maintained that the idea of the Convention involved the greatest principles, doctrines, and the greatest truth that was ever revealed to man—the unity of believers in Christ Jesus. The very worst crimes that darkened the pages of history had resulted from men attempting to become supreme in the Church of God, and that was his answer to those who asserted that such conventions might lead to ecclesiastical disorder.

The great want, Rev. George R. Wedgwood said, was a baptism of the Holy Ghost, in order to combat materialism, the drink traffic, religious ceremonialism, and the greed for gold. Rev. S. Prenter followed.

On Tuesday, Dr. A. E. Clayton, of the C.M.S., delivered the first address. He thought the great need of the Churches of to-day was a deeper conviction of sin, and of the necessity of awakening from the apathy and indifference of God's children, not only in regard to this work abroad, but at home. Two things stood out before his mind at the present time in God's people as constituting sin. The first was the love of money, and the second was the love of compromises. Rev. S. A. Selwyn (London), Mr. T. Pakenham Law, K.C., Rev. J. A. Campbell, and Mr. R. Pope Froste, M.A., also took part in this day's meetings.

Rev. John Smith, D.D. (Edinburgh), spoke from Colossians ii. 6, 7. Many Christians seemed to have the erroneous idea that because Christ died for them, and saved them from guilt and sin, so, in the might of their own energies and resolutions they were going to serve Him in return, in the belief that sanctification was their affair and justification Christ's affair. They could no more sanctify themselves in their own strength than they could justify themselves. When they began to realise their fellowship with God, then there came the free, spontaneous play of the spiritual life, and when this fellowship is matter of daily experience the heart will be full of perpetual joy.

A thrilling account of mission work in Manchuria was given by Rev. J. Miller Graham, who said it was his privilege to work side by side in that country with many missionaries of the Irish Presbyterian Church. About a year ago the missionaries had met in the capital of the country, and were congratulating themselves that never in the history of their mission had there been such a successful work there. He mentioned that the names of 20,000 baptized Christians were on their rolls. In the midst of this seeming success came the troubles in China. Having referred at some length to the persecutions of the Christians in Manchuria through the Boxer rising, the speaker went on to say that they had lost many of their Christian people there. Now several had found their way back to the various missionary centres. They believed that, as a result of the recent troubles, the Church in Manchuria had risen to a higher spiritual level than it had ever attained before.

Colonel Bredin presided at the evening meeting, which was largely attended, and an impressive address was delivered by Rev. S. A. Selwyn. The speaker said the peace of God could only be realized through a life lived in obedience to the Holy Ghost, and if that was not in their hearts they should see that they went the right way to get back the peace of God which passeth all understanding. They should thank God that He was so willing to surround them with his mercy. The speaker then urged them to forsake the sins to which they were prone. He warned them specially against untruthfulness and deceit, against social lies, business lies, and political lies. God had a right to claim from them absolute truth in all their relations in life. He was ready to forgive them their sins, and to cleanse them from all unrighteousness.

Rev. Dr. Smith said they should rise to a higher platform, and realize that feelings and experiences were means and not ends. None of them were independent, and he asked them if they had begun their lives by recognising that, or had they told themselves the lie of lies that they were their own masters, and could do as they pleased? That was the whole issue of religion.

Even in this century civilization was not out of the peril of going to pieces. There was the inordinate love of wealth, the pursuit of pleasure, of rapacious ambition, and of unbridled desires for material good as the chief end of life. There were such tendencies that, if they were suffered to work unhindered, would set man against man, class against class, and nation against nation. Even the Church of Christ had a totally inadequate view of sin.

The mid-day meeting on Wednesday was presided over by Colonel Battley, and the first address was delivered by Rev. Charles Inwood from the words "I have no man when the water is troubled to put me into the pool." They needed to be reminded to-day, perhaps more than ever, that Jesus Christ was not the Saviour of a class. Rich and poor were merely surface distinctions. Jesus Christ was the Saviour of the needy, whether they were needy rich or needy poor. It was the helplessness of this poor man, and the selfishness of those who surrounded him, that touched the Lord Jesus. Our Lord's principle was, "Go to the neediest first," and the activity of the Christian Church should be determined by that grand principle.

Rev. Dr. Smith said that the greatest complaint against the Church of to-day was that the common people were not hearing its voice. He did not know how it was in Ireland, but his heart trembled at the alienation of the working man across the Channel from the Church of Christ. The power to reach the multitudes who never entered their churches must be got from the Holy Ghost. That Convention should resolve itself into a continuous cry for a baptism of the Holy Spirit that they might be made instruments in the hands of Christ to bring the vilest and the worst to his standard.

At the afternoon meeting, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Drummond, Rev. S. A. Selwyn delivered another earnest address, and was followed by Rev. F. B. Meyer, who said that every person had a spirit, but in most cases it was like a disused member—it was dead. Yet just as soon as, by the influence of God, the spirit opened to the life of God, it received from Him the spiritual life, and from that moment the spirit of man lived. In all of them there was a life which would outlive the life of intellect and of nature. All that God wanted of any man was willingness to try honestly to serve Him. The difficulties of life came to some of them, but found that they were out. To some people the difficulties of life brought only murmurs, and expostulations, and bitter complaints, while other people seemed to joy in tribulation, and every shock, and anxiety, and loss, and temptation only brought out more of the joy and buoyancy of life in Christ.

All he wanted them to say was, "Thank God for what I have got," and to begin to yield to it from now. Every temptation was allowed to come into their lives to give them a chance of becoming more Christ-like. If they were not tempted, they would not have the chance of taking in the life of Jesus that was given to them in the time of temptation.

At the evening meeting, which, in spite of heavy rain, was well attended, Mr. Meyer continued on the subject of temptation. Satan has the prime mover, the leader of a vast number of fallen demons. In every temptation there were three elements—there was always the appearance of possible good to be got by doing wrong; there was always an appeal to the self-life; and there was always at the back of it the tempter. Satan made man to fall, and the fall consisted in man making "I" his pivot instead of God. The whole was simply selfishness worked out to its ultimate issue. Satan brought man from God to selfishness; God brought him from selfishness to heaven, and that was redemption. Jesus Christ when He came reversed Eden, and regained all the power that man had lost.

In the course of his address the speaker inquired, "Why did God let them be tempted?" He believed temptation was allowed to come when He saw they were lacking in a certain quality of the Christ-life. Temptation was like a warning bell, which showed there was a deficiency, and constrained them to turn afresh to Jesus. It was only through the temptations of life that the speaker had come to know what Jesus could be to the soul.

On Thursday, addresses were delivered by Rev. Canon O'Connor, Rev. W. Y. Fullerton (Leicester), and Rev. C. Inwood. The Hon. the Recorder (Sir Frederick Falkiner) occupied the chair, and expressed himself as horrified, ashamed, and confounded, at the apathy of the Christian Church at the present time with regard to the question of peace and war, earnestly advocating public and private prayer for peace.

Young Men and Missions.

At Cheshunt College, on Saturday afternoon, an interesting gathering took place, arranged with the two-fold object of enlisting the sympathy of students in mission activities in Greater Britain, and deepening the spiritual life of the members of the young men's branch of the Colonial Missionary Society. Although thousands of young men every year leave England for the colonies, little interest is taken by the churches at home in providing religious services in those districts of the dependencies which, though thinly-populated to-day, will in years to come be found to be large and important centres. The young men's branch of the Society has been founded for the purpose of creating among the home churches interest in work for Christ in Greater Britain, and to aid in the preparation of young men for christian service in the colonies.

A meeting was held in the afternoon in the college chapel, at which Rev. W. Hardy Harwood presided. The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. H. Elvet Lewis, after which Mr. Harwood gave an earnest and practical address. He referred to the various classes of emigrants that leave our shores, and made an urgent appeal in the spiritual interests of the young men who go out full of life and hope to mould the life of the colonies. Comparing the home churches with the rapidly rising churches in the colonies, he pointed out that in Greater Britain the Church has an opportunity of showing what Christianity can do, untrammelled by traditions, in making the impress of Christ's teaching deep on the growing life of new communities.

Some timely and thoughtful words were uttered by Rev. W. B. Selbie, who drew helpful and impressive lessons from the Saviour's act in washing the disciples' feet. He urged upon the students the need for cultivating the spirit of true humility, as essential to successful Christian service. It was not so much doing what Christ did as being what He was that would enable them to translate his precepts into action and reproduce his spirit of intense humility.

A solemn service of consecration followed. This was conducted by Rev. Principal Whitehouse, D.D., who was assisted in the observance of the Lord's Supper by students from Cheshunt and other colleges.

After tea in the college addresses were given by Dr. Whitehouse, Professor Johnson, and Mr. H. C. Crow (senior student), and the closing words were spoken by Rev. D. Burford Hooke. It is hoped that this gathering—the first of its kind—will be followed by many similar meetings in colleges, and that the result will be a deep and earnest forward movement among students and young men of the churches for promoting the highest interests of their brothers in the colonies.

A Talk about Tickets.

By William Luff.

ASK father for seven of the tram tickets he has in his pockets, and let them represent railway tickets. Here they are. Now let each stand for a letter, and lay them out thus—

T-I-C-K-E-T-S.

When we are going anywhere we need to have a ticket. Can anyone tell me what ticket we want if going to heaven? Salvation is the only ticket for that terminus. Now let us take up our letters one at a time.

T. A ticket must be Taken. There are thousands of tickets at the Booking Office; but I must take one and call it mine. Thus David said: "The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer" (Psa. xviii. 2). This is appropriating faith, which sings—

My Jesus, I love Thee, I know Thou art mine.

I. A ticket must be Inscribed; that is, it must bear the name of the place to which we are travelling; and that we may make no mistake, it is always wise to examine our tickets at starting. Jesus, who is Himself "the Way," provides the only ticket inscribed "Heaven." We must be sure that we are going to the right place, and are taking the right way.

C. The ticket for heaven is Cheap, without money and without price to us; but it caused Jesus to die for us. Sometimes I have travelled with a friend, who has taken my ticket for me—he has paid for it, and I have received it without paying one farthing.

Jesus paid it all,
All to Him I owe.

Sometimes I see pictures of beautiful places, and feel I should like to go; but the fare is too much. It is not so with the ticket for gloryland.

K. Picking up the ticket representing this letter, we say the ticket for heaven must be Kept. Little ones who try to keep their own tickets often lose them, so it is best to let father keep the tickets; and as the heavenly ticket is of greater importance than any ticket on earth, let us ask our Heavenly Father to keep it—or, better still, to keep us and it.

A little boy who had just joined a Band of Hope brought his pledge card to his father, saying, "Father, I want you to take care of this for me." The father asked why he wished him to do so, and the child replied, "Because I want you to keep everything of importance for me."

E. The ticket for heaven is an Everlasting ticket. Some tickets are available for "day of issue only," some are for a week-end, some a month, and some available for a year; but our heavenly ticket is eternal. What an encouragement to take my ticket early; for if I could carry it for a hundred years it would be as good as at first.

T. This ticket suggests the words, Through and thorough. Christ gives a perfect salvation, right through life, through death, through time, into eternity. Sometimes in journeying we have to change; but no change can be made in our salvation if we are to reach our heavenly terminus. The Band of Hope ticket is good; but it will only take me to the grave, not beyond; but with Jesus I have a through ticket, and I must be thorough in loving and serving Him.

S. This letter, as we pick it up, says the ticket for heaven must be Shown. "All tickets! Show your tickets!" And no one is ashamed to respond. Are we showing our ticket? Not only singing but showing Jesus in our daily conduct at school, at play, in the home. If we do not show our ticket, our friends may well doubt if we have one; and if we have it not, what will we do at the end of our journey?

I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,

T—Take your ticket. See that it is I—Inscribed aright. The poorest may have it, for it is C—Cheap. Let it be K—Kept. It is E—Everlasting, and T—a Through ticket; but it must always be S—Shown.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

NEW QUARTER.—RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after midday Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly competitors; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Quarterly Competition.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom" the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

NEW QUARTER.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 293).

Read Mr. Luff's "Talk about Tickets." Find in the chapters indicated below, texts to illustrate each paragraph.

Children under ten, find 1; under thirteen, 2; older ones, 3. Parents may help those under 10 and 13.

The texts need not contain the exact words that Mr. Luff puts in italics, but they must contain the following ideas:—

T Acceptance of Jesus, or Salvation (Psa. xxiii.; 2 Cor. vi. 1-10; John ix. 13-41).

I Assurance that we are on the right way (1 John iii. 7-18; 1 John v. 9-21; 2 Tim. 1).

C That Salvation is a free gift (Isa. lv.; Rom. vi. 12-23; Rev. xxii. 11-21).

K (a) That we keep to the right way (Prov. iv. 14-27; 2 Tim. i.; Matt. x. 16-26). (b) That Jesus will keep us (1 Pet. i.; Jude; John x. 19-33).

E That Salvation is everlasting (John iii.; John x. 19-33; 1 John ii. 18-29).

T (a) That Salvation will take us all the way to heaven (John xiv. 1-14; 2 Tim. iv. 8-18; Luke xxiii. 34-45). (b) That we must be thorough (2 Tim. iii. 10-17; Gen. xvii. 1-8; 1 Cor. xv. 50-58).

S That we must "show forth his praise" (1 Pet. ii. 1-12; 2 Tim. ii. 1-16; Matt. x. 24-33).

Children's Seaside Services.

TIDINGS of spiritual prosperity in connection with the past summer's campaign at the seaside in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission were given on Monday last at the annual gatherings in King's Hall.

Both afternoon and evening, the hall was thronged with friends and supporters, who rallied from many parts of the country. In the afternoon, Rev. E. A. Stuart, who presided, sounded a note of praise for blessing given in the services. Many preachers whose ministry has proved stimulating to Christians, and convincing to the unconverted, served their "apprenticeship" on the sands; many devoted workers in all parts of the vineyard ascribe their conversion to the influence of the services.

The next speaker, Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, who has laboured at Portrush and Eastbourne, said that although the audiences and the workers changed as the years go by, the outstanding features of the services, remain. Mr. Dodderidge described in graphic terms the labours of the band of missioners who acted under his directions. It is worthy of note, too, that while many children have sought the Lord in these services, quite a number of old people, over seventy years of age, have been impressed. The nurses who bring their young charges to the meetings, have also received spiritual guidance. Additional features at Eastbourne were public readings and devotional addresses. At Portrush the speaker enjoyed the cordial co-operation of more than a score of wholehearted helpers. In conclusion, Mr. Dodderidge referred to some encouraging cases in which young people, influenced in bygone years, in spite of having entertained some antipathy to the services, have become true followers of the Lord.

SIMPLICITY, FRESHNESS, AND THOROUGHNESS,

Rev. S. M. Warner, who followed, gave a vivid account of the Scarborough services, which were attended by very large numbers of young people. A coloured worker from Africa proved a special attraction, and a band of ladies toiled assiduously, as usual, in interviewing the children of visitors and taking them to the services. Drawing-room meetings were also held with good results. Mr. Warner, after recounting some touching instances of conversion in other years, went on to speak of the Southsea gatherings, where a time of reaping was experienced.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, who was in charge at Llandudno, said that the greater part of the missioners at that resort are the converts of former years. There was much to encourage, but, at the same time, the makes it increasingly difficult to win the children.

For the fifteenth year in succession Mr. H. Hutchinson was able to give a good report of the work at Bridlington, where he was warmly welcomed by the parents of young people who had been blessed in other seasons. Many Christians rallied round, and the meetings, which were of a homely and hearty character, proved very attractive. The drawing-room meetings, too, were crowded, and among other notable gatherings was one for praise at 7 a.m., which was crowded. Mr. Hutchinson concluded with a cordial recognition of the valuable services of the missioners.

"Some Time We'll Understand."—This well-known hymn, which has brought a message of comfort to many bereaved and troubled hearts, and which (as will be remembered) was sung in Edinburgh at the memorial service of the Duke of Clarence, was rendered as a solo in the Capitol at Washington on the occasion of the state funeral of the lamented President McKinley. The hymn is found in "New Hymns and Solos" (No. 13), and may be had in leaflet form, with music, at 3d. per dozen. (Morgan & Scott.)

SUNDAY, October 6.

"This grace also" (2 Cor. viii. 7-9).

IF Paul were living to-day, he would be in great request to preach collection sermons, to judge by this chapter. He must have been inimitable in the art of extracting money for all purposes from the pockets of God's people. See how he argues in this chapter. He stirs the Corinthians up by reminding them of the liberality of the churches in Macedonia, notwithstanding their deep poverty. He tells them that he had no option except to receive their gifts, because they were so earnest in beseeching him to receive them. He reminded the Corinthians that they abounded in so many gifts and graces that they must see to it that they were not lacking in this (7). He quotes the example of the blessed Lord in his great descent, and reminds them that they owe everything to his poverty. He suggests that the one thing God wants is willingness, and that He accepts the desire of the poor man to give all with as much delight as the millions of the millionaire; and he hints that the time may come when their own abundance would fall short, and that then it would be the part of the Christians in Jerusalem, for whom the collection was now being made, to supply any lack that they might be suffering (13).

What a wonderful text is the 9th verse! George Herbert, in one of his songs, depicts our Lord stripping Himself as He came down from the throne to the manger of Bethlehem. He put off his tiara, and its jewels became the milky way; laid aside his sceptre, and it became the lightning flash; put off his girdle, and it became the rainbow; doffed the robes of his royal state, and they became the clouds of sunset. This is very poetical, but how wonderful it is to think that He became so poor that He had not where to lay his head, and had to fetch his taxes from the fish's mouth; that his mother could only bring two young pigeons to the Temple; that He lay in a borrowed grave; that He was often breakfastless, and always dependent upon charity. When He died, He had nothing to leave, and his garments were of the coarsest and simplest material.

Because He was poor, we are rich; because He was homeless, He has opened the many mansions; because He was hungry, we have bread and to spare; because He was stripped, we have the white robe; because He had nowhere to lay his head, and slept amid the storm on the hard wood pillow of the boat, we sit with Him in heavenly places.

We can only really help people when we impoverish ourselves, and in the end we are not losers. God will be in no man's debt. What we keep we lose, what we give away is like scattered seed that comes back in harvests. Lay your heart against the heart of Christ until you become filled with the spirit of his poverty, and are content to call nothing your own. Be the steward of everything you possess for his glory and the sake of others.

I wish that as a stepping stone to this, every young person reading these words would resolve from this hour to give a fixed proportion of every sum of money just received. It may be a tenth or twentieth, but let it be some part of every sovereign and shilling. I have done this for many years myself. Give as much more as you like, but never fall below a certain fixed proportion. This will lead on to that completer giving in which you reckon that nothing is your own.

Joseph in Prison (Gen. xxxix. 20 to xl. 19).

Golden Text: Gen. xxxix. 21.

Joseph in Egypt.

WITH the story of Joseph the close relations between Israel and Egypt begin, and recent explorations have revealed pictures and monuments which illustrate this part of the Bible Story. The last of the Hyksos, or dynasty of the Shepherd Kings, was on the throne when Joseph was brought to Egypt. The head of a colossal statue, believed to be the likeness of this king, is now in the British Museum. Joseph was sold as a slave into Zoan, or Tanis, now called San, where the worship of Set, or Baal, was established. It was the civil capital of Pharaoh, and stood on the western limit of his country. Potiphar, who bought Joseph, was the chief officer of Pharaoh's guard. There have been many pictures found of the overseer, to whom his master entrusts all his affairs (v. 4). There is also an ancient story, written about the time of Joseph, called "The Tale of the Two Brothers," which is very much like that of Joseph's temptation and false accusation.

Time.

About eleven years after Joseph had been sold. Potiphar had found out how good and trustworthy his slave was, and gradually he had been raised till he had become the most important man in the house. The reason is given in v. 23. The only true prosperity is when God is with us; worldly and unscrupulous men often seem to prosper, but it does not last. Good men, like Joseph, sometimes seem to fail, but God always brings them out of their troubles purified and ready for a higher work. God specially blessed Joseph, and all he had to do with were blessed for his sake. If we are Christlike, we have influence for good.

The Prison (v. 20).

Potiphar listened to the wicked story invented by his wife, and without inquiry cast Joseph into the royal dungeon, which seems to have been in or under Potiphar's house (xl. 3). At first he was put in fetters of iron (Psa. cv. 18, 19); but the keeper soon found out his worth, and at last all the prisoners were left in his care, and he was kind and sympathetic with them (xl. 7). Mark the influence of "character" under all circumstances. An innocent man can be happy even in prison, and find useful work and opportunities for serving God. Again we have the reason (v. 21, compare 6 and 23).

The Two New Prisoners (xl. 1, 2).

The chief butler and baker were nobles of high rank in Pharaoh's household, one superintending the food and the other the drink. All through this story of the dreams, note the links in the chain of God's providence. God sent the dreams, and used these men eventually for his servant's exaltation and renown.

The Dreams (vv. 9-11, 16, 17).

These nobles knew that Pharaoh's birthday would be in three days, and their minds were full of hope. This influenced their dreams; but God's Spirit guided their sleeping thoughts, and taught Joseph the meaning. They were sad, because there were no magicians in the prison, men who pretended to give the interpretation of dreams. Joseph points them to the true God, who alone can give the real meaning of dreams which He has sent. Mark the Divine assurance Joseph has in interpreting these dreams. He does not hesitate to tell the whole truth, and has not a shadow of doubt that it would come to pass. His appeal for help from the butler is most pathetic (14, 15), and shows how much he felt his confinement in the dungeon, in spite of his privileges.

II. Unmerited blessings for his sake (v. 5; John xvi. 24).

III. Resisting temptation (v. 19; Matt. iv. 1-11).

IV. Falsely accused (v. 19; Matt. xxvi. 59).

V. The two thieves; one saved, the other lost (xl. 13 and 19; Luke xxiii. 33, 39-43).

Memorial to Rev. Dr. Gritton.—It is proposed by friends of the late Dr. Gritton to raise £100, for the purpose of providing the cost of a room in the "Alexandra" Wing of the Sailors' Palace, now about to be erected in connection with the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. This is a most fitting form for a permanent memorial to take, on account of the deep and practical interest taken by Dr. Gritton in this work. Write to Mr. E. W. Measor, St. Aubyns, Culmington Road, Ealing, W.

Irish Notes.

THE fund which is being raised to commemorate the life and work of the late Mrs. Smyly, of Dublin, now amounts to £2,576.

The Archbishop of Armagh has been forbidden by his physicians to preach the sermon at the approaching Church Congress at Brighton. Dr. Alexander is now seventy-eight years of age.

A largely-attended memorial service for the late President McKinley was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Wellington Place, Belfast, on Thursday evening last. Mr. T. F. Shillington presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. J. A. Cregan and William Park. The American Consul, Mr. Touvelle, also took part in the proceedings, which were most impressive throughout.

A meeting to commend to the care of God several missionaries returning to China and India to resume work in these lands, in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church, has been held in Rosemary Street Church, Belfast. The attendance was very large, and the proceedings throughout were of an earnest and solemn nature. The outgoing missionaries were: Revs. W. Hunter, W. H. Gillespie, John Keers, and A. R. Crawford, with Miss M. Mordie, who are sailing for China; and Revs. R. Boyd and J. Sinclair Stevenson, who are proceeding to India. Each of these briefly addressed the congregation, and they were solemnly commended to God in prayer. The Irish General Assembly has now eleven missionaries in India, seven in China, three in Damascus, two in Hamburg, one in Spain, and ten home on furlough, or thirty-four in all.

Welsh Notes.

THE secretaries of the Welsh Wesleyan Methodist Centenary Fund report that the total payments from the circuits of the South Wales district now amount to over £3,000, and from the North Wales district to over £12,000.

The Temperance Society of the Welsh Congregational Union is showing commendable activity in the discharge of its functions. Already some 20,000 copies of a pamphlet issued by the Society, entitled "The Influence of Alcohol on the Mind," have been sold, and another edition is being prepared. Efforts are being made by the committee to get every quarterly meeting throughout the whole of Wales to form a Temperance Committee.

The annual Conference of the English Presbyterian Church of Wales was held at Merthyr on September 24-26, under the presidency of Mr. J. R. Davies, J.P., of Menai Bridge. After a reception to the delegates on Tuesday afternoon by Mr. W. Edwards, H.M. Inspector of Schools, the most important meeting of the Conference was held the same evening, when Rev. Dr. Forsyth, of Hackney College, preached a masterly sermon, founded on John xvi. 8-11.

Rev. Elvet Lewis has drawn attention to the bi-lingual difficulty in connection with Welsh Sunday-schools. His declaration that the over-zealous adherence to the Welsh language is responsible for "moral disaster" is, in too many cases, it is to be feared, perfectly true. Children are compelled to attend Welsh Sunday-schools, where the instruction is conveyed in a language they do not understand. National sentiment may be honoured thereby, but it is at the expense of national religion.

On Tuesday morning, a memorial service was held to the late Alderman J. Jones Griffiths, of Penygraig, who, had he lived, would have presided over the deliberations of the Conference. Following this came a paper on Calvinism, by Rev. R. Morris, M.A., B.D., Dolgelly. Amongst those who took part in the discussion was Dr. Forsyth, who spoke in high terms of the papers read. An interesting discussion on Sunday schools took place. The principal speakers were Professor W. Jenkin Jones, M.A., Aberystwith, and Mr. Edgar Jones, M.A., Barry. In the evening a public meeting was held, at which the subject of "The Church and Social Problems" was discussed.

C.M.S. Autumn Dismissal.

EXETER HALL proved far to small to accommodate the vast throngs of friends and supporters of the C.M.S. who were desirous of attending the valedictory meeting held on Tuesday, September 17. An overflow meeting was arranged in the small hall, and this, also, was crowded to the doors. In the large hall, the outgoing missionaries occupied the whole of the platform. Many parts of the mission field were represented, and dotted over the platform were printed cards giving the destinations of the respective missionaries.

THE GOSPEL AND THE HEATHEN.

The chairman, Sir John Kennaway, M.P., in the course of a brief speech, commended the outgoing missionaries to the prayers of those present. He reminded his audience that they were met to bid adieu to brethren and sisters who have been called to posts of high honour, difficulty, and responsibility; and who have received a high and holy mission, to proclaim the sovereignty of Christ among the heathen, to tell out to them those glad tidings which He came to declare, to make known the great fact of his death for mankind—a fact of which, alas! half the human race has not heard at the present day.

Proceeding, Sir John dwelt upon the difficulties and dangers that will beset the missionaries in their work, and spoke of the time when days would be dark, disappointments frequent, and progress slow. The workers, however, will be cheered by the knowledge and the assurance that prayers are being offered daily on their behalf. As to those who are left behind, they have their own arduous tasks: they are called upon to remove the apathy which still exists in the Church in regard to missionary effort, to command attention for the missionary cause, to instruct, to interest, and to obtain new recruits and helpers.

SOME INTERESTING STATISTICS.

Rev. H. E. Fox followed with some interesting statistics regarding the Society's reinforcements to whom farewell was being said. Altogether 198 missionaries of the Society are going out this year. Of these, 110 are returning missionaries, the remaining eighty-eight leaving for the first time. These figures compare with a total of 139 last year—eighty-seven returning and fifty-two new missionaries. Amongst the new workers this year there are twenty clergy, seven doctors of medicine (two ladies), seven laymen, eleven wives of missionaries, six ladies engaged to missionaries, and thirty-seven other ladies.

Mr. Fox proceeded to give the names of the several missionaries, and subsequently read the committee's instructions to the outgoing party. Five-minute addresses were afterwards given by representative missionaries, first by those who have seen service and are going back to their work, and then by some of the recruits.

THE RETURNING MISSIONARIES.

The first speaker was Archdeacon Caley, who has seen thirty years' service, and is returning to India for the fifth time. He pointed out that the old ones cannot always be returning; their places will have to be filled, and he appealed to the youth of England to come forward and take up the work. Rev. C. H. Stileman spoke for Mohammedan lands, and referred to the many open doors waiting to be entered in Persia. Dr. Hill, who came next, is returning to China, and in an interesting speech pleaded earnestly for that land. Rev. E. H. Elwin described the remarkable progress made in Sierra Leone, and Dr. Miller represented the Niger Mission.

THE NEW WORKERS.

The first speaker on behalf of the new workers was Rev. R. F. Pearce, who prayed that God would give them grace to efface themselves in their work. They must remember they were not sent out to distinguish themselves, but simply to be faithful soldiers and servants of Christ. Rev. M. E. Wigram—an honoured name in C.M.S. circles—represented the home ministry, and left as a farewell message, Prov. xi. 24; Psa. lxviii. 11; and John xiii. 17. Rev. W. V. K. Treanor spoke for Ireland; Dr. Crawford, of the Canadian Church Missionary Association, for the Colonies; and Rev. F. Child represented the Islington students.

The final charge, given by Rev. Canon Lamb, vicar of Clapham, Yorkshire, was an impressive address on Ezekiel xxxvii. 1-10—the resurrection of the dry bones—and clearly and definitely propounded the lessons to be learnt from that passage. The Word of the Lord, he said, is being heard among the dry bones, and there is a shaking among them—even more than a shaking, for the breath of life is entering (among the heathen) where once all was death. As to the reward, that is in safe keeping; what the missionaries have to do is to truthfully, faithfully, and effectively "prophesy upon the dry bones."

Christian Police Association.

THE autumnal conference of the International Christian Police Association was held in Birmingham last week. On Wednesday the Lord Mayor (Alderman Edwards) presided over a reception of the 350 delegates, secretaries, and friends. He spoke in cordial terms of the useful and valuable activities which are carried on under the Association.

The Bishop of Coventry spoke of the good influence which it is possible for policemen to exercise in the discharge of their duties. Upon the Christianity of the police to a large extent depended the future of the city, for they were not merely the repressers of disorder, but had the opportunity of helping people to do right, and of doing kind and charitable acts.

Dr. A. B. Stoney pointed out that the Association did not constitute a mission to policemen, but

A MISSION OF POLICEMEN.

It was formed for the men to help one another. The institution has been of great benefit to Birmingham. Addresses were also given by Mr. A. A. Head, Rev. A. G. Whalley, Mr. W. S. Walton, and Councillor Stembridge.

Thursday's proceedings commenced with a gathering for prayer at the Police Institute. The morning conference was under the presidency of Dr. Stoney. Some hearty words of encouragement were spoken by Sir James Sawyer, who commended the work of the Institute, primarily from the point of view of a Christian, and also from that of a physician. A considerable portion of the morning was taken up with personal testimony and experiences of members of the Association, after which Mr. Barrow Cadbury addressed the gathering. He remarked that a kind to a child often went further than a word from a minister or Sunday-school teacher, and, he was afraid in some cases, even more than those at home. Revs. J. Gregory Mantle and A. G. Whalley also spoke.

At the Conference and missionary meeting in the afternoon in the Central Hall, Councillor G. E. Stembridge, who presided, attributed the success of the institute to its association with religious work, and expressed his desire to see a similar organization in every city throughout the world.

Miss Catherine Gurney, hon. secretary f the Convalescent Homes and Orphanages, told of the great need which is met by these institutions. Dr. Stoney and Mr. Spencer Walton also gave addresses.

In the evening a meeting was held at the Central Hall, when Mr. B. Cadbury was in the chair. He described the amount of work which had been accomplished in providing convalescent homes, three orphanages, police institutes, and stimulating missionary work in distant lands.

On Friday morning there was a Communion service at St. Martin's Church, followed by a praise-meeting in the Police Institute. Later in the day the delegates accepted the hospitality of Mr. George Cadbury, and were entertained at Bournville, where the closing meeting took place in the Girls' Pavilion.

Mr. Meyer and Christ Church.

LETTER TO HIS CHURCH MEMBERS.

MY Dear Friends,—I feel that I must no longer refrain from acquainting you with a decision that has been slowly forming in my mind; and which—the more I think of and pray over it—seems to be God's will.

To be quite frank, I do not feel able to continue to give to Christ Church that minute and special care which it must have, if it is to be efficiently maintained. Neither nervously nor physically can I bear the severe and constant strain involved in such a pastorate, together with the outside work to which I feel I am specially called. And if I must choose, I am led to think that I had better consecrate what strength and time are left to me to the latter service, which, by God's blessing, may prove a widespread benefit to the whole Church of Christ.

In September of next year I shall have completed ten years of ministry at Christ Church, and thirty-five of pastoral work; and I propose during that month to resign the charge, which has been so blessed and happy, that I may travel quietly through the world, and specially through Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and the United States, doing what I can to quicken and raise the standard of Christian living.

Naturally I cling to a fixed pastorate, and especially to my beautiful church. It will be a real wrench to tear myself away, and only a sense of duty could compel me. I think also that it is better to give up my pastorate while our congregations are larger than ever, and the whole organization is thoroughly healthy.

In the meanwhile, I want to assist in securing the best man possible as my successor, and if we cannot find one at the time I have mentioned, I will gladly retain the nominal pastorate till the church is settled.

The officers have earnestly entreated me to reconsider my resignation, but I am sure it is wisest and best to adhere to it; and at the age of fifty-five I may yet do real service to the whole Church of Christ.—With sincere Christian affection, Yours very sincerely,

F. B. Meyer.

Christ Church, September 30, 1901.

P.S.—Don't let us talk too much about it, but bend our prayers and strength for the best winter's campaign we have ever had. God has a David somewhere!

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD Diocesan Conference has been sitting—the first over which Dr. Paget has presided. In the interest and variety of the subjects treated, and in the spirit and temper in which questions were approached, the existence of such gatherings was justified. We are glad to note that next year an attempt is to be made to make the Conference more truly representative both of the clergy and laity.

The Bishop's address was such as we have been led to expect from him—spiritual, statesmanlike, and full of sympathy. He justified the existence of such gatherings on the ground that they taught us, by frank and considerate discussion, to understand and reverence minds unlike our own, as well as affording instruction on subjects which the speakers had strenuously and long thought out. Prejudice and unreality are removed only by the cultivation of equity, patience, and breadth of view, and by seeing further than the horizon of our own tasks and cares.

Speaking of the war, he said the Church should feel a deepened consciousness of mission to bear witness before England for the things eternal and unseen. His closing words appealed to all present, to those, not least, who belong to another type of churchmanship than that held by the Bishop. "Many of you I can already, with deep gratitude, claim as tried and true friends; with all, I trust, I have that bond of mutual goodwill, identity of hope, and common work, which is the frame of friendship, waiting only for experience to give it life and strength."

Among the subjects discussed at the Conference was that of Sunday observance, and a strongly-worded resolution was passed decrying the increase of labour caused by entertainments and amusements on Sunday.

Rev. W. E. Burroughs, late of the C.M.S., was the chief speaker at the annual Sunday School Teachers' Conference held on Thursday week at St. John's College. His subject was "Sunday School Teachers and Missionary Work—an opportunity and responsibility." He urged that formation was better than reformation; therefore train the young for missionary work.

On Thursday Dr. Ferguson, of Birmingham, opened the new mission hall in Magdalen Road, occupying the pulpit in the afternoon, and preaching to a large congregation. Mr. Clifford has for some years worked hard in this corner of the city, and we heartily congratulate him on this successful issue of his labours.

Obituary.

REV. ALFRED NORRIS.

THE death of Rev. Alfred Norris, of Brighton, removes a devoted minister of the Congregational body, and a writer of spiritual and graceful poems. His last sphere of work was at Clifton Road Church, Brighton, and many were the tributes paid on his retirement to his devotion and influence not only in the church, but in public life. Mr. Norris entered the ministry in 1863. He had pastorates in Northumberland and West Kensington before going to Brighton in 1891. A friend writes of him: "He has left the memory of a most gifted and fearless ministry, and a spiritual influence that tells clearly the manner of man he was."

MR. WILLIAM J. GOVAN, GLASGOW.

A well-known figure has been removed from the religious life of Glasgow by the death of Mr. William J. Govan, which took place somewhat suddenly at Rothesay on September 21. Deceased was, along with Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming and Mr. William Sloan, on the original executive of the Glasgow Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, and he also took a lively interest in the Keswick Convention. He was the eldest son of the late Bailie Govan, and was connected with the firm of Messrs. William Govan and Son, muslin manufacturers, Glasgow and Pollokshaws. He retired from business in 1889, and since then resided at Busby, and latterly West Kilbride. Some years ago he published a volume of poems, entitled "In His Presence," which was very favourably received. He visited Rothesay to attend the meetings of the Faith Mission Convention, of which his younger brother (Mr. John George Govan) is director, and was present at two meetings on Friday. He was taken with a paralytic seizure at midnight, and passed away on Saturday. Mr. Govan was a widower, and is survived by two sons. He was in his fifty-ninth year.

MISS BOYS, OF LUCKNOW.

Widespread sorrow will be occasioned by the tidings, which have recently been received in this country, announcing the "Home-going" of Miss Boys, of Lucknow. After several years of earnest service for Christ, at Camberley, in Surrey, where the influence of her consecrated life was witnessed in the conversion of many young people, for whose souls she zealously watched, she was led of God to offer herself for foreign work, and the year 1885 found her settled in India as an honorary worker in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission. Those who were intimately acquainted with her, and observed the progress of her service for the Master among the heathen, recognised in Miss Boys one whose high Christian character, deep spirituality, peculiar aptitude, and exalted aims, marked her out as a true missionary; and whilst it was her joy, and that of her colleagues, to see the good hand of God upon her, making her a means of much blessing to the poor women and girls among whom she worked, eternity alone will reveal how far-reaching was her usefulness in the service of God. After years of very happy work, arrangements had been made for our dear sister to return home on furlough, and joyous anticipations were entertained by her beloved parents, Mr. and Mrs. Boys, of Ryde, of welcoming their honoured daughter on her arrival in a few weeks' time. But our Heavenly Father had planned otherwise. On Lord's Day, September 22, the Master came and took her to Himself. And thus ended, on earth, at the age of forty-two, a life which was conspicuously rich in spiritual grace and blessing. Her deeply attached companion and fellow-missionary, Miss Marshall, was with her all through her illness, and lovingly watched by the side of the dear one till Jesus took her. Much prayerful sympathy will be felt for the family which has been so sorely bereaved.

Evangelistic.

Gipsy Smith at West Norwood.

GREAT blessing has attended GIPSY SMITH'S ten days' mission at West Norwood. Under his earnest heart-searching appeals hundreds have sought the inquiry-rooms. Sunday last was a particularly solemn service. After a large number of inquirers had been dealt with, Christians who had followed the Lord "secretly" or "afar off" were addressed, and urged to be whole-hearted in service. Deep gratitude is felt for the spiritual prosperity of the mission.

Gordon Evangelistic Mission.

A fortnight's mission has just been concluded by Mr. JOHN HAWKINS, in Aberdeen, in one of the tents of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission. On each evening anxious souls were pointed to the Saviour. The attendances were good; towards the end of the mission many had to stand, and on the evening on which the evangelist told the story of his life, hundreds stood and listened outside. The services closed with a united meeting in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. We are full of praise for what has proved the most fruitful tent season that we have experienced in this city. J. O. S.

Cox Green Mills, near Bolton.

A fifteen days' mission was concluded on Lord's Day last by Mr. HENRY COLLINS, of the Evangelization Society, at Cox Green Mills, near Bolton. At the final meeting Mr. THOS. HARDCASTLE presided. The large audience listened eagerly to the address, and appeared to be deeply impressed. The mission has been of an inspiring character throughout. Many persons, young and old, professed to find peace with God through faith in his Son. A father, who was converted at a mission held here five years ago by Mr. Collins, gave thanks for the conversion of his eldest daughter during this mission.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Sheffield.

A Mission was conducted by Mr. W. R. LANE, in Hanover Methodist Free Church, Sheffield, September 14-23, with gratifying results. It was Mr. Lane's first mission in Sheffield. At the first meeting, on the Saturday evening, he addressed the workers and friends, and his plain, practical, earnest speech put him at once into close touch with all present. The services throughout have been well attended, and have been marked by quiet, yet forceful, spiritual influence. Mr. Lane's presentation of the Gospel gripped the conscience and touched the heart most effectively, so that a number of souls were brought to Christ. The lecture on "Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by exquisitely painted lantern slides, was highly appreciated, and the story of his life, with which the mission closed on the Monday night, left an impression that will not soon pass away. Work in Central Glasgow.

Near Glasgow Cross, about 250 yards to the south of it, is the Tent Hall; while about 100 yards to the north of it is the Tolbooth Hall. Both places have long been known as the birthplaces of precious souls, and in both of them fruitful special missions have just been brought to a close.

In the Tent Hall the Evangelist has been Mr. HUGH PATON, formerly of the South Morocco Mission. The mission has been one of more than usual interest in attendance and result. A number have been led to the Saviour; in some instances husband and wife have started out on the narrow way together. Prior to the indoor services, huge open-air meetings were held each evening in the Jail Square. Limelight having been brought into use at these open-air gatherings, great numbers flocked together to see, and the word of salvation was preached unto them. Friends interested in the work carried on in this centre, where Rev. James Scott rendered years of earnest service, will be glad to learn that under Mr. R. Logan's superintendence the work is reviving greatly. At a Saturday afternoon conference held while the mission was going on, nearly a thousand people were present. The mission has given a great impetus to the work, and things look hopeful for the winter.

The mission—a five weeks' one—in the Tolbooth Hall has been conducted by Mr. HUTCHINS, an evangelist from the south. This, his second visit to the same place within a year, has been used of God to bring about cheering result, as was the case on his former visit. Mr. Hutchins sings as well as preaches, and his services have been greatly appreciated by the workers at the Tolbooth Hall. J. C.

On September 30, Mr. J. BENNETT ANDERSON concluded a month's united mission in City Hall (Rev. Dr. John Robertson's) and St. James' Hall, Glasgow. A large number of anxious souls have been dealt with by the missionary, Mr. A. Bell, and his many helpers. During the five weeks, Gospel services were held nightly, and many most interesting cases of blessing were met with.

Rev. J. ATKINSON, of Ossett, has conducted a mission at Halladown Hall, West Hartlepool, and much blessing has resulted.

Services now in progress in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Christchurch, New Zealand, have resulted in spiritual awakening, and many have sought the Saviour. On October 13, Rev. J. LYALL is to commence a month's meetings.

Mr. BOB JOHNSON has recently visited Gloucester. An open-air service was held in the fair ground, the platform being the stage front of the largest show. Hundreds stood round to listen to the Gospel message, and a tea for showmen, held in the Oddfellows' Hall, was also well attended.

Mr. WM. COLLARD has conducted a three days' service in connection with the Workmen's Mission, Sheffield. The open-air service on Sunday afternoon was attended by hundreds of the rough men from the Crofts, but best of all, spiritual power pervaded the meeting. Indeed, all the services were blessed, and precious souls sought the Saviour.

A. S. O. BIRCH, Pastor.

Mr. HENRY THORNE has just completed a ten days' mission in connection with the Whitehaven Y.M.C.A. From the beginning the meetings were well attended, and towards the end of the mission the Oddfellows' Hall (the largest in the town) was crowded to overflowing. Mr. Thorne's Bible readings and addresses were fresh and powerful, and created a deep impression. Earnest Christian workers were refreshed and stimulated by the mission, and very many unconverted people, especially men, were led to make a profession of faith in Christ. M. Y.

Tent Work.

London Tent Campaign.

The site at Wimbledon is an ideal one, right in the midst of the people, who, night by night, have manifested their appreciation of the services. Mr. CHARLES INGLIS and Mr. R. S. BRADBROOK have conducted the services during the past week, and many have been led to decision. On Saturday afternoon there was a gathering of converts from the Tooting tent, when a very helpful address was given by Mr. Bradbrook. There were many expressions of regret that the missioners could not stay longer.

During the past few weeks a grand work has been accomplished at Deptford, where Mr. WILLIAM GROVE has been labouring with the devoted assistance of the committee. The singing of Madame ANNIE RYALL has also been attractive, and large numbers have heard the Gospel. Some remarkable cases of blessing are recorded. The mission closed on Monday last.

At Clapham Road the WEAVER BROTHERS have concluded a fruitful week's mission. Mr. CHAS. COOK and Mr. R. S. BRADBROOK continue the work during the present week.

About Books.

EVANGELISTIC THEOLOGY.

A THOROUGHLY practical and decidedly interesting contribution to Evangelistic Theology has been made by Rev. J. Campbell Gibson, D.D., of the English Presbyterian Mission, Swatow, in his goodly volume, Mission Problems and Mission Methods in South China. (6s. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier.) The volume contains a series of lectures which were delivered by appointment of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland in connection with the Lectureship on Evangelistic Theology.

From first to last this is an excellent work. The account of Chinese literature and philosophy, followed by a description of the religions of China, will answer inquiries such as must have been raised in many minds during the past year or so. Necessarily Dr. Gibson's pages deal largely with the work in which he has been engaged in South China; thence he draws many of the lessons which it was his privilege to place before college-students in England and Canada, as well as in Scotland. Assuredly his experience has been gained in a specially fruitful field.

After delineating the industrial life of the people, Dr. Gibson writes with great force on evangelistic preaching, and then on the planting of the Church, with its organization and the culture of the Christian life. "Christian Character in the Chinese Church" is another chapter containing much that is striking and encouraging from the Evangelistic point of view. In conclusion, Dr. Gibson makes a passionate appeal for more workers. He says:—

> We hail recent events as the struggle between darkness and light, which always ends in dawn. The Christian mission has given to China her first reformers. Six of these have laid down their lives as martyrs of her regeneration, one of them exclaiming, on his way to death, "For every head that falls to-day, a thousand will arise to carry on the good cause."
> The hope of China lies in the building up of a pure and strong Christian Church, which shall supply the elements of character which alone can save the nation, and shall so permeate with the Christian spirit the stores of knowledge and material power now pressed on China's acceptance by the West, as to make them a means of life, not an occasion of ruin and calamity.
> Much depends on how we deal with our opportunity. We have a native Church of over 80,000 communicants, many thousands of worshippers and hearers; and we have free access to millions of awakened and inquiring minds.

The Free Church Magazine (1d. monthly. A. H. Stockwell, 2, Amen Corner, E.C.) is going forward. An advance copy of the issue for January next—prepared thus early in order that Churches may consider its adoption for localizing purpose—is before us. It includes a portrait plate of Rev. Dr. Maclaren, and contains several articles of lively interest.

Fieldpath Rambles between Ramsgate, Margate, Canterbury, Sandwich, and other Kentish towns and villages is the twenty-second of the admirable series of route-books by which Walker Miles has laid all lovers of the country under obligation. These books are invaluable to pedestrians, and the one now before us opens up many a charming and health-giving ramble. (6d. R. E. Taylor & Son, 51, Old Street, E.C.)

Calendars and Almanacs for next year are already making their appearance; and in view of the fact that it takes many weeks to get copies into distant places, their issue is only just in good time. A block which will prove of service in many a home, as well as deliver silent testimony for Christ in offices and other places of business, is "The Christian" Calendar (1s. Morgan & Scott). The date is boldly displayed, and there is a Scripture excerpt for every day.

The new volume of the New Century Leaders series, Alexander MacLaren, D.D. (1s. 6d. Partridge), brings home to us the fact that the veteran preacher is now in his seventy-sixth year. In addition to an interesting narrative of his career, a valuable chapter deals with "Dr. McLaren as an Author." The closing chapter traces the sources of the power of this leader to "love to Christ, contemplation of Christ, prayer and study of the Bible;" and it is shown how truly these "are within the reach of all believers."

Rev. G. P. McKay, of Devonshire Square Church, Stoke Newington, has issued in booklet form a paper which he recently read before the London Baptist Association: The Second Coming of Christ, the Early Christians' Hope. We trust many will read this timely statement of sound doctrine. Mr. McKay's concluding words show his attitude: "Simple we may seem to modern men to be; but it is the ancient truth we hold, the good old way we tread; and though we look 'like them that dream,' we will still watch and wait the coming of our Lord." (1d. T. H. Hopkins, 16, Gray's Inn Road.)

Fellowship with God Gives Perfect Satisfaction, by George Kelsey, is another booklet from a busy pen. The contents are spiritual in tone, and eminently readable. (6d. per dozen. Partridge.)

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Dean of Norwich has invited the younger clergy to a series of breakfasts at the Deanery. After the repast the Greek Testament is to be studied, and opportunity will be afforded for discussion on matters relating to parochial life and labour.

Wakefield Diocesan Conference takes place on October 15 and 16. The subjects for discussion include "Sunday Observance," "The Promotion of Unity Among Christians," "The Constitutional Management of Parishes," "The Present Position and Urgency of the Convocation Question," and "The Church and the Marriage Laws."

The new Principal of St. Aidan's Theological College, Birkenhead, Rev. Arthur Tait, M.A., has taken up residence. Before leaving Eastbourne, he was the recipient of several farewell gifts from the parishioners of Holy Trinity, where he had been curate for three years. The vicar, Rev. W. A. Bathurst, made the presentation on behalf of the parishioners.

In a letter to the Reading newspapers, Mr. Martin J. Sutton, J.P., complains that in the course of the service in memory of President McKinley, recently held in St. Lawrence's Church, attended by the Mayor and Corporation of the town, "prayers for the dead" were offered, and the vicar described the proceedings as "a memorial before God, beseeching his mercy, and his light, and his love, on the soul of the departed President." Mr. Sutton says: "The civic authorities of Reading, who wished to mark by their presence their respectful sympathy with America, and their admiration for the character of the late President, have, when too late, discovered that they were taking part in a function insulting to his memory, and that they have been themselves compromised by countenancing a service which was an outrage on Protestant Reading, and a cause of shame to every loyal Churchman."

Congregational.

The difficulties regarding the structural reconstruction of Claremont Chapel, Pentonville, for the purposes of a mission centre have practically been overcome. Plans are now ready for the alterations at this, the first central mission hall of the Union's new departure.

The announcement is made by the L.M.S. that Rev. F. W. Walker has agreed to become the superintendent of the Fly River Mission, New Guinea, in succession to the late Rev. James Chalmers. Before Mr. Walker undertakes this special work he will visit this country, in order to confer with the directors of the society.

The John Robinson Memorial Church, Gainsborough, will celebrate its tercentenary next year, when Dr. C. Ray Palmer, of New Haven, will probably take a leading part. In anticipation of the celebration, an address has been prepared for presentation to the American Congregational Council at Portland, Maine, in October, emphasizing the claims of the church upon American Congregational churches.

At a "quiet day" held at Norwich, in connection with the East Norfolk Free Church Federation, a paper was read by Rev. Dr. Barrett, on "Gains and Losses in Modern Preaching," in the course of which he said: "One of the chief perils that besets us is the danger of secularising not the method, but the very substance of our teaching. We cannot repeat too often this truth, that preaching is only strong and lasting in its effects as it keeps near the Cross of Jesus Christ."

Eight years ago Rev. J. Stockwell Watts relinquished his pastorate at Bethnal Green Road in order to devote himself entirely to the "Liberator" Relief Fund. He is now, as a labour of love, trying to resuscitate the cause at Bethnal Green Road, which is burdened with a debt of £250. The church is without a pastor, and Mr. Watts is most anxious to prepare the way for the settlement of some suitable minister in this sphere of labour. His address is Grindelwald, St. David's Road, Southsea.

Baptist.

The jubilee of the denomination in New Zealand, for the celebration of which Rev. J. G. Greenhough visits the Antipodes, is, the Southern Baptist states, an occasion of peculiar interest. "Our body there is a thriving and expanding one. This has been due under God to the character of the men who were its pioneers. They were men of more than ordinary piety and intelligence, and were withal staunch in their adherence to, and advocacy of, our principles."

A new and commodious church has been opened at Rushden (Pastor W. F. Harris). At the inaugural service, Rev. Dr. Clifford, in the course of a powerful address, said they dedicated the building as a house of prayer, not for any selfish purposes, but for holy work, for every work that is helpful to men's best and noblest interests. They dedicated it to war against intemperance, impurity, covetousness, selfishness, and sin, in all their forms and forces. They dedicated it as the home of a happy, joyous, Christian Church.

Pastor D. Roberts, of Senghenydd, writes, respecting the explosion on May 6, when eighty-one men lost their lives: "The effects of the calamity are keenly felt by us as a Church. Our responsibilities are heavy, being over £2,000, and we are now but few and weak to grapple with them. Many of our brethren are working elsewhere; some have removed from the place; others are out of work, and some, as you know, are gone to their final rest. You can imagine, better than we can describe, our condition, and the smallness of our collections. We were happy and prosperous before the explosion, and our prospects bright, but now we are almost crushed, but still hopeful."

Methodist.

Ebenezer Primitive Methodist Church, Grimsby, has spent over £60 a week in relief, in connection with the distress arising from the unhappy trade dispute.

Mr. J. M. Taylor, who has laboured with good effect at St. Peter's Wesleyan Mission, Leeds, as organizing secretary, has been appointed by the Home Mission Committee of the Leeds Synod as district evangelist.

In connection with Approach Road Church, Victoria Park, N.E., a Social Work committee provides a dinner for fourteen or fifteen old people from the Workhouse, thus making it possible for them to come to the morning service.

The Surrey and North Hants Wesleyan Mission continues to make progress. A chapel has been opened at Wolmer Forest; this is the second chapel that has been dedicated in the Petersfield Section of the Mission since its establishment last September.

Totnes Methodists kept festival on September 19, when the new church in Fore Street was opened for public worship. It supersedes an ancient structure which was both inconvenient and inadequate. The new building seats over 300 persons, and spacious schoolroom and class rooms have been erected at the rear.

Rev. R. Culley has issued his annual letter to Wesleyan Sunday-school scholars and young people in view of "Children's Sunday." The one purpose of the letter is to focus the attention of children and young people upon the supreme work of the teachers during the year—viz., to lead them to religious decision.

In the course of a letter to Rev. Hugh Price Hughes on the Twentieth Century Fund, Mr. W. P. Hartley, of Aintree, writes: "It would be a general and national calamity if the Wesleyan Methodist Church should fall short of the full amount desired to accomplish the admirable objects to which the fund is devoted. Actuated by these feelings, I have much pleasure in offering the last 5,000 (five thousand) pounds or guineas, as the case may be, provided the full amount of one million pounds or one million guineas be raised."

The Primitive Methodist Missionary Society has issued its fifty-fourth annual report, which shows that in connection with the home and colonial department there are six mission stations in London, with eleven missionaries; twenty-nine country stations, with thirty-eight missionaries; and twenty-three colonial stations, with twenty-three missionaries. In the foreign department of the Society's work there are four stations on the island of Fernando Po, two in the Niger Protectorate, one in Southern and three in Central Africa.

Presbyterian.

The Manchester Presbytery has authorized the call of Rev. D. M. Munro, of Rochdale, to Bainsford United Free Church, Falkirk. Mr. Munro has been at Rochdale for two years, and during his ministry there the church membership has largely increased.

A handsome new church, costing about £2,000, has been opened in the village of Donacloney, Co. Down. In the vestibule of the building a memorial tablet has been erected recording the names of all the previous ministers of the congregation, going back to the year 1750.

Rev. Alexander Connell, of Regent Square, recently paid a visit to Grimsby, preaching in Victor Street Church. Although meant principally for the benefit of the Highland girls, who come to the port for the herring season, Mr. Connell's visit had long been looked forward to by the congregation. He preached both in English and Gaelic, and, after the service, two dozen Gaelic girls (chiefly from Stornoway) stayed, when Mr. Connell conversed with each, gave them another little address in Gaelic, and led them in singing the twenty-third Psalm.

Society of Friends.

Daniel Oliver, from Ras-el-Mein, has recently been visiting many of the meetings in Durham Quarterly Meeting, he and his wife staying with Friends in Darlington, and travelling to and fro.

Joseph and Katharine Taylor have accepted for the present the superintendency of the Friends' Missionary Training Home, Chester House, vacant by the resignation of Dr. John Lawrence.

Rather a smaller number of Friends than usual gathered for the meeting on Ministry and Oversight at Nottingham on the evening previous to the Quarterly Meeting. Sarah Elizabeth Rowntree and James Douglas Maynard were present. An earnest concern was felt that all should indeed "watch unto prayer that they might be preserved in humble dependence upon Christ, and in earnest religious exercise for the conversion of sinners."

The Salvation Army.

The Government of Natal makes an annual grant of £300 to the Army's Home for Discharged Prisoners in that colony. The Government of Cape Colony also gives a grant of £250 annually to the social work.

The twenty-second Rescue Home in connection with the Army in America has just been opened. An additional Orphanage has also been established in connection with one of the Army's land colonies in the States.

Memorial stones of the Evangelical Free Church, Brentwood Road, Romford, were laid on the 12th ult. by Mr. J. W. Lasham and Pastor H. W. Marriott. Addresses were given by Rev. J. M. Steven and others. A public meeting was held in the Gospel Hall, Romford, when helpful addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Higham, G. Broad, and other friends. The church is to take the place of the Gospel Hall, which has proved inadequate for the congregation worshipping there. It will cost £1,500.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. Charles Pumphrey, of Small Heath, Birmingham. A member of the Society of Friends, Mr. Pumphrey was from his early youth an ardent temperance worker.—Rev. George Davidson, LL.D., minister of Logie-Coldstone, N.B.; a faithful and conscientious parish minister, held in the highest esteem by the whole parish and district, irrespective of denomination.—Rev. C. H. Carr, for thirty years rector of Moor Monkton, York, and previously to that for twenty years a clergyman at Limehouse, in his eightieth year.—Rev. J. V. Wills, rector of Milstead, near Sittingbourne, who was found by his wife lying insensible on the floor of his room, death ensuing from apoplexy.—Sir Charles Edward Bernard, K.C.S.I., late Chief Commissioner in Burma, recently passed away at Chamonix. He was warmly interested in Foreign Missions, and was a Vice-President of the C.M.S.—Rev. J. O'Dell, who twice filled the pastorate of George Street Baptist Church, Hull, being first called there in 1859, and, after service in various parts of the kingdom, again in 1876. He retired in 1895. — Mr. Wm. Binns, a devoted worker in connection with the Wesleyan Sunday School Union, aged sixty-eight.—Mr. T. T. Marks, a well-known engineer, of Llandudno, and a member of the Baptist body.—At Galle Face, Colombo, on September 23, Rev. Stephen Coles, one of the most experienced and efficient missionaries of the C.M.S. in Ceylon. He had for many years devoted himself to the work of Bible translation and revision.

Japanese Sailors in London.—It is a pleasure to hear of continued blessing upon the work which Miss McLean superintends among Japanese sailors visiting London. If those who assist in the matter of providing bags and reading matter only knew how greatly their kindness is appreciated, they would assuredly redouble their exertions in this direction. Miss McLean's work is distinctly evangelical; in order that communications for her should reach their proper destination, it is important that they should be fully addressed: Japanese Christian Institute, Tilbury Docks, Essex.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The Death of the Ameer. The death of the Ameer of Afghanistan is an event which may be fraught with the gravest consequences in Central Asia. The tribes of which the nation is composed are actuated by mutual jealousies, which may be fanned into internal strife on any crisis. More serious still to the British Empire is the readiness of the peoples on the Indian frontier to take sides in these quarrels. It is of the utmost importance that order should be maintained among the Afridis and neighbouring tribes which have caused so much trouble in the past. A strong government at Cabul could have prevented more than one recent frontier war, but it seems hopeless to expect such a ruler within the pale of Islam. Here we have another nation whose deep, inarticulate cry can only be met by the preaching of the Gospel.

Turkish Misrule. Conclusive evidence of the inefficiency of Turkish government is continually coming to the front. It is hardly credible that in this new century a lady missionary—Miss Stone, of the American Board—should be kidnapped in Europe, and held to an enormous ransom, with the intimation that her execution will take place on a given date unless the demand be complied with. It is a scandal to civilization that such things should be allowed by the Powers of Europe to go on; and it may be questioned whether, if the victim had been in any way connected with the diplomatic or consular services, the excuses put forward by the Porte would have been accepted. At the present moment, too, there is an ominous silence regarding events in Armenia, which it is to be feared may be broken only by news of renewed massacre. If earthly governments are helpless in such circumstances, Christian people ought to be much in prayer on behalf of their fellow-believers.

The Interminable War. The proposal of the Archbishop of York that the country shall set apart a day for humiliation and prayer on account of the continued war in South Africa seems to have taken the daily Press by surprise. Prayer and humiliation are not quite the sort of thing they are prepared for. And yet is it not time that the country began to seek counsel of God? Two years ago, when the first reverses in the Transvaal struck a chill to our heart, there was much talk of humiliation and prayer. Then followed the elation of victories, succeeded now by general anger and blame. That there is something seriously wrong somewhere, nobody can doubt. We in these columns have nothing to do with the War Office or the Colonial Government; but, as patriotic Christians, we have much to do with the fact of this continued war, which we were assured a year ago was virtually over. Is it, as the Archbishop says, that our national sins are accountable for our reverses? At any rate, the country has every reason to prostrate itself before God.

The Limits of Personal Liberty. We are more than a little astonished to find so respectable a newspaper as the Newcastle Daily Chronicle expressing sympathy, in a leading article, with the attempts of the betting fraternity of that city to protect themselves against the attacks made upon their craft by the Anti-Gambling League. In the name of "personal liberty" the newspaper defends the bookmakers. It is really time that the sacred word "liberty" should be redeemed from the abuse to which it has been subjected. The Frenchwoman might well cry, "O liberty! what crimes have been committed in thy name!" since "liberty" seems to be used as a label for all kinds of actions—good and bad. There is no such thing as absolute liberty. True liberty is limited, so far as men are concerned, by altruism. Whatever passes this boundary becomes licence. And is there, in the country, a single respectable man who will pretend that the betting business is altruistic? Why, then, should it be defended by so many in the name of liberty?

Purified Recreations. The same journal thinks it becoming to make the following remarks upon the conduct of Christian and other men who are striving to cut out the cancer which is corrupting our public amusements. Reformers are charged with wishing to suppress certain sports, &c., "because they afford keen enjoyment to the people, and they hate to see the people enjoy themselves in any fashion save that which receives their imprimatur." We hope the paper will have the good taste and honour to withdraw, unreservedly, so offensive and utterly false a statement. Every honest and healthy recreation receives the support of good Christian people, but certain of the popular sports have become so corrupted by the gambling which is associated with them that there is nothing to be done but to abolish some of them in their present form, and begin over again. We sincerely desire to see the people enjoy themselves, but it is intolerable that a clique of moral vampires should drain the people's virtue under the pretence of furthering their amusements.

Modern Covetousness. It is remarkable what a large amount of space is given in the New Testament to warnings against covetousness. And it is equally remarkable how little is said about this sin in modern times. Yet it is probably one of the most common and fatal sins of our epoch. A great haste to be rich—at any price—characterizes our modern life. Mammon is the great deity for the many. Wherever covetousness prevails, the rights both of God and of man are always obscured. On the one hand is irreligion, and on the other hand is inhumanity—both products of this sin. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth . . . Seek ye first the Kingdom of God."

The Greatness of the Universe. One of the most remarkable speeches delivered at the late meetings of the British Association emphasized the almost incredible vastness of the universe. The telescope has opened up worlds innumerable, and too vast almost for human conception. The inference drawn from this fact by many people is that our world is too small and its inhabitants too insignificant for God especially to notice. We must remember, however, that mere bulk and extent of matter do not constitute true greatness. Pascal finely observed that, great as was the universe, man was greater, since the former did not know that it was great, but man did. A man six feet high, who can climb a mountain 18,000 feet high, is greater than the mountain. "The mind's the measure of the man." Let us beware of being imposed upon by figures recording billions and trillions; it is easy to be crushed by them. Our position in the universe is not to be measured by the amount of space that we occupy, but by the extent of our likeness to God.

"Impossible Uniformity." One conspicuous thing will strike all our readers in the reports of the Church Congress at Brighton, i.e., the kindly and emphatic manner in which Christian union was urged by such leaders as the President of the Congress, the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of Calcutta. Many will thank Dr. Winnington Ingram for his phrase "impossible uniformity," to strive after which is, as his lordship said, a waste of time. There may be, and surely there ought to be, true unity amongst Christians, without an unnatural insistence upon what in the nature of the case can never be, i.e., absolute uniformity. The picture drawn by Dr. Ingram of the impossibility "for organized vice, trade monopoly, or class prejudice to stand long against a kingdom of God come in power," would soon be fulfilled if the various Churches, Established and Free, would follow the leading of the Spirit of God, and blend all their Evangelical forces.

Looking in the Right Place. The Bishop of Calcutta, in a recent address, stated that he was travelling for 545 days in India before he saw a snake out of captivity; in fact, he had seen only one now, and that was in his own garden at Simla. So, he urged, if any persons said they had never seen a native convert, it was because they had not looked in the right place. Nothing struck the visitor more forcibly than the extent to which Christianity was in evidence, and there were numbers of native Christians "whose lives, in their humility, integrity, and piety, would shed lustre upon the Church in any part of the world." India, with its area of 1,400,000 square miles, and its teeming population—every sixth child born into the world lives in India or Ceylon — presents many difficulties; but the soil is ready for the seed, and the census recently taken revealed the striking fact that the increase in the various religious bodies of the Punjab was—Mohammedans 9·4 per cent., Sikhs 11, Hindus 3·4, but among the Christians it was no less than 32·6.

The Hand upon the Helm. There are many things which occur under our eyes to-day, whose tendency is to make us pessimistic. It must be admitted that the moral state of the country is anything but satisfactory, and it is very difficult to make swift progress with deep and spiritual work. Yet we must resist to the utmost that depression which at times comes upon us.

Nothing will energize a worker more completely than to remember that, after all, God reigns. His hand is upon the helm. The work is not ours, but his, and it is impossible that He is less interested in it than we are. It is a grand thing when a true heart can realize, that although invisible, God is really working out his own will in the events of life. The great revival which we all hoped for and spoke so much about a year ago, has not yet come, but it will come. To all disquieted souls we would say, with the royal singer, "Why art thou cast down? Hope thou in God."

A Danger to the State. The strong feeling in Jersey in regard to the proposed settlement there of Jesuits from France, has been voiced by Mr. Renouf, one of the representatives for St. Heliers, and his words deserve serious consideration. He says:

"If these orders are allowed to enter and stay in Jersey, they will form a nucleus for anti-British sentiment, which, in a generation, must become a grave danger to Imperial unity. The schools of these orders will be popular with the large foreign section. In them anti-British principles and ideas will be fostered, with the result that we shall have many enemies.

Similarly in Roman Catholic Spain there is strong opposition, and a recent Royal Declaration requires all the associations in that country to submit themselves for authorization, a step which, as a Romanist contemporary states, has "caused great consternation." Yet the subtle enemies of all spiritual freedom and progress may settle in England, and devote themselves unchecked to the subversion of the Protestantism, which they hate because of its liberty and its open Bible!

The Inebriates Act. The inadequacy of this measure, in making no provision for the unfortunate offenders upon their discharge, was clearly shown the other day, when a woman applied to a London magistrate for help. She was "anxious to keep straight," and had nowhere to go until she could obtain work. Mr. Dickenson could only refer her to the court missionary, and in doing so he said:—

It would be a great inducement to the inebriates if they could know that at the end of their probation they would have an opportunity given them to earn a decent living. It would show them that a sincere sympathy for, and interest in, them really existed, and it would, above all, give them hope. I know well the numerous excellent societies which exist for the assistance of the helpless, and those discharged from prison, but this is a special class, and should be dealt with by people who not only pitied and sympathized with the poor creatures, but also possessed knowledge of their lives and difficulties; homes should be established where the discharged persons who needed the help could have shelter and kindly protection from themselves and from others until they found work. The task of trying to reclaim those weak ones had begun, but at present it was only half done, and half done was not well done.

A Drunkards' Album. Numerous methods other than the common sense one of removing the temptation have been devised with the view of protecting the inebriate. At the recent Keighley Sessions it was proposed by an experienced superintendent of police that the unhappy persons should be photographed, and a copy of each of the portraits be sent to the publicans in the locality. It is stated that the plan has been tried in New Zealand, with the best results. The State licensed man, whose interest it is to make the drunkard, is, however, the worse offender of the two.

Backward and Downward. The Church Review rejoices over the fact that fifty-six more churches appear in the new issue of the Tourists' Church Guide, that Eucharistic vestments have been introduced in 133 more, incense in twelve, altar lights in 431, the mixed chalice in 700, and the eastward position in 353. Commenting upon these painful figures, our contemporary candidly adds: "We do not understand what religion means without the daily Mass." In the definition of "true religion and undefiled," given in the New Testament, there is, however, no mention of these things. They are, one and all, limitations of the liberty which is in Christ Jesus, and the tourist who needs to be guided to them has yet something to learn of spiritual freedom.

The Thin End of the Wedge. It is indeed a sign of that spirit of unrest which is developing in the Roman communion to find the laymen openly expressing dissatisfaction at their exclusion from the management of mission finance and other temporalities, now confined entirely to the priests. As Monsignor Ward stated at the recent Conference of the Catholic Truth Society, "the laity believe that they have other offices in the Church than that of signing cheques for the clergy," and they are, therefore, claiming a right to "the co-operation, not of servants under obedience, but of friends and brethren in equal council and control." Such a change of method would, however, be contrary to the essential system of Rome, and Cardinal Vaughan has not hesitated to decry it. The concession would imply the recognition, in some small measure, of the layman's right to an opinion of his own, apart from the dictation and domination of the priest, and upon that tyranny the whole superstructure of Rome rests.

A Convent Scandal. The story recently told by the abbess of the English Benedictines in Rome, to which the Times devoted a leader, and to which other journals have given publicity, illustrates very forcibly the sordid and unhealthy side of convent life both here and abroad. The facts are few and painful. Some years ago the abbess who, before joining the order was well known in English society, purchased from Father O'Keefe and the Irish Augustinians some buildings in Rome, and covenanted to pay the capital sum of £24,000 in six years, with interest in the meantime. The means whereby the amount was to be paid "existed in the property of a wealthy young member of the order, when she obtained full control of her fortune upon attaining the age of twenty-five." Unhappily for the Order, however, this girl came under the influence of a priest, and left the convent under circumstances "of a scandalous kind." The purchase-money, therefore, was not forthcoming, and Father O'Keefe has taken proceedings for the amount in the Italian Civil Tribunal. The Vatican, of course, extended its patronage to the abbess and her English nuns whilst there was money in view, but has turned a cold shoulder now that there is only debt and difficulty to face.

A Catholic Estimate of Jesuitism. The current number of the Monthly Review contains a most significant article upon the Jesuits, from the pen of a Roman Catholic. Mr. Dell, the writer, has been compelled to withdraw his admiration for the Jesuits, on account of the moral obliquity which prevails among them. Particularly he refers to their teaching upon "truthfulness," which is simply shameful. In fact, their doctrine concerning this subject practically advocates lying when it is convenient to do so. Says Mr. Dell:—

Jesuit moral theology is at bottom an attempt, not so much to raise humanity to the level of Christian morality, as to adapt morality to humanity as the Jesuits misunderstand it. The society of Jesus has been a stumbling block and a rock of offence, not—as the Church must be—to the children of the world, but to the members of the Church of Christ. . . . It is an incubus and a hindrance to her work in the world.

Such plain speaking as this from within the Church of Rome ought to carry weight.

Soul-Hunger in France. There have been for a long time past many indications that France is in the throes of a great spiritual struggle. We have from time to time described its progress in several centres. A thrilling article in the October Quiver tells the story of a truly remarkable work in Central France. The villagers of Madranges, neglected by their priests, requested a French Protestant Society to send them a teacher. The request was granted, with the result that a marvellous work has commenced in the entire district. Some forty villages are included in the circle of operations. This is the third similar case that has occurred within quite recent times. Evidently there is a great harvest to be gathered among the French people.

Costly and Cheap Bibles. It is a singular fact that, of all the early-printed books the one most difficult to obtain, in an even approximately perfect condition, is the English Bible. The Earl of Ashburnham possessed three, and at the recent sale of his library, the most complete copy, dated 1535, sold for £820. It is, however, not difficult to understand the scarcity, when the repressive measures, including the King's prohibition and Wolsey's bonfires, which were adopted upon the introduction of Word of God in the language of the people, are borne in mind, even though, at the cost of generous London merchants, thousands of the precious volumes, necessarily printed abroad, were smuggled into this country. Some time ago a copy of the Biblia Pauperum sold for £5,500. To-day, happily, thanks to the Bible societies, a copy of God's Word can be obtained for sixpence, or the New Testament for one penny. Tyndale's dream of establishing the "lay people" in the truth, by "laying the Scriptures plainly before their eyes in their mother tongue," has therefore, been realized, and the small crowds that early in the sixteenth century gathered to hear the reading of the six chained books, are now represented by the millions, each of whom, as the historian Green has said, may "not as one of a body, but as a single soul, claim his part in the mystery of the redemption."

Faring Sumptuously Every Day. A medical contemporary, in dealing with the subject of Civilization and Disease, urges that many of the complaints which now affect man, are due to the food he eats. The writer says: "Looking at the matter from a purely evolutionary standpoint, the wonder is he survives at all." As a matter of fact, we have travelled far from the "plain living and high thinking" of our forefathers, and the introduction of new and unknown conditions have been potent in making people more sensitive, and less hardy. Our bodily and spiritual welfare point to the need for greater simplicity of living, and for the adoption of a higher standard of life which shall relegate luxury to the lowest level, and elevate the mind and soul to their proper position.

"Done Suddenly."

"The Thing was Done Suddenly" (2 Chron. xxix. 36).

THIS thing that was done suddenly was a religious thing—it was a revival and a reformation in one, prepared for by the Living God, and executed, on its human side, by Hezekiah, the King. The chief word of description in this sacred history is the word "suddenly"; the point of the whole narrative lies in the rapidity with which the events were accomplished.

Thus, to begin with, we have the assurance that at least one revival or reformation was a speedy work. This is a thing to be insisted upon, particularly to-day, when amongst a certain class of religious people there is a growing disposition to regard with disfavour any spiritual work that occurs in an exceptional manner. As opposed to any "sudden" work of God, it is urged with increasing vehemence that we are to expect nothing beyond what is gradual and normal.

It is quite true that there are many things in the Christian life that can never be done "suddenly." The man, for example, who enters into the Kingdom of God late in life can never "suddenly" occupy a position which he might have occupied had he been converted in childhood or youth. He cannot "suddenly" recover his dissipated forces; he cannot "suddenly" summon from the waste his lost years. In the Christian life there can never be "sudden" growth, "sudden" perfection. In the ordinary Christian life—clean and normal—things follow their natural course, "first the blade, then the ear, afterwards the full corn in the ear." But then there is always room for the element of suddenness, which, in nature, is an effort to restore things to their normal condition. Take for example a thunderstorm, with its manifestation of "sudden" lightning. It is the effort of nature to restore to normal conditions the elements which are electrically "disturbed." The suddenness is a rare manifestation, and it is a means to an end, the end being the restoration of normal conditions.

So in the Kingdom of God. When the relations of a human soul with God are normal, all life proceeds upon an even plane. Perpetual peace fills the heart—there is no need for anything extraordinary to happen. But when these relations are not normal, it often pleases God in his infinite wisdom so to direct things that a sudden crisis occurs, in which is supplied the force to lift life over into its normal relationship with God.

The more this theme is considered, the more clearly will it be seen that sudden spiritual movements are not the aberrations of disordered minds, as so many ill-informed people constantly assert; rather, they are harmonious with all the other work of Almighty God in his wonderful universe. Nothing can be more merciful or blessed to a certain order of mind than a "sudden" movement born of God.

MANY NEED A CRISIS.

There are thousands of people like Mr. Fearing, who, convinced of their sin and need, and feeling their unworthiness, dare not venture into the House of Love. Such need to be pulled in; nothing but a crisis—a sudden movement from God, would ever bring them right over into his Kingdom. Paul was such a one at the time of his conversion. He was "kicking against the pricks." Humanly speaking, nothing but a crisis could ever have launched Paul into his new life. His life needed a great wrench to detach it from its past. And it came SUDDENLY (Acts ix.).

The same principle applies to the higher life of the soul already in union with God. The first possession of the Higher Power is frequently a "sudden" experience. Upon the first Whit-Sunday, the Wind and the Fire appeared SUDDENLY, and at once the Spirit-filled men were lifted up into a higher region. The ten days of waiting and prayer had prepared them to receive the great gift, but the actual coming of the gift was sudden. This mark of suddenness in the reception of the Holy Spirit is witnessed to by many of the greatest servants of God. Jonathan Edwards, C. G. Finney, Brainerd, Christmas Evans, D. L. Moody, and many others, who have spoken of their sacred experience, have noted it. And the more one considers the subject, the more clear does it become that these "sudden" visitations are not capricious, nor in any sense due to fanaticism, but they are part of God's great law of bringing certain souls over, by means of a crisis, into a larger life and ministry.

At the same time, it is not right to speak of this element of suddenness as if it were a sine quâ non of the reception of the fuller life. Crisis—it appears from a study of the ways of God—does not occur except when the conditions of life have been remarkably abnormal. Many godly men and women have, all through their Christians days, lived so close to God, that they have received from Him "power from on high," gradually and without any violent experiences.

HEZEKIAH'S REFORMATION.

In the story of Hezekiah's reformation we see the application of the same principle in a case where the people of God had backslidden and renounced their former vows. The decay of religious life had not been sudden (it never is) with the people. Little by little, idol worship had displaced the worship of the true God, until, when Hezekiah, a young man of twenty-five, came to the throne, he found the House of the Lord closed; the lamps out; the place so filthy that it took several scores of men more than a week to cleanse it. In other words, the conditions were the exact opposite of normal. Whatever the people ought to have been towards God, that they were not. How did the young king deal with the situation? The decay had been gradual; must the restoration be as slow? No! "The thing was done SUDDENLY." With the utmost promptitude the pious king set to work. Within a week all the accumulated rubbish had been removed from the holy place, and within a month the entire order of Divine worship, so long suspended, was resumed. It was a crisis—it was done suddenly, but to what end? Our principle is illustrated here very clearly. "The service of the House of the Lord was set in order" (35). That is to say, normal conditions were re-established.

A MODERN APPLICATION.

That entire story rests as a parable for great numbers of professing Christians at the present hour. They, too, have not kept the Lord's passover "for a long time in such sort as it is written" (xxx 5). They are lapsed communicants; their old promises to God looking them dumbly in the face. The temple of their body bears upon it the fatal marks of decay. The holy place is full of filthiness. The light of conscience is almost extinguished, and what powers still remain are expended in the service of false gods. We meet such everywhere. They stray in to our "missions," allured there occasionally by the faint memory of a former better time. A great number of them are content to drift on and on—vaguely hoping and waiting for, perhaps, a better day. What message have we to such people? So far as God is concerned, we must quote without ceasing the promises made to backsliding children, and the menaces made to those who continue wilfully in sin; promise and menace combined—with more of promise than of menace. But so far as they themselves are concerned, a gradual coming back to God cannot be thought of—it must be done SUDDENLY, as at once the best, the safest, the quickest way.

We then who plead with men for a sudden break with sin, a sudden elevation of the heart of God, a sudden cleansing of a defiled temple, a sudden reception of Power from on high, are not the exponents of a fanatical doctrine; we speak, on the contrary, words of wisdom and truth, supported by the eternal law of God.

AN URGENT CALL.

The summer has passed away. Evening mission services in buildings have already recommenced for the season. In a week or two the autumn work will be thoroughly established. What is the work of the coming season to be like? After the open-air and tent services of the summer, there will be multitudes of people in whose ears the Gospel message is still ringing. They have made no decision as yet, but they are aware of their duty. These people need confronting with a message of urgency. They know; they must act. In ordinary pulpit work, as well as in special work, this urgent note is needed. Frequently sermons are passionless presentations of truth with no driving power behind them. Such sermons make no demand upon people for immediate action; hence the hearers refrain from action.

If everywhere this urgent note were heard, we might soon have to thank God for a revival on a large scale—a new Reformation. We need it. God is preparing the people—may it please Him that they shall act SUDDENLY.

Evangelists and Mission Halls

DEAR SIR,—By way of supplementing the article in your last issue, entitled "Evangelists and Churches," may I speak on behalf of the many small mission works which are being carried on in various parts of London?

These mission halls are being worked by bands of earnest men and women in the face of much to discourage in the shape of vice, indifference, and in many places Ritualism.

The work is very arduous, and taxes to the utmost the faith and perseverance of the workers. They need much sympathy and help—not only financial, but spiritual help, such as might be given by our ablest missioners if they could be induced to spend a week or so working shoulder to shoulder with the local superintendents of these missions.

I know it would mean self-denial to many men who are in the habit of addressing large and enthusiastic audiences to come to a half-filled hall, and speak to a couple of hundred people; but would it not be worth while, for are not these small permanent missions lights in dark places, which would shine all the more brightly by the new spirit and enthusiasm, which might be infused into them through the visit of an earnest, able, well-known missioner, whose name would attract outsiders?

Such work would be as valuable and quite as lasting as that done in special and more widely extended missions, for it is well-known that the existing smaller missions are largely drawn upon to fill public halls and tents; besides which, when men and women are converted in a permanent mission, they will naturally make their home there, be looked after, and in their turn become workers.—Yours truly,

WILLIAM GREEN.

The Remedy for Anarchism.

MY way lay through Lyons northwards upon the day when President Carnot was to open the exhibition in that city, in June, 1894, amidst a display of enthusiasm in which the Lyonnais were to out-French even the French.

Travelling up the Rhone valley that afternoon, on the line which skirts the road where Caserio, the anarchist, had tramped the day before with the dagger in his breast-pocket, I had a remarkable proof of how little the Word of God is studied or valued by the religious teachers of these masses, who, in blind passion, are tossed between the extremes of red Cæsarism or anarchy, Napoleonism or red communism.

Sitting facing me, was a priest of the learned Dominican order. It had been my habit for years to inquire the way of salvation of priests met in the train of France, and point out to them any difficulties I saw in the answer. I commenced by expressing admiration for some of the old Catholic saints, and asking if he could quote me some good saying of one of them. After a pensive moment came the reply: "Yes, there was that wonderful saying of Saint Thomas d'Aquinas: 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul.'" "That is indeed a beautiful saying. Are you sure it was by St. Thomas d'Aquinas?" "Yes." "May it not have been by Christ?" "No, I am sure it is not."

This teacher of the masses was only guilty of disregard for the Word of God. That was all. But that is all that is required to create conditions where many Cæsars can grow on the one hand and many Caserios on the other, for the Christ, crucified by both, is left out between. The worship of the beast in any of its many forms is exclusively owing to ignorance of the Lamb and the absence of the worship of the Lamb. Fungi only grow on decaying wood.

That evening, the wisdom and might of a nation and a city was in motion to welcome and protect the eminent first citizen, Carnot. Our prayer-meeting in the dark and narrow Rue des Tables Claudiennes was also a never-to-be-forgotten time. The King was present. Before me was sitting a devoted comrade, formerly an anarchist and incendiary, who, after conversion in our meetings, had gone to confess to the authorities the burning of two houses, and who, during two years' imprisonment for the offence (whose author would never have been known but for his confession), won fellow-prisoners to Christ. He had come to offer himself to me for the work after long and faithful service. And meanwhile down yonder Caserio was waiting amid the crowd of sight-seers with the dagger sheathed in the bouquet of roses.

Half-an-hour later someone breathlessly informed us the President had been assassinated. The thrust of one hand, armed by ignorance and energized by blind hatred, had done it all.

Did not these fiendish assassinations prove in fact what the Christian holds in theory—that there was, after all, only one Power which could have availed to prevent such a crime since all others had failed—the spiritual power, which could have converted those assassins? And did it not further prove that no milk-and water conversion would have sufficed, but nothing less than the winning of them from carnal weapons to spiritual weapons, in that absolute degree which can alone harmonize with the whole plan of Calvary, and the service of a King who shed his blood to save the worst of his subjects?

Many Christians will be sorely tempted just now to hate their brother anarchists, forgetting for the moment that whoso hateth his brother is a murderer. But would not the same force of soul be better employed in the channel of love by the surrender of our lives to the service of the kingdom of Christ with as complete a self-sacrifice as that with which poor ignorant Caserio tramped hungrily and footsore along that dusty road on his mission of ignorance, madness, and despair?

May there not, therefore, be as great a need just now in Protestant empires of a return to the Word of God as that which gave rise to the Reformation? Can anything else keep the Christian true to his own exclusive system—that of Calvary—between the extremes of red-handed Imperialism and red-handed Communism? Dare we disregard the Word of God, and the sacrifice of Him who hath made peace by the blood of his cross?

The Young Telephonist.

"TING-A-LING-A-LING." That penetrating, assertive, often exasperating summons that is now so familiar an attendant of business and even family life!

It sounded on this occasion in the very middle of lunch, which was for some domestic reason being taken that day, in my friend's house, in the morning room where the telephone held its court. I was spending the day with my friend, and our small party included a young married son of the house, whose home was in the same town, and he promptly left his seat at table and went to attend to the peremptory summons. Something in his tone as soon as he began to answer the unseen speaker, so different from the curt abruptness of ordinary telephonic communication, drew my attention, and looking round, I was struck by the tender pleasure, flecked by an amused interest, that almost transformed a naturally grave face.

The colloquy proceeded, so one-sided to our ken, but of such absorbing interest to the chief listener, that the cooling lunch was evidently forgotten, until at length my hostess exclaimed with delight, "That is the boy's voice! I can hear it." Just then the young father, turning round with a face that was a study in its expression of pride and joy, said, as he rang off and replaced the receiver, "He has just got a wonderful new toy, and he could not enjoy it until he had rung me up, and told me all about it." "He" was the only grandchild of the house who had, only the day before, attained the mature age of three, and having joined in the quick march of intellect of modern times, had pressed the telephone into his service for purposes of amusement and recreative communication. For this was by no means the first talk father and son had enjoyed through this medium, as might well be supposed from the facility with which Master Ted was now using it. And however officials at the head office might object to the extra "block," if such use of our new communication became frequent, we can well believe how the "ting-a-ling" in that young father's offices, which he assured me had often of late been followed by the baby tones of his child's voice, would make a wonderful break in the monotony of the morning's business, and help to smoothe out many a mental wrinkle that modern pressure is apt to bring there.

If we, who are wise, find "sermons in stones," how much more in the ways and words of sweet young children who come to us with a sacred charm, as though invested therewith by their guardian angels, who in heaven do always behold the face of our Father? So let us consider for a moment the lessons of Ted's telephonic talk with his father.

Between the wonderful instrument that puts us into such easy communication with an absent and unseen friend, and the still more wonderful link that spans the distance between heaven and earth, there is a quick transference of thought, and the way of faith is made simple and more vivid to us.

"He that cometh to God must believe that He is." This was Ted's creed concerning his earthly father. In his nursery, with a new birthday toy, he wanted to share his joy with him, and experience had taught that a certain process would bring to him the tones of that dearly-loved voice, and so a chair was climbed by the sturdy little legs, the bell rung, and the apparatus used with a gladsome result both to father and child.

And have we not even clearer instruction how to find our Heavenly Father, from Him whose cross has become the ladder of communication (Matt. vi. 6)? But something more is needed than the plainest direction how to find God, necessary and important as this is. What faces us in this incident, and what we earnestly desire for ourselves and others, is which creates a longing "for closer communion," which made Moses' forty days in the Mount a time of such rapturous delight that food was forgotten, and the very skin of his face shone for joy. This accounts for the spontaneity, the audacious daring of Ted's action.

No outside urgency was needed, no talk of duty—answering to the modes by which we are whipped up to our moments of devotion. The father, whose presence always brought joy to the child's heart, was at the other end of the telephone, and he coveted the joy, and used the means to obtain it.

Would we not give worlds to have the same delight in talking to our Heavenly Father, as we think with shame and sorrow of the perfunctory and often reluctant approaches to Him that we call prayer?

What is the remedy? Love, trust, realization, and all these the Holy Spirit will work in us. Let us ask Him to stimulate us to a higher standard in this matter, let us look at the subject from our Father's standpoint. Can we be content that our attitude to Him should never be anything but that of a suppliant, only coming to Him when we are in need, or when constrained by a sense of duty and awe into an act of worship and adoration? He is so loving and gracious that He welcomes even this relationship with his creatures. But shall we not sometimes give Him the joy of hearing our voices in a burst of gratitude and real genuine love, a turning to Him in our hours of gladness and acquisition with the happy consciousness that our Father's smile and sympathy will be their crown and seal?

The cruel tragedy in our sister-country, which all civilized peoples are mourning to-day, has thrown a fresh and pathetic charm around the noble President's favourite hymn. Many hearts have been touched afresh by its passionate prayer, "Nearer, my God, to Thee!" Is not this more filial intercourse, for which we plead, our way to its fuller accomplishment?

What Do I Give?

THIS is part of the title of a striking booklet, What Do I Give? and Why? written by Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich, and issued from the office of the South Africa General Mission, 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W. Summing up his appeal, Mr. Middleton says:—

"1. The ancient Jews, and also the ancient Pagan nations, from B.C. 2500 downwards, paid tithes and very large sums to God. The Jews gave probably about or nearly one-third of their income to God before generosity was thought about. Their generosity could only be considered to begin after the enormous sum of 6s. 8d. in the pound had been paid, and when they voluntarily gave freewill offerings to the Lord.

"2. The Jews lost infinite blessings on themselves, their families, and their country, when they kept the money which they should have given to God (read Deut. xxviii.).

"3. We, as Christians, living not under fixed rigid laws, but under grace and light, are expected to be generous in the highest sense in our gifts to God—Our love to God is measured by our gifts to Him.

"One-fortieth of the annual income cannot by any stretch of the imagination be termed loving service or generosity. 1 Tim. vi. 18 says, "Do good, be RICH in good works, READY to distribute" (i.e. of your wealth). (Read Heb. xiii. 16; James v. 1, 2; Luke xii. 20; also 1 Peter iv. 10, where we are spoken of as 'Stewards.')

"Now, Christian reader, whoever thou art, consider. If the Jews could give a fourth, or a third, or possibly in many cases half of their substance, to God year by year, can it be—is it right for us, who live in a time of greater light, in the dispensation of the Spirit, in times of marvellous privilege and unprecedented opportunity for serving God, to live at such a low, miserable level that we seek to argue we are doing right and the will of God when we give a fortieth or a fiftieth part of our income to Him, and reserve all the remainder for our own use?"

Mr. Middleton presses the claim of foreign missions, and supports his case for increased giving by an appeal to the constraining love of Christ. We trust his pages will have many readers. A hearty preface, from the pen of Canon Pelham, introduces the booklet.

Church Congress Notes.

Points of Weakness.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON.

WE are met, not for congratulation, but to discover weaknesses. Why are we not a greater power? I will give you five reasons:—

1. Want of unity. We waste so much time in striving after an impossible uniformity; what we want is unity.

2. With a growing unity there would be formed also something, the lack of which is our second weakness, and that is a more definite Church conscience. There are some in the political world who sneer at the Nonconformist conscience; we ought to honour the Nonconformist conscience, even if its conclusions may not commend themselves always to us as rightly made. But, more than honour, we must imitate.

3. To a certain extent we are hampered by our great antiquity. Our roots are so far back in the history of our country, and have been so closely intermingled with the roots of the nation itself, that we are in danger of paying, unless we are careful, the penalty of our greatness.

4. No Church will keep its power which does not keep alive its missionary zeal. "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and "Lo! I am with you all the days, even to the end of the world"—that was our commission; but the promise of the Presence is contingent on the fulfilment of the order, and we have the secret of many a dead parish in England, and many a weak ministry, in the absence of missionary zeal.

5. The whole question comes at last back to the individual. The kingdom of God anywhere can only be with power if the individual members of that kingdom of God are filled themselves with power, and they cannot be filled with power unless they are filled with the Spirit of God. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." I venture to say to each individual Churchman here this morning, "Are you emptying yourself that you may be filled with the Spirit?"

Lord's Day Observance.

MR. G. F. CHAMBERS.

From the Bible we are led to two conclusions: (1) That Sunday, or the Lord's Day, or the Sabbath (call it what you please), never was a Jewish institution of only local obligation, but dates from the Creation, and is of universal obligation; and (2) that the words of the Fourth Commandment are, in their natural living sense, binding upon every professing Christian.

It is too much the fashion to assert that because, under the Christian Dispensation, we treat the first day of the week as the holy day of the seven, in substitution for the last day of the week, therefore the fundamental features of the day have been materially altered, and that we are face to face with a new departure, carrying with it organic relaxation of old ideas. There is no real basis for this line of argument, which, so far as it is ever advanced in good faith, is founded on a misconception; but which may more truly be said to be of secularist origin, and to be employed to mislead and pervert the judgment of shallow thinkers.

Especially is this remark true when mischievous conceptions of the Christian Sabbath are bolstered up with the favourite (for this purpose) text of the secularist, "the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath" (Luke vi. 5).

Our case is largely based on the universality of the obligation to rest one day in seven. Surely it ought not to be necessary in these days of widely-disseminated Bible knowledge to have formally to prove this universality of obligation. No one can read the early chapters of Genesis (especially Gen. ii. 2, 3; viii. 10-12, &c.), in the light of the word "Remember" prefixed to the Fourth Commandment, and then assert that the Sabbath Day, as a day of rest, is a local Jewish ordinance of Mosaic origin, which began at Mount Sinai B.C. 1491, and ended at Jerusalem A.D. 33

The Spirit's Day.

MR. T. CHENEY GARFIT.

The first day of the week, which we call pre-eminently "the Lord's Day," may with equal truth and propriety be designated as "the Spirit's Day," for it was on the first day of the week that the Spirit was given and the dispensation of the Spirit first inaugurated at Pentecost. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day;" this covers the whole ground of observance, and in a single phrase indicates its manner and degree. If such be the privilege and blessing designated by St. John, how can we attain to it? Primarily we must have the inward conviction of the importance of this attainment.

All through the hours of the day there must be a sustained effort after the Spirit's presence, in the services of the sanctuary, in the intervals between the worship, and still more in the concluding hours. The method of observance might be summed up in the statement which most were taught in childhood, limiting lawful works to those of necessity, charity, and piety; or, if a higher test were demanded, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day;" where by clear implication everything is wrong which dims the sense of the Spirit's presence or impairs the truth which the Spirit teaches.

A Lesson in Perspective.

BISHOP OF CALCUTTA.

The missionary spirit is the life-blood of the Church. Missions are the Imperialism of Christianity. They expand the minds, the hearts, the consciences of Christians. In the evangelization of the world, the Church at home will learn some lessons, if she teaches others.

Sometimes, as I drive through the native parts of the city of Calcutta, with all its temples and the idols, the noise of the tom-toms, the processions escorting the bodies of the dead to the burning ghâts, the fakirs dancing to drive the plague away, the cows that are worshipped, the goats that are led to be slaughtered at the shrine of the goddess Kâli, or the vermilion stains upon the clothes and persons of the Hindus during the noxious Hôli festival—these things weigh upon my spirit like a nightmare. I cannot forget them; I cannot escape them; they haunt me in silent hours, and I dream of the radiancy and the glory that shall one day illumine the hearts and homes and lives of the people of India, when they shall turn their faces to God and to his Christ.

And then I go home, and I take up some newspaper of the Church that the mail has brought me, and I read in it, as though it were a matter of life or death, that some clergyman who is appointed to a living uses vestments or lights upon the altar, or advocates confession, or celebrates Communion in the evening; and it seems to me so strange—so strangely pathetic—that these should be the matters of supreme interest to the Church of Christ; and I can almost hear the warning of Him who said in the Gospel, "Leave the dead to bury their own dead; but go thou and publish abroad the Kingdom of God."

A Protesting Church.

BISHOP OF CHICHESTER.

Let our work be marked with one common desire to further the work of God and his Church, and we may carry with us that which shall abide with us as an energizing, vital force hereafter. It is a time for the gathering of our forces, not for hostile or unkind attack; for the careful training of our children; for the faithful preaching of God's Word at home and abroad; for the diligent study of God's will, God's teaching, revealed to us in the Bible; for the brave confession of the Cross of Christ as the master power of our lives. Then at home, as well as in distant lands, will pour out the beneficent life of the Church as a broad fertilizing stream for the healing and refreshing of the nations.

But for this there must be unity—a large and tolerant view, within certain well-defined, yet within ample limits. The Church of England is Catholic and Apostolic, yet Protestant. Protesting against additions to, or any falling short of, Catholic truth, against Rome and Geneva alike, she holds fully the faith once for all delivered to the saints, and is rooted in the Word of God; she stands on the foundation other than which no man can lay; she would bring men to Christ, nothing less.

Lessons from the Past.

MR. G. A. KING.

It would, of course, be an easy task to paint in attractive terms the development of Church work in and through the empire during the Victorian era.

Note two salient examples of "how not to do it" in our empire's history with reference to Church work—(1) the action of the Government with reference to the Sepoy army, and (2) the action fatally (dare I say foolishly?) analogous, as it seems to me, of our military authorities in the Soudan to-day. Our Indian Empire was endangered simply by a rigid suppression of every act which indicated an appreciation of the Saviour's last command.

Because the Soudan is a Mohammedan province we propose to abandon the bold policy which made the Punjab the very bulwark of our empire, and the Sikhs and Mussulmans our most efficient helpers; and go back to that feeble, timid, time-serving policy which produced suspicion in the Sepoy, but with the Mussulman will cause nothing but contemptuous scorn. We need a policy which understands that liberty means liberty for the missionary as well as for the merchant, as free a market for the Bible as for the Koran, and as much security for the convert to Christianity as for those by whose side he kneels at the table of the Lord.

The Missionary Not Distrusted.

BISHOP OF CALCUTTA.

It is sometimes thought or said that the natives of India look with especial dislike and distrust upon the missionaries. That is not my experience at all. Of course, if a missionary commits indiscretions he suffers for them; it is possible that now and then he suffers unjustly. Credulity in India is unlimited. There is no story too extravagant to be believed, whether it relates to a missionary or to any other sahib. But among my own Indian experiences none has been more agreeable than my meeting with the Pundits, at their own desire, in the city of Benares; I shall ever retain a vivid memory of their courtesy. And a simple, quiet, sensible, faithful missionary who has lived among the people, and speaks their language, and knows their ways, who is, perhaps, their pastor, their schoolmaster, their doctor, and their banker, all in one, is, and is known by them to be, their truest friend. India, then, is open to Christian missionaries; they get no favour, nor ought they to get it, at the hands of the Government; but they get what is far more worth having—a fair field.

The Secret of Power.

BISHOP OF LONDON.

For, remember, the whole question comes at last back to the individual; the Kingdom of God anywhere can only be with power; if the individual members of that Kingdom of God are filled themselves with power; and they cannot be filled with power unless they are filled with the Spirit of God. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." I know full well that a Church Congress is not a Mission; still less is such a service as this an after-meeting or a retreat and yet I would venture to say to each individual Churchman, Are you emptying yourself, that you may be filled with the Spirit? Are you seeking to be filled with that Spirit by union with Jesus Christ? Perhaps it is a brother clergyman to whom I am speaking. Are you finding your ministry cold, and dead, and uninspiring? Do you find yourself no longer a power in the pulpit to instruct or comfort, no longer a power in the sick-room to bind up the broken-hearted or prepare the dying for death? Then be sure you have drifted in some way from your moorings; you no longer, with the old confidence, look across the open sea for the coming of the tide; there has grown up some sand-bank between you and the tides of the Spirit

Baptist Autumn Assembly.

THE autumn assembly of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland and of the Baptist Missionary Society opened in Edinburgh on Monday evening. Arrangements had been made for a public reception to be given to the delegates by the Lord Provost and magistrates of the city, when the various greetings expressed were suitably replied to by Rev. Dr. Alexander Maclaren, as president of the Union. Tuesday was devoted to the meetings of the Missionary Society.

The first session of the proceedings of the Union was held yesterday (Wednesday) morning, when the central feature was the presidential address.

EVANGELICAL MYSTICISM.

Choosing as his subject "Evangelical Mysticism," Dr. MACLAREN explained that that term may be to some extent a startling one, inasmuch as the word is more often used as a condemnatory than as a eulogistic epithet. There is a sane and lofty use of mysticism which enters into every lofty view of the world and man, and which is at the very heart of Christianity. The central principles of his subject he described as the direct communion of the human with the Divine Spirit, the actual communication of a new life principle from Jesus Christ, and the reciprocal indwelling of Christ in the Christian, and of the Christian in Christ.

The seed plot of this Christian Mysticism was pointed out in our Lord's own words, and in a brief review it was shown how the mystical element took root and brought forth fruit in the apostolic writings. Paul was shown to be as truly mystical as John, though he was also much beside.

"IN CHRIST."

"Perhaps the most illuminative fact in this connection is the great prominence in Paul's writings of that expression, 'in Christ,' and its corresponding one, 'Christ in us.' Many of his words have suffered many things at the hands of careless readers and unspiritual commentators, but surely none of them have been more strangely emptied of their meaning than that phrase; and there are few things more needful than that it should, in the mind of the ordinary Christian, be restored to its rightful and weighty significance. To Paul it is the very definition of a Christian that he is 'a man in Christ.' So he habitually speaks of 'saints or churches' in Christ Jesus. To be 'in Christ' is to him the basis of all Christian activity; so he speaks of 'labouring in the Lord,' of being 'created in Christ Jesus unto good works,' of labour not being 'in vain in the Lord.' To Paul, to be 'in Christ' conditions, and impels to all the acts of the Christian; therefore he speaks of saluting the brethren 'in the Lord,' and it is 'in the Lord' that he speaks, or testifies, or purposes, or rejoices, or exhorts, or walks. To Paul, to be 'in Christ' is the condition of all Christian blessings; therefore he speaks of being 'sanctified in Christ,' or of being 'enriched in Him,' or of 'having our redemption through his blood' if we are 'in Him,' or of having 'access with confidence in Him,' or of being 'light in Him,' or, to sum up all, of being 'complete in Him.' To Paul, to be 'in Christ' is the one guarantee and bond of unity, for it is 'in Christ Jesus' that we 'are all one,' and it is 'in the Lord' that we 'have the same mind.' To Paul, to be 'in Christ Jesus' is the one ground of hope, for it is to 'them that are in' Him that 'there is no condemnation,' and the one desire and aim that he has in reference to the future is that he may be 'found in Him.' To Paul, to be 'in Christ' is not only to possess a better life and to 'sit in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus,' even while he lives 'in this dim spot which men call earth,' but it is to possess a life which persists through death, like a stream that finds its sunless way beneath black rocks; for the 'dead in Christ' live, and 'them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.' So the hope of resurrection and the promise of heaven are wrapped up, as are all the activities and blessings of the present Christian experience, in that one deep word: 'In Christ.' I can imagine no more fruitful exercise for deepening the spiritual life of most professing believers than a careful, prayerful study of the manifold connections in which that phrase occurs in Paul's letters. That alone would do much to promote the fuller recognition of the wholesome mysticism which is indispensable for all deep religion in the soul."

PROMISE OF THE FUTURE.

After expressing the conviction that such truths do not get the same place in the preaching of the present day as they have in the New Testament, Dr. Maclaren asked for an examination of common practice in the choice of subjects of sermons—whether due prominence is given to truths of a communicated life, an outpoured spirit, an indwelling Christ. He saw, however, the promise of a better day. Passing to the consideration of the effect which such preaching would have, it was shown how they would give completeness to the preaching of "the Gospel," a firm and broad basis for Christian liberty and patience, and an independence of death. The summing up was that as the first word is "God that worketh in you," the second is "Work out your own salvation." When the life is received and then used, our experience will express itself in the paradox, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

North London Convention.

ANOTHER Convention has come and gone, leaving a blessing behind. More than ever has the power of the Lord been present to heal. The Convention opened by Rev. GEORGE GRUBB preaching in St. Peter's Church on Sunday, September 22. His morning sermon was on "The unveiling of Jesus Christ as the secret of all true happiness and service" (Gal. i. 11, 12). The evening message was principally addressed to young converts, as it was believed many were present who had lately decided for Christ during the recent great mission.

On Monday afternoon, Mr. Grubb spoke with great power on "The presence of the Lord and the Abiding Life." Abiding in Christ means being "at home in Christ." Is this our experience? In the evening the same speaker dwelt much on the subject of "Divine Partnership as the Secret of Rest and Fruitfulness," and on Tuesday morning on "The Power of the Resurrection." A low estimate of the power of Jesus always results in closed doors, and failure to realize our sonship and priesthood in Christ. Our standard of the measurements of victory over sin and advance in holiness, will be in proportion to our realizing the power of his resurrection.

Rev. C. MUSGRAVE BROWNE spoke on Tuesday afternoon (Lev. xix. 23; John xii. 24) on "Death as the Gate of Life." He also gave the address at the evening gathering, and again on Wednesday morning, taking as his subject, "Spiritual Biography: The Life of the Child of God from Infancy to Manhood."

Rev. E. W. MOORE was the messenger on Wednesday afternoon in the Lord's Garden, and in the evening Rev. J. A. BEVAN spoke on the filling of the Holy Ghost. On Thursday morning the presence of God was much felt as Rev. J. W AINLEY spoke on the arrow of the Lord's deliverance, especially urging his hearers to press on to full surrender, obedience, and blessing, and listen to the Spirit's voice saying, "Go a little farther." What results might have followed if only Joash had "gone a little farther"! In the afternoon and evening Rev. DARLOW SARJEANT spoke on the mind of Christ and Spirit filling. Friday morning a most helpful Bible reading was given by Mr. STANLEY P. SMITH on "Service," and in the afternoon the subject was further dealt with by Rev. F. W. AINLEY from 2 Tim. iii. 21, as he specially pointed out how the set apart vessels were touched with blood, cleansed by water, and anointed with oil. The Convention closed with addresses by Rev. TURNER SOLE on Gal. ii. 20, and Rev. G. GRUBB on "Looking unto Jesus, Following Jesus, and Leaning on Jesus."

Rev. J. Mountain's Pastorate.

THE work of Rev. James Mountain at Tunbridge Wells has of late been attended with peculiar difficulty and strain. It will be remembered that after eight years of faithful labour as pastor of Emmanuel Church, Mr. Mountain was led, on conscientious grounds, to secede from the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion. A change in his views regarding infant baptism was the occasion of this act; but the painful severance brought peculiar compensations, for the devoted minister found a new and promising sphere of labour among a considerable number of his late beloved congregation who "clave unto him" in his new views and circumstances. This was over four years ago, and since that time wonders have been done towards establishing, on a vigorous basis, a new centre of Gospel work in the town.

For two years a growing congregation worshipped in a building known as Salem Chapel, in St. John's Road; and then an admirable site was secured at Mount Ephraim, on which a commodious lecture hall was erected. Here the work has been carried on for about two years. At length, the church proper and manse have been built, and a handsome and well-appointed pile, costing, with fittings and organ, about £7,500, testifies to the energy and devotion of pastor and people.

The opening meetings were held on Wednesday last week. The preachers were Rev. F. B. Meyer and Rev. Dr. Dowen, while the Free Church ministers of the town attended in force to show sympathy with the undertaking. Clergymen and others who could not attend, sent hearty congratulations. The basis of the Church fellowship is Evangelical and Protestant, and the ordinance of believers' baptism, while not compulsory, is administered to those who desire it. The services of the Church are liturgical, and the "Free Church Prayer Book," which is used, is a compilation of the Church of England service, made by Mr. Mountain himself. The whole of the property is in trust with the Baptist Union.

It is gratifying to know that many who have benefited by Mr. Mountain's teachings during his world-wide travels, and by his many choice musical compositions, have shown a practical interest in this enterprize. On the opening day £240 was contributed in reduction of the debt, which now stands at about £3,600.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

THE latest report of the Midnight Meeting Movement emphasizes anew the value of prompt action in the class of cases with which the workers come in contact. In rescue work help must be instant to be effectual. Year by year, too, the overwhelming importance of preventive work is being borne in on the committee, who express themselves in the highest terms regarding the labours of numerous voluntary helpers, who give to it so much earnest prayer and loving service.

Thankful acknowledgement is made of the increasing interest taken by politicians in the better housing of the poor, because it is recognized that much of the unchastity of both men and women may be traced to unhealthy and overcrowded homes, at an age when mind and body are alike sensitive to every impression, whether moral or physical in nature.

Great importance is attached to the circulation of suitable literature. Letters to men—with appeals both pointed and practical—are widely distributed, while cards, leaflets, and tracts found suitable, are used freely amongst women of every class and nationality, together with the Gospels in various languages.

A cordial invitation is given to workers in London and country towns, desirous of organizing meetings or other efforts for the reclamation of outcast women, to communicate with the secretary, Mr. C. Wilson McCree, 8A, Red Lion Square, W.C. To a yet wider circle there is an eloquent appeal in the assurance that extension is possible in the measure of the liberality of the support extended.

In Glasgow Public-Houses.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

IN company with my friend and brother, Mr. D. J. Findlay, I recently visited some of the drinking houses in the principal streets of Glasgow. In one of these at least 150 men crowded the bar, where ten men were dealing out the fiery stimulants as fast as they could serve them, and scores were in every stage of excitement and soddened with drink. To my great surprise, we were welcomed into this sumptuously-furnished whisky saloon by a gentlemanly-looking Scot, attired like a police inspector with his stiff peaked cap. He was one of the private inspectors who are hired to keep order, prevent fighting, or, if necessary, to act as "chuckers out."

The scenes in many parts of Glasgow on Saturday nights are a disgrace to any civilized community. The keeper of the notorious house referred to poses as an intelligent and gentlemanly Scotchman, and looks on upon this "respectable" but horrible scene without a particle of conscience as to the ruined characters, lives, and homes he is producing. The fact is that Glasgow has become so familiarized with the horrible drunkenness which exists that its moral sense in regard to this evil seems dead. Thousands of wealthy distillers, brewers, and whisky dealers hold sway in Scotland, and think no more of the loss of life and character they are causing than men do of shooting grouse or other game in the highland preserves.

THE CHURCH AND THE TRADE.

Some of the streets in the vicinity of Garscube Road were also visited, where large numbers of children are to be seen in an environment of crime, sin, and debauchery that no words could exaggerate. Dirty, neglected, and ragged, they scarcely look human. Hundreds of men and women in vile rooms, flats, and back passages, are huddled together in conditions scarcely capable of conception or description. But there stand the dark blocks of evidence which cannot be gainsaid or denied, a terrible contrast and reproof to the respectable and wealthy portions of the second city of the Empire. I say reproof, for the fact is that thousands of the well-to-do and successful families do not lift a little finger to save their perishing fellow citizens.

Criminals of every grade—crimps, bullies, loafers, idlers, mixed with hundreds of viragos, harlots, and inveterate drunkards! To speak of them as women is almost impossible. Dragged down by drink, sin, shame and poverty, no Dante's inferno could exceed the horrors of this drink-cursed and whisky-laden locality.

And yet—just think of it—some of the men engaged in this horrible traffic are church members, occupying good social positions. There are a few Christ-like spirits awake to the horrors of the situation, but comparatively little is being done, and the churches as a whole are quiet, while the juggernaut car of the whisky traffic tramples upon thousands of Scotland's hardy sons, daughters, and children, and crushes them into shame, crime, and death.

A GRUESOME PICTURE.

Here is an extract from the Glasgow Evening News, November 19, 1900:—

It was Saturday night in Garscube Road. The public-houses were just closed. Up and down the congested pavements the crowd jostled, swaggered, staggered, and shouted. The police were kept plying to and from the police-office with "drunks and disorderlies"—a grimy, foul-mouthed man, accompanied by four police—he never goes with less.

"It would take a regiment to preserve order here on Saturday night," said the detective. Dark and narrow side lanes straggle to left and right, every room packed with as many tenants as the law allows. There at a corner a crowd is gathered round a husband and wife, both intoxicated, wrangling over money affairs. She plies her arguments, interlarded with oaths—a vixenish tongue she has, too. He attempts to reply with blows. The spectators appear to relish it. A few yards along a slut of sixteen throws her shawl on the pavement, and challenges a companion to fight; across the street another slut is exchanging blows with an artilleryman from Maryhill Barracks. One of the largest crowds in Garscube Road was gathered round two Tommies who rapped one another's faces till blood flowed, and the spectators took sides.

Up and down the pavements on which every third able-bodied man was drunk, walked boys and girls hardened to such sights. What hope is there for a rising generation in such an environment? Mere children shouted oaths as glibly as the proverbial mariner. Their games reflected the life they beheld, and the "drunk man," struggling with two or three companions whom he cursed glibly and fluently was most in favour. Indeed, the pavements resounded with oaths from the mouths of young and old, male and female. Bands of young hooligans prowled up and down, taunting and bullying the unoffending, and brazen-faced sluts bandied oaths with them on the least provocation.

A visit to this highway of Glasgow on Saturday night is depressing indeed, and engenders a sad pessimism in one who has high hopes of the future and some belief in social progress. Here is a problem indeed, which is as serious as the conversion of the cannibal. It looms darkly in the future. Will the detectives' regiments, School Boards, street meetings, or police-courts solve it? Who shall say?

Million New Pledges Crusade.

IF any evidence were needed to dispel the idea that the days of pledge-signing had passed away, it has been supplied at the outset of the Twentieth Century Million New Pledges Crusade. At the opening of the campaign in London, it was seen that the time was ripe for a movement that should bring home to the public conscience the ravages of intemperance upon the religious, moral, and social life of the community, and at the same time revive the Christian Church to renewed activity in contending with the drink traffic. Daily the wave of enthusiasm gathered force, as willing hands and hearts pressed forward, eager to share in the great work, and the campaign has created a DEEP AND PERMANENT IMPRESSION.

There is every prospect that the crusade will not only issue in an immense number of new pledges, but, under God, become a means of great spiritual quickening, and powerfully influence the whole life of the nation.

The committee are exceedingly fortunate in having the services of Dr. Henry, for there can be no doubt that much of the success attending the London gatherings is due to his pronounced and vigorous dealing with the problem they are determined to solve. His addresses have not been the setting forth of glowing theories, pleasing to contemplate but too ethereal for practical purposes; he has dealt honestly with his congregation, as well as his theme, and has made clear how reforms may be secured, and what results will follow.

The closing effort in London was made on Tuesday of last week at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road. The spacious building was crowded, and a more enthusiastic gathering it would be difficult to conceive. For half-an-hour before the meeting commenced, the Fisk Jubilee Singers entertained the audience with delightful and inspiring melodies and choruses, which were warmly appreciated. The chairman for the evening was Mr. Thomas Smith, who emphasized the fact that the crusade is but in no sense denominational. Its object is to win Christians over to the side of temperance, since there cannot be success of God's work combined with the public-house. Seventeen different denominations have banded themselves together to promote and maintain the crusade. A brief and characteristic address by Mr. Geo. Nokes followed, his hearty words calling forth the unanimous approval of the audience concerning the object of the campaign.

A cordial greeting awaited Dr. Henry, and on rising to speak he was warmly cheered. He expressed his deep appreciation of the heartiness with which his mission to this country had been entered into by workers in London. It was firmly believed that the seed had been sown for an abundant harvest, and that the work will be carried forward by the churches in suppressing this monstrous foe of the modern world.

There can be no doubt that in the past the drink traffic has outrun our endeavours, and increased more rapidly than the constructive and redemptive forces of society; but while the difficulties in the way of temperance reform are neither numerous nor far between, from the Christian's point of view there is much to encourage. Proceeding to consider the results of intemperance and their bearing on social life, Dr. Henry gave the testimony of the insurance actuary, which is unanimously on the side of total abstinence, as is shown by the discrimination made even between

ABSTAINERS AND MODERATE DRINKERS.

The testimony of railroad companies is also in favour of total abstinence, and many of the corporations in the United States demand that their employés shall not take intoxicants on duty. Other witnesses are the business world, modern science, the gaol-keeper, and the athlete, who are agreed that alcohol is a curse. In closing his forcible address, the speaker made a strong appeal for personal consecration to Christ, through whose strength alone the tide can ever be turned, and the greatest evil in the world removed.

An opportunity was given for those who had decided to take the pledge to come forward and shake hands with Dr. Henry, and over a hundred responded.

THE EDINBURGH MEETINGS.

Although from force of circumstances the Edinburgh meetings were commenced on Saturday afternoon, and with heavy rain at the hour of meeting, there was a large attendance in the Synod Hall at 3 o'clock, and at 8 o'clock a crowded audience, presided over by Mr. James Guthrie, of Brechin, a worthy son of the late Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburgh, and a thorough-going Christian total abstainer, walking in the footsteps of his honoured father.

On Lord's Day afternoon another crowd assembled in the Synod Hall. Professor Simpson, the chairman, spoke of Dr. Henry's mission in the most sympathetic terms. Although but the third meeting of the series, there seemed no need for an introduction, or words of commendation, the people evidently having already made up their minds that he (Dr. Henry) is a man sent of God, to arouse our nation to a sense of sin and shame in respect to the fearful havoc being wrought upon our sons and daughters by the infamous liquor traffic, and to proclaim that nothing short of its utter and immediate destruction must be the watchword of all earnest Christian temperance reformers.

The fourth meeting was subsequently held in the Lothian Road Church (late Dr. William Reid's), at which ex-Bailie Lewis, one of the most thorough-going and clear-headed of Scottish temperance reformers, presided. I arrived there considerably before the hour, to find the doors closed, and the large building crowded to its utmost capacity; and only after importunate and repeated knocking to gain an entrance, and after much effort, through crowded aisle and pulpit stairs, was I able to reach the only available space, beside Bailie Lewis, Mr. Barclay, and Dr. Henry, in the pulpit.

From that vantage ground I looked upon one of the most touching sights I have seen, in a deeply still and solemnized audience, since the days of our beloved departed friend, Mr. D. L. Moody, and had the privilege of listening to an address of power and pathos, again reminding one of the never-to-be-forgotten days of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

In Dr. Henry there seems to be the bright and blessed combination of John B. Gough, the eloquent, soul-stirring Temperance orator, with that of D. L. Moody, the Spirit-taught Gospel preacher.

The tide rose day by day, and Monday's gatherings were large and enthusiastic. I firmly believe that these few days of Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers in Edinburgh and Glasgow will lead to an earnest desire for their ministrations in Scotland, as soon as their engagements in England are fulfilled.

Good News from Japan.

At the conference of missionaries held in Tokyo last October, a committee was appointed to co-operate with the Japanese pastors and evangelists in an effort to spread the Gospel throughout Japan. The movement met with almost universal approval, and accordingly arrangements were made for united evangelistic services in all parts of the country.

The services in Tokyo were preceded by a daily union prayer meeting, which began on May 12. It was at first attended by about 200 persons; but in the course of a week the number and interest had so greatly increased that only a part of the people could get inside the church. Those who were outside knelt and prayed in the same way as those who were within. The Holy Spirit was manifestly present, and there was earnest crying unto God for his presence and blessing on the services which were to follow.

The meetings were at first confined to a single ward, and held in six different churches at the same time. The interest increased so rapidly that the services which followed were conducted in several wards. Placards were posted in conspicuous places, and banners carried through the streets; also handbills distributed everywhere inviting the people to the meetings. Bands of students and others went out on the street, singing hymns and preaching to the passers by. Such unity of spirit and readiness to work for the salvation of souls have never been seen in Japan before.

At the end of June the special meetings were temporarily discontinued, to be resumed again as soon as the hot season is ended.

Among many

and importance we would mention:—

(1) The services were held in the churches, which were always thronged. Hitherto it has been found necessary to use the theatres, or other public buildings, because those who were not Christians could not be induced to come to ordinary places of worship.

(2) There was no attempt to make a disturbance, and the police took special pains to promote the success of the work.

(3) While there was deep and very general interest, there was no excitement or unseemly noise or demonstration of any kind.

(4) The preaching was the simple old, old story, told in plain and earnest words, in reliance on the Holy Spirit alone to make it effectual. There has been an attempt hitherto on the part of some to formulate a Christianity especially for Japan, but no one in these meetings sought to substitute any new or advanced scheme of salvation for the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The results have been simply wonderful; such an awakening has never been known before in the history of Japan. The general expression of those who have seen and known of the work is that it is certainly the hand of God, and that it is in answer to prayer.

At a thanksgiving service held on July 6 reports were made from fifty-one churches in the various districts. The total number of converts and inquirers was 5,307, who gave their names publicly at the different gatherings. That all of these have been truly converted is hardly to be expected.

From ten to twenty per cent. have since connected themselves with the churches, and others are being gathered in. Among these are men who have been criminals, drunkards, gamblers, brothel keepers, and such as are regarded as the

MOST HOPELESS AND ABANDONED.

The Spirit of God has taken possession of their hearts, and they have truly been born again.

Not only the criminal and degraded class has been reached, but those in high station, and wielding great influence, have become new creatures in Christ Jesus, and are working to bring others to Him.

A small book has been published in Japanese, entitled "The Works of God," in which are given some remarkable incidents in connection with this blessed outpouring of the Spirit. Such a record is most encouraging to all who labour and pray for the coming of the kingdom of God.

In Yokohama, Nagoya, Osaka, Saga, Nagasaki, Sendai, and other cities, there has also been deep interest, and hundreds have been brought to Christ. It is the purpose of those who have had this work in charge to continue on the same lines, with still greater energy and courage, as soon as the hot season has passed and the weather will permit.

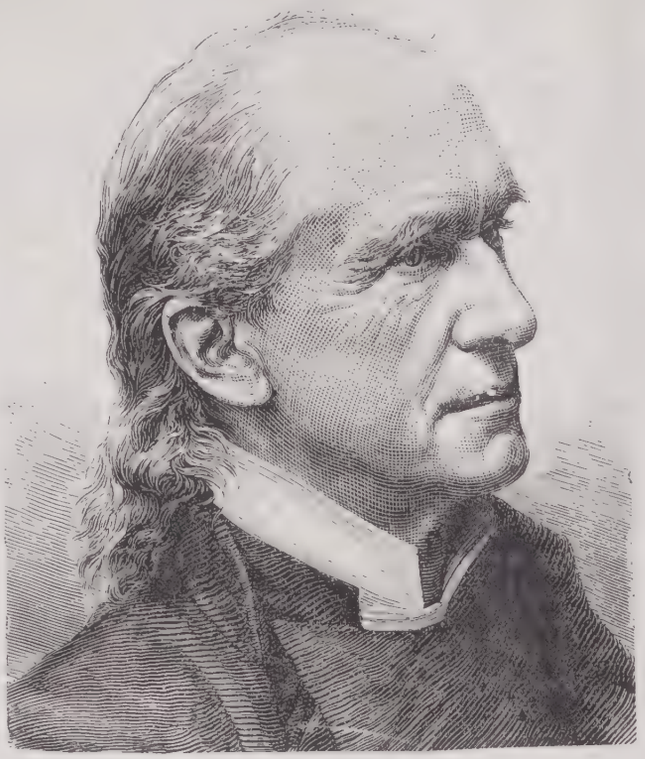
The Late Bishop Whipple.

In Dr. Whipple, the Bishop of Minnesota, whose death is announced as having occurred at the age of nearly eighty, the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United



THE LATE BISHOP WHIPPLE.
From Photograph by Mr. G. Hadley, Lincoln.

States of America loses unquestionably one of its most picturesque personalities, as well as the member of her Episcopate who was the best known in England. He will be remembered by posterity as the steadfast champion of the North American Indians. In 1850 he was appointed rector of Zion Church at Rome, New York State, and seven years later he removed to Chicago as rector of the Church of the Holy Communion. There he inaugurated a "free and open" church system, labouring especially among the employés in the great railway workshops.

The news of his election, in 1859, to the bishopric of Minnesota, came to him as a great surprise, and at first he did not quite see his way to accept the post. Replying to the clergyman who informed him of his election, he said: "I cannot go. It is a mistake. I am not a scholar, theologian, or preacher. I am not even a graduate of college. I was trained up a merchant. I to tell the story of the love of Jesus. I know that I can do that, and I can be a shepherd to the poor; but a bishop I can never be." There was however, no mistake about the appointment; the election was made in due form, the choice of the clergy being fully confirmed by the laymen, and eventually the post was accepted.

There were nearly 20,000 Indians in Minnesota, and they were in some measure reached by missions. But the white man had set the natives a bad example, and the deadly fire-water flowed freely. Holding that red skins as well as white were in his care, the bishop devoted himself to their evangelization. They gave him the appropriate name of "Straight Tongue," and as a consequence of his remarkable work for the spiritual and social uplifting of the tribes, he became generally known as the "Apostle to the Indians."

The condition of the Indians in those early days has been forcibly described by the Bishop in the following terms:—

Disease and death held carnival in every Indian village. I shall never forget the awful sights which met my eyes at my first visit to Gull Lake. A dead Indian was lying by the roadside. A few miles from the agency I saw bruised and bleeding men suffering from the wounds received in a drunken fight. An Indian woman was scraping the inner bark of the pine tree to satisfy the gnawing of the hunger of her starving babes. We found at the mission a crowd of squalid wretches, whose rags did not cover their nakedness, and yet in their helplessness and woe they listened to my words as if I was a messenger from heaven.

In spite, however, of the difficulties of the position the bishop was able to testify, "Many whom I first met are to-day civilized Christian men."

As a fact, colonies of Christian Indians sprung up on every reservation and the thriftless habits of wandering tribes were abandoned for fixed habitations and cultivated farms. The savage learned to subsist upon the proceeds of honest labour. Chiefs sent their sons to college to be educated, and many flourishing missions were raised up and placed in charge of fully-equipped Indian ministers.

Bishop Whipple was well known in England, and it will be remembered that he preached the opening sermon of the Lambeth Conference of 1888. He was chosen to preach the sermon at the unveiling of the Tennyson Memorial in the Isle of Wight in 1897, and in April, 1899, he delivered a remarkable address at a meeting of the C.M.S. in London. The Bishop wrote much for the Press and the magazines on the Indian question, and he published also a number of sermons and addresses, as well as an interesting volume of reminiscences.

Miss Carruthers' Work in Italy.

The thirty-first annual report of the Carruthers' Evangelical Institute denotes the wide sympathy which is being shown towards the efforts made to bring up the young in the principles of Protestantism, and to refute the prevalent errors of Romanism. During last year the number of pupils admitted to the various day schools at Pisa, Cisanello, and San Michele was 441; and since January, 1901, in spite of considerable opposition, 418 have been admitted, not including the girls in the night schools. To the Normal Training School (adjoining the Female Institute) forty-eight girls were admitted. This is the only non-Romanist training school in Pisa, and has had a hard struggle to compete with that of the famous Padre Agostino. One girl who passed through the school has for several years been mistress of a Communal School in Tuscany; while another, after being first a teacher in the Evangelical Institute, and a school in Piedmont, under the American Episcopal Methodist Church, has now been promoted to be mistress of the higher elementary classes in their Female Institute in Rome.

The Bible and Tract distribution is being followed by encouraging results. Postmen, cabmen, municipal guards, railway men, &c., are provided month by month with a Gospel message. Miss Carruthers' works and translations are being widely used of God for the enlightenment of Italians and Jews. Until October 15, Miss Carruthers may be addressed, care of Mrs. Evans, Bryndir, Roehampton, Surrey; afterwards at Pisa, per Cisanello, Italy.

The Outlook in Austria.

By Dr. A. W. CLARK, Prague.

THE Roman Catholic Church is the most influential factor in the political and religious life of Austria. In round numbers we find, in a population of 24,000,000 (Austria, but not Hungary), 20,000,000 Roman Catholics.

With regard to devotion to the Church, great extremes are often seen. In many places the bigotry and Mariolatry baffle description; in others, the great majority are Romanists only in name. They are too indifferent to withdraw from the Roman Catholic Church; and submit to its laws in matters of baptism, confirmation, and marriage.

The majority of educated men, including the officials, are sceptics, going outwardly with Rome, because they fear its power in connection with the ruling house and the nobility. Ambitious men smother their opinions about the great dominant Church, knowing full well its political power.

With regard to language, over 8,000,000 are Germans, while 14,000,000 use Slavic tongues, especially the Bohemian. In its organization, the Church in question has seven provinces, seven archbishops, and twenty-nine bishops. In point of influence, the Archbishop of Prague, as the Primus of the Bohemian Kingdom, has a most controlling place; but the Archbishop of Olmutz (Moravia), with his princely annual income of 600,000 crowns (a crown is equal to a franc), wields, perhaps, greater power. Bishops are entitled to 24,000 crowns yearly. As to priests, of whom there are 20,000, their salaries are often small. The Bible, which they ought to know best, is greatly neglected in their education and their ministry. Some of them have spent more time in burning New Testaments than in studying the Scriptures. As to morality, their lives are in great contrast to that of the brother priest in England and America. In any country where there are earnest, wide-awake Gospel churches, the priests of Romanism are forced to raise their standard of morality.

I was greatly impressed with this fact when stopping over-night at a little inn in Styria. The inn-keeper, who was also the mayor of the village, deriding the character of the priests, said: "But our priest is much better than his neighbours." "How is that?" I inquired. He replied: "You know at the other end of the village there is a little Protestant Church, whose pastor is a nice moral man. Now we Catholics at this end of the town demand that our priest should live as uprightly as his ministerial neighbour." According to the opinion of this Catholic mayor, we cannot help the Roman Catholic Church better than by planting near them earnest Evangelical churches.

The entire property of the Catholic Church in Austria (Hungary not included) is nearly 800,000,000 crowns. In this are included church-buildings, monasteries, and schools. As to nunneries, there are 280, with nearly 14,000 members. The 480 monasteries have about 8,000 members. The most powerful in numbers are the Franciscans, then the Benedictines. The Jesuits, though less numerous, wield a greater political influence.

What an immense power for good is this Roman Catholic Church, if only all the leaders could be baptized with the Holy Spirit, and all the millions under its control were urged to read the Bible and to live according to the plain Word of God! What if the blind lead the blind? Far be it from me to say that all the priests of Austria are unworthy men. There are noble exceptions; but I may quote the remark of a Catholic doctor of medicine, who, in answer to my question whether his city of nearly 100,000 inhabitants had not some very praiseworthy priests, replied: "There is not one moral priest in this town."

In the maternity hospital, Prague, there are over 3,000 children born yearly out of wedlock, and many of these are children of priests. In the province of Carinthia, for example, there are counties where 60 per cent. of all the children are illegitimate, and even in the best counties of that province nearly 30 per cent. are of that same unfortunate class.

In some parts of the country there are hundreds of pilgrimage places, visited annually by hundreds of thousands. The "Los von Rom" movement has taken in over 12,000 from the ranks of the Romish Church; but it is a movement into which too many political measures have come. The fact that the children belonging to these thousands will now receive an Evangelical instruction is in itself a most cheering fact.

Bible societies form the most hopeful work for this priest-ridden land. Fifty years ago Bible men and Bibles were driven from the Austrian Empire; but now the British and Foreign Bible Society, under the leadership of Mr. Millard, is doing a great work in circulating the Scriptures. A similar work is conducted by the National Bible Society of Scotland, under the superintendence of Dr. Clark. The American Bible Society has aided in this grand work for over twenty-five years. Thousands have welcomed the Scriptures, thousands are still unsupplied, and you may meet any day scores of people who never opened a New Testament.

Colportage in Austria is most difficult. The Bible messenger must have a licence, secured from the governor through some legally-established book-store. Months are often occupied in securing the licence, which is good for only one year, and allows not the selling of Bibles, but the taking of subscriptions for the same. The orders may be sent direct from the store or depôt.

During the last year the British and Foreign Bible Society circulated, or sent out from their different depositories in Austria, some 75,000 copies of the Scriptures. As the American and Scotch societies buy directly from the British, these figures indicate the entire work of last year in twenty languages.

Watchman, what of the night? What is the outlook in Austria? A broad acquaintance with this extensive field leads me to take a hopeful view. For twenty-eight years I have laboured in different parts of the empire, but mostly among the Bohemians. While on the one hand there are bigotry, scepticism, opposition, and great worldliness, there are on the other hand many signs of better times. There has been much progress in the last twenty years. The twentieth century will witness far greater: Christ's Kingdom shall come.

Thousands of Romanists are glad to hear the Gospel of our Saviour. Let those who love the Truth aid in planting pure churches, and in circulating the Scriptures and wholesome literature.

We specially commend to readers interested in these important religious and political events, now taking place in Eastern Europe, the excellent summary of the situation by Dr. Mathews, contained in "The Austrian 'Los von Rom' Movement," in the Quarterly Register, Vol. VI., No. 1. (From Dr. Mathews, 25, Christchurch Avenue, Brondesbury.)

The Y.M.C.A. in America.

DEAR SIR,—Having visited Y.M.C.A.'s in New York, Buffalo, Cleveland, Montreal, Quebec, and other places in the United States and Canada, may I record some impressions?

In agriculture, the English believe in large farms, and the continent in small farms; and though the two methods have been long and vigorously canvassed, neither party can convince the other. On the other hand, while the English believe in small Y.M.C.A.'s, the Americans believe in large ones. The latter combine the work of the Polytechnic with that of the Gospel. All the American and Canadian Y.M.C.A.'s which I visited were very elaborate institutions, with gymnasiums, reading rooms, swimming baths, and educational class-rooms. Many of them have libraries, restaurants, and Turkish baths as well; and the Cleveland Y.M.C.A. manufactures its own electric light, and maintains a resident engineer, and several other officials on the premises.

One great advantage the American system has is that there is constantly a large and miscellanous number of young men on or about the premises—attracted by the gymnasium, library, swimming baths, &c., and some of these are frequently drawn in to attend the Bible class, and thus come within the influence of the more spiritual section of the Association. As long as the secretary and other leaders are sound (and I can testify to the spirituality and devotion of those whom I was privileged to meet), there will always be a magnetic force for good acting on the more secular portion of the brotherhood.

Another advantage is the public recognition of the Y.M.C.A.'s. Everyone in the city seemed to know where the Y.M.C.A. was; policemen, railway porters, steamer officials, &c., could, as a rule, at once direct me to the Y.M.C.A. There is a distinct and important branch of the Association devoted to railway men. It was the Railway Y.M.C.A. that I visited in Buffalo, where I was so courteously received by the secretary, Mr. Thatcher.

It may be added that the Young Women's Christian Association is organized on the same plan as the Young Men's, with libraries, gymnasiums, &c., and some of them with Turkish baths. These places also form a home, where young women can board and lodge at a moderate cost, under the superintendence of a matron, and thus be saved from many of the temptations and dangers of a city life.

AVARY H. FORBES.

Mutual Study of the Scriptures.—The Young Men's Bible Study and Training Association seeks to help Christian men (specially those who feel called to "preach the Word") by mutual Bible study, for (and at) a weekly class. Branch I. meets every Monday, 8 p.m., at Central Hall, Philpot Street (back of London Hospital). Pastor Archibald G. Brown, Revs. H. B. Macartney and Samuel Wilkinson, have borne warm testimony to the Biblical character of the work. Those interested should either attend on Monday (or Tuesday, November 5, a special gathering), or write to the General Secretary, Percy W. Heward, 14, Pier Head, Wapping, London, E.

The Scriptures for India.

IN a letter to us Lord Radstock says :—

"There are probably from twenty to twenty-five millions of heathen or Mohammedans in India who can read, but who have never a chance to read the Word of Life.

"Arrangements are now being made by which Christian people in England may send them at least a Gospel. The plan is for each to send to a member of the corresponding class in India—e.g., a child can send to a child a Gospel for 2d., a young man a New Testament for 1s. to a young man of his own class through the Y.M.C.A., the Postal Association, the Christian Police Association, or other unions. Professional people, such as doctors, lawyers, &c., will also be able to send through their own unions, say, a 5s. Bible (specially bound).

"It is proposed to have united prayer all over the United Kingdom, December 31, at 8 p.m. (when New Year will have begun in India), that 'power from on high may come on the native churches,' and that their members may 'be witnesses' to those around them. Who can doubt that this definite request, made in his name by tens of thousands of the Lord's children, will bring 'showers of blessing'?

"The presentation of the Gospels will begin (D.V.) January 1, and be only by Christian people. Arrangements are being made by which each donor will be able to write his name and address on a book-plate, which will be sent to India and pasted in the Gospel, with a notice in the vernacular that the recipient can write, if able, to the donor.

"The scheme has been suggested by a Missionary Conference representing 135 millions, and by many leading missionaries, as well as by several eminent servants of God who have been in the Civil Service. The circular, with definite instructions how to send the Gospels, will, it is hoped, be issued in about a week or ten days to incumbents and Nonconformist ministers.

"I write to ask for prayer :—(1) For wisdom in sending the circular; (2) that the arrangements for distribution in India may be in the power of the Holy Ghost; (3) That the hearts of Hindus and Mohammedans may be specially moved to give facilities for reaching 3,500,000 children in non-Christian schools. 'Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full.'"

Nyassa Industrial Mission.

DEAR SIR,—May we ask your aid to make known to God's servants the need in which our mission at this moment is placed? Circumstances have arisen which make it desirable that we should be able to send out reinforcements to our brethren in British Central Africa at very short notice. In particular, the furlough of our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Decath, is overdue, and the illness of their little daughter may render it necessary at any moment that they should leave for home.

We need a married couple, full of zeal, and with some experience of industrial mission work, ready to go out at once. We do not doubt that God has such workers in readiness somewhere, though He has not yet guided us to them. Perhaps this letter, if you will kindly publish it, may reach some who will regard it as the call of God to work for which they have been waiting. If so, will they communicate with—yours, &c., Alfred Walker,

"Sandrock," Sevenoaks. Secretary.

Sailors and Soldiers at Shanghai.—Many will be interested to learn that the temporary premises opened last year at Shanghai as a home for sailors and soldiers have proved a boon to over 6,000 men. The time has arrived for a new and permanent building. The plans for this have been prepared, and provide for a mission-hall, reading-room, restaurant and domestic apartments. Several of the workers of the China Inland Mission, during months of enforced absence from their own spheres, have aided in carrying on this effort at Shanghai. The results of past endeavours are of an encouraging nature, and it is hoped that with larger opportunities the workers will be enabled to minister more extensively to the needs of the numbers of English, American, and German bluejackets visiting the port. Mr. Felgate's address is, Shaftesbury House, Seward Road, Shanghai. Parcels of literature may be addressed to Messrs. Nutter Brothers, Bishopsgate Street, London, E.C., who will forward them to China.

Prayer for Israel.

THE twelfth annual Day of Prayer for Israel was held on Monday, last week, at the Central Hall, Philpot Street. There were meetings in the morning, afternoon, and evening, at which friends of Israel pleaded earnestly for blessing on the Jewish nation and workers among them. Colonel Morton presided at the morning meeting, which was devoted to confession and thanksgiving, with prayer that God may awaken in the Church of Christ an interest in the Jew warranted by the Word of God. The Chairman remarked that though there was no doubt that interest in the Jews did exist and was growing, yet still the number of those who know anything about the Jews and care about them is comparatively small.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided at the afternoon meeting, and Mr. Isaac Levinson, of the British Jews' Society, opened with prayer. The subject was Prayer for an Outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Jews throughout the World. The chairman's address was based on 1 Kings viii., which, telling as it does of the answered prayer of a single believer in the bringing of the worshippers of Baal to the acknowledgment of Jehovah as "the God," should be an encouragement to believers to pray for the Jews all over the world, and especially in Russia, where they are most numerous. Rev. John Wilkinson said that there seemed no reason why this dispensation should not close, as it began with the conversion of thousands of Jews. Did we thirst for such a manifestation of God's power? For He has promised, "I will pour water on him that is thirsty and water floods on the dry ground." Let us cry to God for increased thirst that the floods might come, then, on the "dry ground" around us in the East End where there are so many Jews. Prayers were offered for the Jews at home and abroad.

The evening meeting was devoted to prayer for all missions to Jews, and that men and women engaged in this work may be filled with the Holy Spirit, and that modes of work may be such as are approved by the Word and Spirit of God. Many workers were prayed for by name, and there were many thanksgivings for the work of missions in the East End. Rev. John Wilkinson was in the chair, and gave a helpful address on "Christlike Compassion."

Greek Work in Asia Minor.

ON account of reduced income the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society (7, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.) was obliged this year to discontinue the support given to a young Greek evangelist in Asia Minor. On hearing of this state of affairs, Rev. Dr. Tracy (President of Anatolia College) wrote—

"One town and village after another is being waked up by Mr. ——. He is a remarkable man; in one place he has sixty young men earnestly studying the Scriptures. While leading devotional meetings in a private house the mob gathered, and began to stone the windows, whereupon he stood leaning out and preached to them. Dodging the stones this way and that, he declared the whole counsel of God, till they began to say, 'What's the use? We can't scare him.' The persecuting enemies then appealed to the governor, but he told them that the preacher was right, and they were wrong, so they had better let him alone. I have never seen more satisfactory Gospel work than we have among the Greeks in our field, and I am sorry to hear that your Society has nothing to help it this year. We will not give up hope that in some manner this splendid work may be sustained."

Florence.—For some time past great need has been felt for providing in some way for aged, destitute Christian widows. Tormented, taunted, and entreated in their last hours by priests and nuns to recant and return to the Romish Church, these poor sisters are constantly pleading for a home in which to pass their last days in peace. Such a home is in contemplation; it will be called "Casa Sarepta" (the Sarepta Home). Aged widows, known to be Christian, destitute, and persecuted will be received as the funds allow. Mr. J. S. Anderson, who suggested the foundation of the home, has kindly agreed to co-operate in its administration. Full particulars of the enterprise may be had from Mrs. A. W. Higgs, 2, Via Paolo Toscanelli, Florence

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

IN a letter to the friends and supporters of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, president of the Mission, says :—"It is with great joy and thankfulness that I am able to inform you that the building of the permanent headquarters of the Mission—erected in East London as a monument to the memory of Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, the first president of the Mission—has now been completed, and that the Mission House is open for public service.

"May I briefly recall the steps that have led to this? Some twelve years ago the Barbican Mission, then a small Gospel agency working amongst a few Hebrews, was on the point of being given up altogether. Prebendary Calthrop, however, who knew the appalling needs of Israel as well as any man, was shocked at even one small agency being discontinued, and with the help of a few friends he set to work to revive it. Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, who had been associated with the former head of the Mission, was appointed director, and other changes were made. 'A Friend of Israel' generously provided a Mission House and premises in Finsbury Square, which enabled the Mission for seven years to have a house of its own; and there the workers gathered hundreds of Jews of all nationalities to hear the Gospel. The lease of the Mission House in Finsbury Square expired in September, 1898. The Committee took temporary premises in Commercial Road, and then set to work to provide the Mission with a house of its own.

"The Lord greatly prospered their efforts. An excellent site was secured in the Whitechapel Road, and a handsome building, consisting of a large and commodious chapel, a spacious reading-room, some class-rooms, residential apartments, and offices, has been erected. Its suitability for the work is unquestioned. The experience of the last few months has abundantly shown (we humbly believe) that we were Divinely guided to this spot, for never before in the history of the Mission have we been able to gather in so many Jews as now assemble every Saturday afternoon to hear the Gospel of the Lord Jesus. The attendance at the Bible Class and at other meetings of the Mission is larger than ever, and we pray that God may abundantly use and bless the work to his honour and glory and the good of his people Israel.

"Our efforts are, however, much crippled by the debt which has been inevitably incurred in the erection of the building, and we are most anxious to clear it off in order that every effort may be put forth to promote the spiritual work of the Mission. We need a sum of £2,500. We feel that unless the debt is liquidated speedily the work must suffer, perhaps for many years to come."

The Marriage Law in Spain.

DEAR SIR,—In the number of September 5 of your interesting paper, under "Notes and Comments," you speak about The Marriage Tie, stating Judge Phillimore's opinion, "that those contracting marriage should always be subject—wherever they might be—to their own national law." This agreement between "all civilized nations" may be good in some cases. In other cases it would be the greatest injustice.

In Spain, the Spanish law forbids marriage to the priests, even though they may become Protestants; and even if their marriage is consecrated by a Protestant minister, the law declares the children illegal.

So the converted priest is excluded from the right that everyone of his countrymen possesses. There is only one remedy. They have to make the troublesome journey to Gibraltar to be married, under the protection of the British law. We had three such cases last year, and one this year, which show that it is not always good to be subject to the national law.—Yours very truly, Theodor Fliedner.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, October 13. 2 Corinthians vii.

GOD waits to cleanse us by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit, so that we may perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify his Holy Name. But we must be willing and eager for the Holy Spirit to take up his abode within us, and to withdraw ourselves from all influences, friendships, and associations, which are a constant snare to our progress in the divine life.

One of the rarest and most wonderful orchids known is a native of the Isthmus of Panama. The flower is a pure white. Within it, right in its heart, is the perfect image of a dove, with drooping wings, snowy breast, gold-tinted head, and crimson beak. It is a perfect image, touched with beautiful colours, and exhaling an odour which no manufactured perfume could imitate. The Spaniards named it the "Flower of the Holy Ghost," and the native Indians were wont to worship it as an idol. So there must be a pure shrine for the Holy Spirit, and the Spirit will make and keep the heart as a pure shrine for his indwelling.

It is beautiful to notice the soul-travail of the Apostle to bring about this condition of things in the Corinthian Church. When he wrote the first Epistle, he was filled with an agony of questioning and anxiety as to what might be its effect. He could find no rest until he had met Titus with the tidings of what he had discovered. And when he heard of the repentance, the broken-heartedness, the jealous care of the glory of Christ, and the purity of the Church, which his letter had elicited, his joy was full. Oh, that we had this godly care for others, not simply forgiving them when they do wrong, but taking care of their spiritual condition, securing, if possible, thorough repentance and contrition. This is the true washing of the disciples' feet.

MONDAY, October 14. 2 Corinthians viii.

With what inimitable grace the Apostle makes his appeal on behalf of the collection he was making for the famine-stricken believers at Jerusalem. He incites the Corinthian church by the example of the Macedonian churches, which were in deep poverty, and yet abounded unto liberality; first consecrating themselves and then their gifts. He reminds his audience of their abounding possession of many other great gifts, and longs that they might reach the same high-water mark in this grace as in those. He shows that the Master Himself stooped even to poverty in the extravagance of his generosity. He reminds them that they had already set their hands to this deed of loving helpfulness, and that it would not do to withdraw from it. He hints that some day, when their time of trial came, they might reckon on the same generosity being manifested to themselves.

And on the top of all these exhortations he shows how careful he is with respect to the handling of this money, that he was set on doing what was honourable in the sight of men, and therefore refused to be its custodian and treasurer, insisting that Titus, in company with another, whom he indicates, not by name, but by inference, should see to it. Thus he would be relieved of all possibility of blame in the matter. Public Christian men can hardly be too careful in handling the money of missionary societies, churches, or Christian philanthropy. No man should act in such matters alone, and certainly should never mix such money with his own.

TUESDAY, October 15. 2 Corinthians ix.

As we sow, we reap, not only in respect of the words we speak and the judgments we make and express, but of the gifts we bestow on the poor. God remains no man's debtor, and if we dare with lavish hand to administer our money for the relief of distress and the promulgation of his Gospel, it will return to us with certain precision, as bountiful harvests will return to reward the lavish scattering of autumn seed. The law in the spiritual sphere is as certain in its operation as in the natural. We cannot understand how it is so, but it is so. God is able to make all grace abound, that we may abound. How short-sighted, then, is the policy of those who with miserly care are always hoarding up their money, never giving generously and gladly to the work of God. They resemble farmers who hoard all the year's produce of seed in their barns for their own consumption, and refuse to cast it with lavish hand on the upturned furrows.

What a sweet thought is furnished in the tenth verse. God will never allow any of his sowers to be without seed: "He supplieth seed to the sower"—whether that seed be money, or words of truth, or the power to do loving deeds. He gives his workers bread for their own nourishment and supply. He multiplies the handfuls of seed we sow, until they become the mighty harvest, and increases the fruits of our righteousness, as one tree may reproduce itself indefinitely. Oh, that your hearts would learn the glory of such a life! Be prodigal! Freely ye have received, freely give! Cast even your own life into the earth and die, that it may cease to abide alone, and bear much fruit.

WEDNESDAY, October 16. 2 Corinthians x.

In spirit and manner we must always imitate the meekness and gentleness of Christ. Humility is unto God; meekness towards men, especially those who persecute and injure us; gentleness is toward those over whom we may be in control, who look to us for direction, or whom we may have to correct. With all the tenderness and sweetness by which the followers of Jesus Christ should be characterized, there should be the element of strength. Beneath the verdure of the hills there must be the immovable granite. Under the velvet glove there must be the iron hand, wherever righteousness and truth are involved. Even where, as in the case of the Apostle, the bodily presence is weak, and the speech contemptible, what is lacking in the outward may be more than compensated for by the moral and spiritual.

Let us be valiant in the fight against sin and wrong, using the whole armour of God, and casting down human imaginations with the spiritualities of our most holy faith. It is absurd to combat the spiritual evil of the world with a merely intellectual or moral apparatus. Spirit must be met by spirit; the rulers of the darkness of this world, by the might of the risen Saviour; the spirit of wickedness by the Spirit of God. But remember that there is a might to be had, before which every stronghold can be cast down, and every high thought made captive to Jesus Christ. Seek it for yourself, and others.

God has appointed to each of us a province (13, R.V.) Let us fill it to the full, and even overflow it with blessings to the regions beyond. It is from overflowings of full hearts and lives that the world is really blest.

THURSDAY, October 17. 2 Corinthians xi.

Such a chapter as this could only have been called out by the criticisms and taunts of the Apostle's detractors. To their comments on his uneloquent speech, on his persistent refusal of money support, on his want of Apostolic authority, he replies with one of the most moving enumerations of his sufferings for the Gospel that the world has ever heard. Nay, it stands absolutely without a parallel. He was willing rather to wear his heart upon his sleeve, than to allow these Corinthian believers to be misled by the comparisons which the Judaizing party instituted to his detriment, between him and Peter or other of our Lord's apostles.

To read this enumeration is enough to appal one. How could one man have passed through such a catalogue of sufferings! And it must be borne in mind that these words were written some five years before he was arrested and carried to Rome, being shipwrecked on the way.

He glories always in his weakness. It is strange how some men are ever meeting the shocks and jolts of life with dread and outcries, like a trainful of people when the locomotive has left the metals; whilst others meet the same troubles, and worse, as the swimmer meets the billows by rising over them in buoyant energy. God grant unto you the abundant life that you may meet every demand made on you, by letting your hand go deeper than ever into the storehouse of Divine life. Answer every sorrow, temptation, trial, by "more life and fuller." This is to be more than a conqueror.

FRIDAY, October 18. 2 Corinthians xii.

It has been calculated that this transporting vision took place at the very time that the Apostle was stoned, during his first missionary journey. What a contrast between the injury and indignity which man was inflicting on the body, and the ravishing delights granted to the spirit! It may be, when you and I come to die, if that is our lot, we shall be so taken up with the glories of heaven bursting on our view, that we shall have no consciousness of the pangs of mortal anguish. The child does not notice the gate through which it rushes into its mother's embrace. Note that the third heaven is Paradise, but probably there are heavens on heavens beyond.

What Paul's thorn in the flesh was, we know not — whether physical weakness and defect or a stuttering speech, or some perpetual form of temptation; but thrice over he asked for its removal. God does not answer the prayers, even of his most devoted servants, in the way they expect, but He always does answer them somehow. If not by taking away the thorn, yet by giving so much grace that the soul is content to suffer, that it may be so enriched.

As weaknesses, injuries, persecutions, and necessities fell to the lot of the Apostle, he gave them all a blithe welcome. "All hail," he cried, as he admitted them one by one into his heart's secret shrine, "ye are welcome; for every one of you my Master has a make-weight, and the heavier the scale is weighted upon the one side the more heaped up of grace it will be on the other."

SATURDAY, October 19. 2 Corinthians xiii.

The weakness of Jesus, when He emptied Himself of the life with which the Father had endowed Him, was the occasion of his receiving the higher life of the Resurrection—"He liveth through the power of God." And there are times, in the experience of all disciples, when they, too, are weak and broken by the strife of man and the pressure of the world's sin. But out of such experiences how often they have been raised to more power than ever. "They live with Christ, through the power of God," toward some special work that needs them. "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy, for when I fall, then shall I arise. When I walk in darkness, then the Lord shall be a light about me."

The one test of being in the faith is to have Jesus Christ in the heart. Unless we are reprobate, He is literally and absolutely the indwelling tenant of our inner nature. Too often, however, He is grieved and hindered. Instead of yielding to the gracious promptings of his Spirit, we quench them. Even then He does not leave us. Yield to Him, as Milton to the promptings of poetry, and Händel to those of music.

Note that the Lord's power should be used for construction, for the positive building up, of souls rather than for the direct attack of vast systems of wrong. Do the former, and the other will follow of its own accord (10). Always act with and in the interests of the truth. The closing farewell and the final benediction are very touching, especially the thought that, with all their failure and defect, these Corinthians were deemed capable of appreciating and enjoying the co-operation and almighty fellowship of the Divine Spirit—the true Comrade of our pilgrimage.

Cardiff.—The ninth of a series of quarterly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life was held in the lecture hall of the Y.M.C.A. on September 24 and 25, when helpful addresses were delivered by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch. There was a marked improvement in the attendance at each of the meetings. Renewed efforts are being made to widen the circle of spiritual interest.

The White Slave Traffic.

A CONFERENCE, under the auspices of the National Vigilance Association, was held in the Salon of the Hôtel de l'Europe, at Amsterdam, on Thursday and Friday last. Dr. Henri Pierson presided, and was supported by the Burgomaster, Baron Mackay, President of the Second Chamber; M. Sabouroff, Minister of State (Russia); Senator Bérenger (France); Baron von der Goltz (Germany); Judge Foerden (Norway); Baroness van Lynden, Baroness Klerck, Dr. Garofalo (Italy), Dr. Müller Simonis (Strasbourg). Letters of regret for enforced absence, and expressing strong sympathy with the aims of the Conference, from the Dutch Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Justice, were read.

In opening the proceedings, Dr. Pierson said that the great success which had attended their work was a cause of deep gratitude, and a good omen for the ultimate success of the cause which was dear to them all. The keynote of the work was supreme charity, which they must always exercise when dealing with the victims of this terrible evil. They must also exercise the same charity, and show patience when endeavouring to educate public opinion.

FRANCE.

M. Berenger (France) said that before leaving Paris he had an interview with the Foreign Minister, who authorized him to state to the Conference that the French Government would, at as early a date as possible, invite representatives of the European Powers to assemble in Paris to discuss the present laws in the different countries, and decide in what way it is possible to strengthen them from an international point of view, with the purpose of dealing in a more drastic and effective manner with the agents engaged in the white slave traffic. He was also authorized to state that already the French Government had received adhesions to the Official Conference from the Governments of England, Russia, Italy, Germany, Belgium, and Switzerland. The French Government would invite all the national committees to send their legal propositions to the International Bureau in London, which would be asked to forward them to the French Government for the consideration of the Diplomatic Conference. M. Bérenger went on to report that the French National Committee now comprises representatives from all the philanthropic societies in France, irrespective of creed or party politics.

GERMANY.

Baron von der Goltz (Germany) said that both the Emperor and Empress were very greatly interested in the movement, the Emperor having subscribed 1,000 marks to the funds of the National Committee. The report stated that on the representation of the committee, the Consuls at Hamburg and Bremen had been instructed to cause the passengers by the steamers to be carefully scrutinized, and any suspicious cases to be reported to the police. The captains on the steamers had also been instructed that when they had suspicious characters on board, believed to be engaged in the white slave trade, they should telegraph to the authorities at the port of debarkation on the subject.

The report gave some information as to the state of South America, as the chief depôt where girls were sent.

POLICE CO-OPERATION.

M. Berenger introduced the question of the co-operation of the police with the National Committees in the suppression of the traffic. He said it was necessary for the Conference to recognise that the respective Governments had a very difficult task in dealing with this question. The activity of the police was stimulated or retarded by the public opinion of the country. At present public opinion was not expressing itself strongly; it was far too passive. It must be recognised that without the assistance of the police this shocking traffic cannot be either mitigated or abolished. It should be our work through the National Committees to collect all information as to the domicile and methods adopted by the men and women engaged in this traffic; the information should be given to the police; and the committees should render all possible assistance to the police. After the projected official Conference had been held, opportunity would be afforded for more complete co-operation between the committees and the police. The discussion was continued by Dr. Pierson (Holland), M. de Meuron (Switzerland), and Baron von der Goltz (Germany).

INTERNATIONAL LEGISLATION.

Judge van Swinderen (Holland) introduced the question of what new international legislation was necessary to legally cope with this crime. He gave a concise account of the principles of the different national codes as to procuration. Great Britain, the United States of America, and the English Colonies, also for the most part countries in the North of Europe, treat procuration as a crime, whether the victim be adult or minor. The French and Italian codes, and those of South America, protect only minors. The Prussian code, framed mainly on the French model, follows the English principle; while the Dutch code, modelled on the Prussian, is similar to that of France. It was absolutely necessary to have common and correct legislation.

M. Sabouroff (Russia) said that in Russia they had regulated vice for many years, but some were beginning to modify their views as to the wisdom of thus dealing with it. He felt sure that if the Government discovered that recognised houses were markets for the young women who were entrapped by traders in vice they would immediately abolish them. Already they had raised the age at which it was allowable for a young woman to be in a bad house; formerly it had been sixteen, now it was forbidden for any woman under twenty-one to be there. The one point to be kept steadily in view was the abolition of the traffic.

Baron von der Goltz moved a resolution (which was carried) recommending the different National Committees at once to enter into communication with their respective Governments, Magistrates, Chiefs of Police, Consuls, and Philanthropic Societies, with the object of vigorously combating the traffic.

Progress was reported by several delegates; and it was decided to hold the next International Congress in Southern Germany.

Hope for Drunkards.

IT is now ten years since General Booth startled the country by the publication of his book "Darkest England and the Way Out," and though from the nature of the work to be done progress has been slow, it has at the same time been steady and sure. Foundations have been laid in different directions, and an important step forward is at present being taken in the opening of the Home for Male Inebriates adjoining the Farm Colony at Hadleigh, in Essex. At a private view given last week to representatives of the Press the house was shown to be ready for the first "patients."

In the course of an interesting statement, Colonel David Lamb explained that while under the Inebriate (or Dalrymple) Act women are better provided for, there is no institution at present available for men without payment of at least two guineas a week. The need for accommodation at lower cost was abundantly proved last year by the receipt, at the Home Office, of inquiries on behalf of 560 men who were willing to pay from fifteen to twenty-five shillings per week. None of these cases could be received anywhere.

MAKING A BEGINNING.

Experience gained in the conduct of the Farm Colony has encouraged the Salvation Army to take a step forward in this direction. The present intention is to receive at Victoria House thirty inmates, whose relatives or friends are able to pay £1 per week, and who will, in addition, be required to perform such work as they may be found fitted for. At first all available force will be directed to the adaptation and fitting up of certain detached buildings for the reception of thirty-five more men. This second section, where the accommodation and fare will be of a plainer description, is intended for habitual drunkards from the police courts. The Acts provide that when a person has been convicted of drunkenness four times within twelve months, the magistrate may commit him for one year to such a Home. For such men the Treasury is prepared to make a small weekly allowance, which will be supplemented by the respective county councils. Even in the voluntary cases committal by a magistrate is required, and the officer in charge has, therefore, authority to exercise restraint over the inmates, though the fullest provision is made for the forwarding of complaints by the men to the proper Government department.

The scheme gives promise of being philanthropically sound. It is believed that on the human side, the most powerful reclaiming influence will lie in regular work adapted to each case. The basis will, however, like that of every other branch of the work of the Salvation Army, be religious. Meetings will be held on the usual lines, but no man will be restricted to any particular form of worship. From the commercial side it promises also to vindicate itself, and like the Farm Colony—with its population now of 300 men, accompanied by 250 women and children—to become in the end self-supporting. After the buildings already referred to have been completed, the principal occupations will be carpentering, poultry farming, fruit raising, and general gardening.

POINTING THE MEN TO GOD.

The whole scheme is truly Christian in its inception. "First and foremost," says Colonel Lamb, "we shall rely upon the grace of God to deliver the man. The first thing to be done in bringing about this deliverance from the thraldom of evil habits is to get him to assume a right attitude to his Maker. He must learn to love God. He will then struggle to overcome his evil besetments, because he knows they are displeasing to the Object of his affections. He will be taught to look to the Strong for strength.

Having thus got him in a disposition of mind to give up the drink, and to look to God for grace and power to quit himself like a man in the hour of temptation, the rest will be comparatively easy. This is, of course, simply conversion, and we shall endeavour to effect it by surrounding the patient, from the time he gets up till he goes to bed again, with an atmosphere of cheery, sincere salvation, which we know, by past experience, usually results in bringing the unregenerate into a repentant and contrite condition of soul before his Creator. We believe in God, we believe in our plans, we believe in ourselves. We say this to the glory of God, and in this respect we are going forward, believing that greater things we yet shall find."

One of the chief difficulties experienced in the working of similar retreats has been the unsatisfactory results of licensing out. The fact that in this case the Farm Colony is just at hand will enable the officer in charge of the one institution to license men out to his colleague, and thus secure the greater liberty desirable when men have made progress, while still providing for thorough supervision and control. This effort partakes very much of the nature of an experiment, but it is being worked out on an adequate scale, and may be expected to lead to early and extensive developments.

A WIDER OUTLOOK.

The workers are men with high ideals, who, while thanking God for what has been accomplished by the social work, see much land lying yet to be possessed. Attention was directed to the great class of growing boys from whom the hooligan and criminal classes are recruited, and whom the Army declines to regard as hopeless. Then there are the aged helpless poor, for whom the workhouse system provides only a dreary prospect. The tramp or vagrant class calls for drastic measures; but, we were assured, "if the country would make up its mind to deal with them, it could be done practically in five years." Last of all there are those who are below the average intellectually, but yet capable of doing much useful work, and an earnest effort on whose behalf might be expected to be in the end self-supporting.

Birmingham City Mission.

THE work of the Birmingham City Mission includes many departments of useful effort among the poor, and the annual report of the organization gives interesting accounts of the operations.

One of the features at the Broad Street Mission Room is the meeting for newspaper boys and girls, which attracts many of the poor and neglected children of the surrounding courts and alleys. The work among the deaf and dumb, too, has been energetically carried on by the special missionary (himself deaf and dumb), who continues the religious services and visits to the hospitals, and the homes of deaf mutes in and around the city. Bible classes for deaf and dumb women have been largely attended, conducted by two ladies from the Royal Deaf and Dumb Institution, Edgbaston.

The Mission has a large and useful work among cabmen. Birmingham, indeed, would have no cabmen's shelters at all were it not for the philanthropic efforts of the organization and its secretary, Mr. Albert H. Barker. No fewer than twenty-two shelters are at present maintained in various parts of the city.

Another important branch is the Noel Road Refuge for Girls, where many have been trained for domestic service, and enabled to make a fresh start in life. Each girl who remains eighteen months in the Home is given, when leaving, a new box with a comfortable and sufficient outfit for a servant. Warm tributes of praise and gratitude are often paid by former residents to the kind and wise treatment they received at Noel Road, which is still to some the only "Home" they can call their own.

The Bible Class Federation.

THE sixth annual meeting of the Bible Class Federation was held a few days ago at Exeter Hall. There was a large attendance, and representatives were present from Bristol, Derby, Sidcup, Swindon, and other places.

Rev. F. B. Meyer (chairman) delivered an address on "The Bible, our Weapon; there is none like it." He showed that there is no weapon like the Bible, and gave five reasons—(1) Because it is God's Book. It opens with—"In the beginning, God." Its consummation is—"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." (2) Because it is Man's Book. In the Arctic Regions the Esquimaux will ask for the Bible. In the Torrid Zone, men want the Bible. Like corn it is indigenous to every part of the world. (3) Because of its Indestructibility. The Bible has been torn, burnt, and derided, and still it stands stedfast, and will continue to do so. (4) Because of its special quality, "Inspiration." (5) Because of the portraiture of Jesus Christ which it contains. All parts point to Christ. All corridors of the Bible lead to one Holy of Holies in which there is but one portrait—Christ.

Rev. James Mursell (Hackney) followed with a short and interesting address on "The Bible Class," and Mr. J. Halford (Crouch End) followed.

Irish Notes.

THE Meath Protestant Orphan Society has now thirty-one children under its care, and is not only prospering but is doing a good work.

The twenty-sixth annual Convention in connection with the Church of Ireland Young Men's Society has been held in Clarence Place Hall, Belfast. Interesting and effective addresses were delivered by Revs. Canon McCormick, vicar of St. James', Piccadilly, London; Dr. Riddall, R. V. Greer, and several others. One of the sessions of the Convention was devoted to missions, and earnest addresses were delivered by Miss Stott, who is going out to Japan; Miss Jackson, of China, and others.

The annual meetings on behalf of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews are at present being held in Ireland. Rev. S. D. Hillmann is acting as deputation, and has already addressed meetings in Belfast, Carrickfergus, and various other centres.

The seventh Irish National Christian Endeavour Convention was held in Portadown last week, and was attended by delegates from all parts of the country. The town was gaily decorated with flags and arches in honour of the event, and the Convention passed off very successfully. Its most prominent and most hopeful feature was its spirituality, while, as might be expected, intense enthusiasm was not absent.

Among the Hop-pickers.

WORCESTER AND HEREFORD "YARDS."

MR. JOHN JONES and myself have again finished our 300 miles walk among the hop-pickers of Hereford and Worcestershire. "It's twenty years since you first came to us," said a woman. She was not far out, for this has been our nineteenth season, consequently we have had hearty recognitions in almost every yard.

"Here are our missioners," was the exclamation in one of the 167 yards visited. One woman even remembered our text and the date of our visits last year. Including meetings held on Sundays, we have paid 185 visits, and spoken 150 times to the thousands of pickers at the different farms. We have also carried to them, in daily burdens as large as we could carry on our backs, nearly half a ton of Gospel reading, which is highly valued.

"Some of the books you gave me last year are in America," said one. "I take 'em home and read 'em in the winter," said another. A third told us of some received in the hop-yards which she took to a woman who died, adding, "She did like them."

"Fancy their giving us all these," said another, as she gathered up the little assortment we had placed in her crib. As a proof of how well we are known, we may quote the words of a woman: "If I send one of these to my son in South Africa, he will know where I got it."

It is hard, rough work; but the reception given by pickers, pole-pullers, and growers is full compensation. The need for the work is evident from the fact that whatever may be done in other parts, we were the only visitors in most of the yards in our path; the exception being two C.A. men doing good local work.

An important feature of the effort is the many cottagers from out-of-the-way corners who thus hear the Gospel. This has been one of our best years.

William Luff.

Under Mr. John Burnham's direction, evangelistic operations have again been conducted among the Worcester and Hereford pickers. Mr. W. F. Miller (London City Mission), in the course of a description of the work, says: "Backsliders have been reclaimed, drunkards have become sober, and the vicious influenced to lead chaste lives. The village inn on pay-day has lost some of its charm because of the attractions of the lantern services. The effort is the first organized attempt to deal with the hop-pickers in the immediate vicinity of Malvern. During the whole of September the writer and two other London City missionaries were at work, and some blessed results have been met with. Each missionary was a cyclist, and with lantern, sheet, and slides has been able at night to visit the encampments, while the mornings and afternoons were spent in speaking with the pickers, telling them of Jesus and his love."

Welsh Notes.

THE annual report of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Foreign Missionary Society has just been published. It is a regrettable fact that the expenditure considerably exceeds the income. An appeal is made to the churches to double their contributions; otherwise the Society will be obliged to recall some of its missionaries.

The village of Newborough, in Anglesea, is about to be presented with buildings which will cost some £2,000. They are to be used for the benefit of the village, and will comprise reading and refreshment rooms. The donor is now resident in London, but was a native of the village of Newborough.

In view of the prevalence of Sunday trading in the town of Llanelly, especially amongst fruiterers and confectioners, a deputation from the churches of the town interviewed the Chief Constable. As a result, a proclamation has been issued in which all tradesmen are informed that the Lord's Day Observance Act will be strictly enforced in future.

Under the auspices of the Cardiff Free Church Council two important meetings were held on Friday, to promote the formation of a Free Church Girls' Guild for the town. In the course of a helpful address, Miss Marianne Farningham declared that Sunday Schools were not so successful as they might be, and that only ten per cent. of the attendants ever became church members.

The North Wales Temperance Union and the North Wales Women's Temperance Union held their annual meetings at Cefn Mawr, Ruabon, on September 23, 24, 25. In some of the conferences and meetings the two organizations were associated together. The Women's Temperance Union reported that during the past year twelve new branches had been formed, 1,300 meetings held, and over 1,000 pledges taken. At another meeting it was stated that during the last twenty years the number of licences in North Wales had decreased by 374.

Letters to the Editor.

The Jesuit Peril.

DEAR SIR,—I venture to suggest that there is an urgent call at present for the united prayers of the Church of God in this land, that we may be delivered from the Jesuits. It is impossible to shut our eyes to the fact that they wield a great and ever-increasing power and influence in Church and State, and it is quite evident that every possible opportunity is being seized and utilized for the furthering of their dark and carefully concealed designs.

All students of history know that this Order has been ever the persistent and bitter enemy of civil and religious liberty, and as France has found it necessary to enact laws for the protection of the Republic from their machinations, we are now threatened with an accession to their numbers (already large) in England.

It seems hopeless to look to statesmen of either party at present to withstand their constantly-recurring attacks on our Protestant liberties and the safeguards established by our forefathers to preserve them; but we have access to the throne of Him who ruleth over all, and who alone is able in such times to resist or roll back the evil that "comes in like a flood."

Let us pray also that men of wisdom, understanding, force of character, and definite conviction may be raised up in our Legislature to deal effectively, vigorously, and wisely with this most important matter.—Yours, &c., Ora et Labora.

Sabbath Desecration in Mediterranean Ports.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to bring to the attention of your readers a subject already alluded to in your columns, viz., Disregard of the Day of Rest by the British Mercantile Service in the ports of the Mediterranean? At these ports loading of cargo on the Lord's Day is the custom, even when the privilege to work has to be purchased from non-Christian authorities.

What must be thought of British inconsistency, whether from a humanitarian or a Christian point of view, in this question of fundamental importance—that of the weekly rest? Missionaries of the Gospel are sent by the Christians at home to proclaim the doctrines of British Christianity, Government testimony to their worth, and to the respect and protection demanded for them, being given by British passport and consular care and support in their post. These teach, by precept and practice, that they understand the command to rest as mercifully given for all time, and in all circumstances; and they insist, not only that Christians do not work themselves on the Day of Rest, but that they do not employ others to work for them.

On the other hand, the merchant companies of high standing, esteemed and trusted even by non-Christians in their mercantile dealings, representative of British Christianity as practised in the national life, declare, by the actions of their employés, that the Sabbatical institution is one of convenience, binding only when it is considered necessary to allow it to be so. They also invoke the protection of the nation in their course of action, and the honoured British flag waves its sanction while Christian and non-Christian energy is exerted in forgetting the Day of Rest.

To its officials not professing the religion of the State, the Turkish Government allows two days in the week of freedom from work; from respect for the Christianity of the representatives of foreign trade the same Government suspends work at the ports on the Christian Sabbath, and the Custom House is closed. What, then, must this Power think of the Christianity which so acts against its profession as to purchase the freedom to transgress its own law of rest, and the privilege to employ the aid of non-Christians in doing so?

Did our marine mercantile companies pause to think of the moral influence implied in such a course of action, would they not willingly forego a little possible financial gain, and trust to Him in whose control are the winds and the waves to grant them the material success which He finds good to give those who yield Him loyal service?

Are the missionaries, sent forth with the prayers of the churches and the sanction of their Government, to be placed in the position of unpractical enthusiasts, persons incapable of understanding the needs of modern progress? or are they to be the co-operatives with those whose liberality sends them from home, at one with them in principle and practice, supported in their work by the invaluable aid of the British example which is known and commented on wherever the Britisher is found abroad or met at home?

That those responsible be directed to alter a state of matters which hinders the progress of the Gospel, is the prayer of A Syrian Missionary.

Little Cripples' Holidays.

DURING the past summer more than 1,500 crippled children have enjoyed the privileges of a holiday in the seaside homes of the Ragged School Union. There are, however, no fewer than 7,000 little sufferers, deformed or injured, on the registers of the Society, so that the provision of additional holiday accommodation has been long regarded as a desideratum.

The need is now partially met by the new "Rob Roy" Home at Margate, a capacious and convenient building vacated some time since by the Y.M.C.A., and admirably suited for its present purpose. Not all of Margate throbs with the excitement of a popular resort; the pretty neighbourhood in which the Home is situated has—at any rate in October days—a quiet old-world air, with its red-brick Georgian houses and its quaint and picturesque squares.

The interior of the new Home presents a delightful appearance. A model of cleanliness and wise arrangement, it possesses, of course, the inestimable advantage of Christian oversight. Although the formal opening was deferred until Wednesday of last week, the premises have been utilized since July last for the reception of a large number of young girls from the "mean" streets and crowded alleys of the metropolis.

An inspection of the premises is an interesting experience. The dormitories, with their spick-and-span cots—some of them supported by donors in memory of departed loved ones—the neat and comfortable dining-rooms, and the splendid hall which is to be used as a playroom, are delightfully bright and homely. They were thronged with visitors at the official opening, and the unanimous verdict was one of emphatic approval.

THE OPENING CEREMONY.

The inaugural meeting, which was attended by many warm-hearted local friends, as well as a contingent of supporters from London, took place during the afternoon, when the Marquis of Northampton, president of the R.S.U., occupied the chair, supported by Lady Margaret Compton, Mr. John Kirk, secretary, and some prominent friends of the work.

A brief description of the foundation of the Home at Ramsgate, and its subsequent removal to Margate, was given by Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., who expressed satisfaction that the old name is being maintained in memory of Mr. John ("Rob Roy") Macgregor, who was so devoted a worker in and for the Ragged-School movement.

Lord Northampton's address was earnest and direct. After speaking of the new undertaking in terms of high praise, his lordship went on to contend that such work, in order to be thoroughly and satisfactorily done, must have a Christian basis. "It is God's work." In a recent letter to the Times, Mrs. Humphrey Ward ably contended for the mental and physical training of cripples; but her advocacy, in spite of her lucidity and sincerity, left a strong sense of "something lacking." That something—which is everything—will not be wanting in the R.S.U. Home, where the work is ever characterized by a desire to bring the little sufferers to the feet of the Master. If we abandon a spiritual aim, we abandon the vital principle of our philanthropy. No stimulating force awakens such tenderness in the worker, or such gratitude among the sufferers who are helped, as Christianity. The matron, not content in her ministry of consolation, with seeing all the children's rooms filled, has taken another feeble little holiday-maker into her own room. Proceeding, Lord Northampton said that a glance at the inmates would surely prove sufficient to convince as to their need, and of the inestimable value, to the class they represent, of a holiday by the sea.

THE CRIPPLES "AT HOME."

Other speakers included the Mayor of Margate (Mr. W. H. Hughes), who voiced the sympathy of local friends, and congratulated the Union on their choice of so healthy a town as Margate for the Home, and Dr. Scatcliff, Officer of Health, who devotes much time and labour to the work in his capacity of honorary medical adviser.

The meeting was now resolved into a conversazione, when, to the "pit-pat" of crutches, and amid the prattle of fresh, young voices, the little cripple girls who are at present proving the health-giving properties of Margate air, joined the company, and quickly "made friends" with Lady Margaret and the rest of the company.

In the evening a further meeting was held, at which Mr. John Kirk spoke with fervour and pathos on the character and extent of the cripples' work, and expressed the hope that, by the kindly thought and help of Christian people, the "Rob Roy" Home may speedily be freed from debt.

Children of the Congo.

IT has been said that a "bonolu" (a young boy or girl) cannot be a Christian. I mean, of course, said among the natives, and it has been one of our aims to prove the fallacy of this statement. The idea has been that he or she may begin all right, but will fall, and that continually. I believe that this belief has to a great extent, by the true consistent life and death of one of our young girls, been done away with. A girl of about seventeen years of age, named Botaka, was a member of the school here until about six months ago, and also for a long time a member of the seekers' class. She professed to be converted for some time before her death, and when present at the baptismal service when Boluka and Yek'okwala were baptized, I remember her saying, as we came up from the river, "Mama! I am dying of sorrow because I was not thought worthy to be baptized with these other women."

From that time onward she earnestly wished to be received into the Church. It was thought best that she should undergo a thorough testing before she was received, and so it was put off for a time. During this waiting time she proved, not only to us, but to the people in the town (which was in some ways more important) that she was born again, and really lived out, as far as she knew how, the life imparted to her by the Holy Spirit. Her influence on the other young girls was very great, and its loss is already felt to a great extent.

At the March meeting the names of Botaka, Bomolo, and Iseyambindo were proposed for church fellowship, and approved of, but as Botaka was sick (as we thought not very seriously), her case was postponed for a later date. On Sunday morning, March 14, the other two candidates were baptized, Bomolo, a woman about thirty, and Iseyambindo—i.e. "Father of Dirt," one of our old workmen. We had a very good service with the realised presence of the Lord, and looked forward to the not distant time when we should again assemble thus at the baptism of Botaka. But God had other plans for his child, for only two or three days after she was received into the "Church militant," she entered into the presence of her Lord, and saw Him face to face.

Of course, we grieve, because it seems to our imperfect vision a loss to the work; but yet does not the Lord of the vineyard know what is best for his own work far better than we? The testimony of all who were with her during the last few days of her illness is that her one subject of conversation was Christ and salvation; her one prayer was that she might speedily be with Him; her one longing that others might know the salvation which she enjoyed; and there is not one, however indifferent they may be to the Gospel themselves, who expresses the smallest doubt that Botaka is at this moment with Christ. Nor is there one of her young companions who say or think that Botaka did not live a Christian life. May the Lord Himself lead many to follow in her footsteps.

Yet we cannot grieve, for is not the knowledge of one soul eternally safe in the arms of Jesus enough to afford us joy, which is past all understanding, enough to repay us for all the work, and all that we have given up to come out here? We answer yes, enough and more than enough. If the friends at home only knew of the joy of the work, they would not mention the self-denial, but would think only of the privilege of being workers together with Him who is the Worker in us.

Dark Days and Their Lesson (Psalm cvii. 1-15.

THIS Psalm is one of the most symmetrical and beautiful in the whole Psalter. It would be well to make an analysis of it.

Take a large sheet of paper and divide it into five parallel columns. The first three verses should stand above the whole of these columns, because they include the contents of each. At the top of each column put the verses, 4 to 9, 10 to 16, 17 to 22, 23 to 32, 33 to 43. Find some suitable word to head each of the columns, and notice how far each paragraph resembles the rest. Write out the paragraphs in their respective columns; this will bring out the remarkable and beautiful correspondence that exists between them. It seems to me like a frame with five panels, each panel being filled with an exquisite engraving or painting. I can only deal with the first two here.

1. The Caravan (4 to 9). As I stood lately at the top of the Great Pyramid, my guide pointed out to me the pathless wilderness of sand which stretched for fifteen days' journey to the south before the traveller would come to the first well. My heart sank as I saw these dunes of sand, and recalled to mind all the stories I had heard of the agonies of thirst, and battles with the whirling sand-storms. The Psalmist depicts the march of a caravan. In the wilderness there is no city, no verdant plains, no flowing rivers, and the soul faints. Is not life sometimes like that? Do we not find ourselves on some monotonous waste, making progress with difficulty, yearning for sympathy, desiring the welcome face of someone we know and love, or the sight of our distant home? In such trouble we can but cry to the Lord, who is as near to the soul in the desert waste as in the green pastures or the temple of his presence.

2. The Prison Scene (10 to 16). In Tangiers I once looked into a prison through a small aperture in its walls. I shall never forget that sight. It was the glimpse of a moment, but the photograph of that unutterable misery will always remain with me. The prisoners were standing and sitting in all kinds of positions, in a large darkened hall. Some were clanking their chains; some were so heavily fettered they could hardly move; some were pressing against the window, feebly asking for food and money. Innocent men were amongst them. Christians would be thrust there without any charge being made against them, and kept there until their friends would conciliate the governing powers with gifts of money.

In the case before us it would seem as though the imprisonment which had befallen the captive was due to rebellion against God. In this instance it would set forth backsliders, who once knew the light and liberty of his salvation, but have forfeited their privileges by disobedience and neglect, and have therefore been abandoned to the results of their folly and sin. I have sometimes met men in prison who were once professors of religion, but who by embezzlement, through betting and gambling, or through drink, have thrown themselves out of God's protection, and have been allowed to come into the common cell. Others, who may not have come to an actual prison, have brought themselves to a prison of circumstances, in which they are immured as certainly as if they were really incarcerated.

Have you come to the end of yourself? Have you fallen down, and there is none to help? Is your heart almost broken with the pressure of heavy sorrow? Then, young friend, in your trouble cry to the Lord. Put right so far as you can what is wrong; restore what you have wrongfully taken; abandon the evil habit or companionship which has been your ruin; cry to God in your abject helplessness and need, and just as the prodigal found a glad response in his father, so will you find deliverance and help in God.

When God has delivered, when He has satisfied the longing soul and filled the hungry one, when He has broken the gates of brass and cut in sunder the bars of iron, be sure to praise Him. Too often we are so filled with the gladness of our deliverance that we forget the Deliverer. It was when Ambrose was imprisoned in the Basilica of Milan by the Emperor's soldiers that he taught the people the Te Deum and other great hymns, which laid the foundation of modern psalmody; and often it has happened in the history of the world that the prisons of God's children have become to them homes of song. See to it that this is true also of you.

The Worple Road Congregational C.E. Society entertained twenty poor children last week on Wimbledon Common. The children, who were some of London's poorest, spent a very happy time.

About ninety show attendants at Newcastle-under-Lyme "Wakes" were entertained to a tea and sacred song service a Sunday or two ago by the C.E. Societies in the town. Each guest received a pair of illuminated text cards as a memento.

A special meeting in connection with C.E. work among the cripples was held lately at Hawkstone Hall, Westminster. Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., presided, and addresses were given by Miss M. Jennie Street, Rev. A. Leggatt, and Mr. John Kirk.

International S.S. Lesson.

Joseph Exalted (Gen. xli. 38-49).

Golden Text: 1 Sam. ii. 30.

Connecting Story.

FOR two years more poor Joseph was left in the prison, for the ungrateful butler forgot all about him until Pharaoh had two dreams which none of the magicians or priests could interpret. Then Joseph was sent for in a hurry, and God enabled him to give the interpretation (give the whole story). We find him now just the same Joseph, giving all the praise and honour to God (xli. 16). Monuments and inscriptions reproduce almost every incident in Joseph's career.

The "Pharaoh" (38-43).

The King consulted his nobles, and all considered no one so able as Joseph to carry out his wise advice, because "God's Spirit was in him." The Egyptians classed all gods alike, and were quite willing to acknowledge the God of the Hebrews as a superior deity. The words, "the Spirit of God," are the same as those in Gen. i. 2, Exo. xxxi. 3, xxxv. 31, &c. Joseph is raised to the position in the King's house which he had occupied in Potiphar's; only now he is higher than Potiphar. His insignia are the signet ring, which stamped royal authority on all proclamations, the robe of finest linen or silk, and the gold chain. Fine linen has been found in Egypt which surpasses anything which modern looms can produce; and pieces of gold chains have lately been discovered there which few workmen of the present day can approach, so exquisite is the manufacture. Heralds were to proclaim Joseph as "the great seer," wherever he went.

Joseph (44-47).

He receives a new name, signifying "Bread of Life," or "Sustainer of Life," or "Saviour of the World." A wife, the daughter of a priest, is given him, and God blessed him with two sons, to whom he gave significant names. Joseph takes all these honours as gifts from God (xlv. 9); and even in the midst of rank and prosperity never forgets the sorrow of separation from his father and home (51, 52). He was always diligent and practical whether as a boy at home, a slave, in prison, or as premier—a splendid example to youth, for now he is only thirty years of age. Notice that Joseph's two sons were brought up as Israelites, not as Egyptians, and became the heads of two tribes.

Famine and Plenty (47).

Eastern countries which depend on periodical rain are all liable to famine if the rain does not come at the right time. The fruitfulness of Egypt depends on the heavy rains in Central Africa, from which the Nile overflows its banks, and deposits new, rich soil all over the land as it recedes. So rapid is the growth that often three crops of wheat and barley are gathered in a single year. When the Nile does not overflow famine ensues.

The Great Work (48, 49).

Joseph did not leave the work to subordinates, he went all through the land himself. One-fifth of all the abundance was stored in local storehouses, the work organized in a business-like way, and when the years of famine came the Egyptians were able not only to support themselves, but also to sell to other nations.

Six Traits in Joseph's Character.

Faith, Fidelity, Humility, Helpfulness, Industry Tact. Let us seek, by God's grace, to gain such a character.

Christian Institute for Lads.

MANY of your readers are aware that a discussion has been going on for some time in the London papers as to whether "Sunday schools are a failure." I do not propose to enter into the merits of the discussion. Personally I do not feel that they are a failure, but feel that they need more life, and that they need to be supplemented on week days. There are a good number of lads in this neighbourhood who are too old, or rather who think themselves too old, for Sunday-school. They do not go to any class on Sundays, and just stand about the streets doing nothing. For some time past, some teachers and friends have been praying about this matter, and it has been laid on our hearts to try and do something for these lads. The way is now opening. We propose to start, on interdenominational principles, and on a religious and temperance basis, an institute for them, where they can come in the evenings during the week. We shall begin with a Sunday afternoon Bible class—only members of this class to be allowed to join the institute. Several young ladies and gentlemen have promised to assist in looking after the lads.

We also propose having industrial classes, in which we shall teach the lads carving, fret-work, drawing, &c. We shall also have games and occasional lectures on subjects which will be interesting and instructive to them, e.g., simple chemistry, photography, &c. Our primary aim will be to win these lads for Christ and his kingdom, and we will seek to employ everything that will help to interest them and secure their confidence. We have been offered a site for a room at a nominal rent of £2 per annum, and towards the £200 required for building, furnishing, materials, &c., we have £15 in hand, and an offer of a loan of £20 without interest. I feel sure that hundreds of your readers, mothers and fathers especially, whose boys have much prized homes and helpful surroundings, will thankfully manifest their sympathy, and give us specially their prayers on behalf of these "other sheep" for whom this effort is being made. The project has the hearty sympathy of friends well known to your readers, including Dr. White, of Southsea, and Mr. J. T. Budd, of Brighton.

Metropolitan Theatre, W.

HAVING again secured the Metropolitan Theatre for Sunday evening services, Mr. Charles Cook commenced his winter campaign at that well-known resort on Sunday last. Mr. A. Garstin took part, and the large congregation, consisting largely of young men, was deeply impressed. At the close, Mr. Cook's band of helpers pointed a number of inquirers to Christ. The afternoon gathering in Hyde Park Hall was also a time of gracious refreshing.

Mr. Thomas Payne in Liverpool.

A ten-days' mission at St. Clements', Liverpool, has been conducted by Mr. Thomas Payne. The meetings were held in the Parochial Hall, and were well attended each night. The missioner is a valiant and experienced soldier of the Cross, and his faithful words were listened to with rapt attention by old and young alike. A large number of young people have been gathered in during the mission, in addition to older people, and many believers have been quickened and built up in their most holy faith.

London Tent Campaign.

In connection with the Tent Mission in Clapham an all-night prayer meeting was held on Tuesday, October 1, in one of the rooms of the Carter Home. At eleven p.m., when the meeting commenced, there were over eighty persons present, about equally representing men and women. One half of the people remained until about six a.m., when the meeting closed. The interest was sustained without weariness during the whole of the night, and altogether the meeting was remarkable in oneness of purpose and power. It was a time of earnest pleading for increased spiritual life to Christians, and for the conversion of precious souls. The testimony of many was that it was the most remarkable meeting they had ever attended. An increased spiritual interest in the tent meetings during the succeeding evenings of the week was specially manifest as an answer, it is believed, to earnest prayer.

The concluding "rally" of the campaign was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, and was, as usual, the occasion of a remarkable demonstration of friends and supporters from all parts of London. A report of the gathering will appear in our next issue.

Pumpherston, Mid-Calder, N.B.

A fortnight's mission has been held by Miss Glover in the mining village of Pumpherston. It was a striking testimony to the power of the Gospel to see the Institute Hall filled to overflowing even on week nights. Throughout the whole of the mission the entire audience remained to the after-meetings. It was also a great cause for thankfulness to see the spirit of Christian unity which was manifested in the mission. As parish minister I presided each evening; the U.F. minister and the Christian workers of both congregations took a prominent part in the meetings, while members of the Faith Mission and other friends were not behindhand in lending their aid. Many made a Christian profession, and it is not too much to say that a deep spirit of inquiry has been awakened not only in Pumpherston, but also in the many villages near to it. Miss Glover's able speaking was nobly seconded by the beautiful solo singing of Miss Jessie Liddle. There are evidents signs of much good having been effected by Miss Glover's visit.

Glasgow Workers and Missions.

"The Christian Workers' Union" monthly Conference is a unique gathering. It is a gathering of Christians month by month on the forenoon of the last Sabbath of each month from many different churches and missions. The speakers include ministers, evangelists, business men, foreign missionaries, &c. Mr. A. B. Munro, the chairman—with whom and a band of workers the Conference took shape many years ago, and had its beginning in a small way in the East End—has, from its inception, been the convener. The attendances having grown considerably, an exodus was made nearer to the heart of the city. During recent years it was held regularly in the Waterloo Rooms; then for a time in St. Andrews' Hall. Now the place of gathering is on the South Side, and month by month the twelve or fourteen hundred who attend Conference when the weather is favourable, flock to the large National Hall in Main Street, Gorbals, where it is held. Though Sunday, September 29, was a pouring wet day, something like 1,000 people were present. As usual, Mr. Munro presided, and, having been announced as a missionary conference, the speakers for the day were Mr. Mallas (India and Ceylon Mission) and Mrs. Jennings (C.I.M.). Mr. Mallas spoke of his experiences, and of service rendered during the eight years he has been in India. Mr. Jennings gave a touching account of the martyrdom of the missionaries in Shansi, and of his own marvellous escape from death. A collection was taken during the service on behalf of foreign missions, and over £18 contributed for the spread of the Gospel in heathen lands, or, including a collection taken at the door, over £24. As the Conference is distinctly composed of the working-classes, the collection shows that evangelistic workers at home, however poor, and however drawn upon on behalf of their own church and mission connections, are not void of interest in the foreign field. Mrs. Baeyertz in Arbroath.

I dare say there may not be very many readers in the South who know much of Arbroath, the old grey town by the sea from which I now write. Although not one of our very largest provincial towns, it is in many respects a notable place. The grand old abbey which rises in the centre dates from the fourteenth century. Although now in ruins, it is still, as Dr. Samuel Johnson said, well worth coming to Scotland to see. All around it, rise huge chimney stacks, connected with the mills and factories, in which most of the canvas is made that supplies the sails of the Navy and the tents of the Army. The minds of the people are something like the staple product of the town, tough yet flexible, hard to win, yet, when attached to Christ, wearing well in all weathers.

It was to these good folks that Mrs. Baeyertz came for a mission on the 15th September. She was invited by the officials of the Christian Endeavour Union, and the special effort lasted sixteen days.

Mrs. Baeyertz has a clear and cultured style of speaking; she has penetrated into the very core of the Gospel; and above all, she has a large share of that deep and tender mother-love which makes her yearn for the salvation of souls.

Specially valuable was her testimony on the blood of Christ, as typified in "The Passover" and "The Day of Atonement." On such themes Mrs. Baeyertz, as a converted Jewess, is very much at home. We were delighted to hear her again and again ring out the truth that Jesus is indeed divine, and really, as in name, "Immanuel, God with us." On the subject of the Holy Spirit, and especially on the subject of sanctification and consecration, her teaching was clear and Scriptural.

It is perhaps too soon to speak of the results of the mission. The large church was crowded to the door on Sabbath evenings, and well-filled every week-night. The impression has been widespread and deep. There has been no eagerness to count heads or make a show of statistics. But it may not be out of place to say that when all who had received quickening and blessing at the mission were invited to meet together for thanksgiving at a special gathering of the Christian Endeavour Union, considerably over 200 assembled. Interesting addresses were given by Revs. J. P. Lilley (in whose church the mission was conducted), J. Moffat Scott, George Menzies, Mr. John Moffat, and others. Wise counsels were urged on the young converts to cleave to the Lord with purpose of heart, to abound in prayer and study of the Scriptures, and enter into the fellowship of love and service.

Many friends say that Arbroath has had no such stirring time since 1874. Mrs. Baeyertz has left the sunniest memories behind her.

A Christian Endeavourer.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, of the Evangelization Society, has just completed his fourth summer's tent work in Dorset and Wilts, where he has earnestly proclaimed the Gospel, to the spiritual profit both of Christians and the unconverted.

L. H.

The Weaver Brothers have had a fruitful mission at Brimscombe. Night by night the Gospel was told forth by song and speech, with power. The congregations greatly increased and, best of all, souls have been brought to the Lord, backsliders restored, and Christians cheered and edified. G. H.

Mr. J. Brunton, jun., has been preaching for the past seven weeks in a large tent in Lewisham, S.E. Good audiences have gathered nightly. On the evening of the closing day (Sunday, September 29) the tent was crowded, and some were unable to obtain admission. A solemn meeting followed, and there were some cases of decision.

A mission has been conducted by Mr. W. Olney (so well-known in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle), and Mr. F. Spencer Johnson, at Onslow Baptist Chapel, South Kensington, S.W. Meetings were held both for adults and children. The Gospel was preached and sung with earnestness, and a number of persons, mostly adults, confessed Christ.

F. Searles.

Mr. Geo. Bennett has concluded ten weeks' services at Whitley Bay, Portobello, and St. Anne's-on-Sea. The attendances were large, especially during the first seven or eight weeks. There was an average of two services daily, with several cases of decision among the young people after each gathering. Quite a number of nurses and other adults also received blessing.

In connection with the Y.M.C.A. Mr. W. Monro Collings has conducted a fourteen days' mission in the Mechanics' Institute, Wakefield. The meetings were well attended throughout, and very many were led to give their hearts to the Lord Jesus Christ. The closing meeting of the mission was one which will be long remembered by those present. The power of God was mightily manifested in convicting many of the unconverted, and blessing Christians.

A nine days' Gospel mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, has been held in the Baptist Chapel, Crewkerne. The Bible readings and various addresses, including one to the Sunday school children, and two to over 400 employés in one of the factories, were characterized by freshness and spiritual fervour. Mr. Thorne's lecture, "From the Stage to the Cross," was delivered with solemnity and power to a large and appreciative audience. Throughout the mission a gracious influence prevailed, betokening lasting good as the result.

J. C.

Miss Lottie Tubb, who has been singing through the Great Tent Campaign, and is now helping Mr. Chas. Cook at Hyde Park Hall and the Metropolitan Theatre, is hoping to give herself wholly to the Lord's work in Gospel solo singing, and will be glad to hear from those desiring her services. Mr. Cook says, "She is an able and efficient singer, has a good contralto voice, and is a spiritually-minded worker, able to lead anxious souls to the Saviour, and I have pleasure in recommending her to those who are seeking to win souls." Her address is 4, Clarkson Street, Bethnal Green, E,

We are thankful to record another "good time" at the sixteenth annual Fair Tea, held in Gloucester on Sunday evening, September 29. It was attended by about 120 "travellers" from Barton Fair. Mr. Bob Johnson, the "converted minstrel," spoke with earnestness, and made the meeting bright with his solos and choruses. Twenty-four pledges were taken. In the afternoon came the large open-air meeting, which was referred to in last week's Christian. Mr. Johnson made good use of his banjo, and his Gospel message was with power. We believe that many hearts and consciences have been touched. E. S.

Praise.

For blessing at the Young Christian Missionary Union Convention, recently held at the Conference Hall, Pastors' College, S.E.

Mr. William Forbes.—Many friends will hear with regret that Mr. W. Forbes, who has worked so long and devotedly in the spiritual interests of theatrical employés is laid aside with a severe chill. When taken ill Mr. Forbes was busily occupied with a series of meetings for the women employed at the Empress Theatre, Earl's Court, S.W.

About Books.

FUNDAMENTAL TRUTH.

THERE is continually need for a restatement of Gospel truth. Defective teachings and dangerous speculations are ever being presented to the public, with consequences that are unsettling to faith, and damaging to Christian service. It is a pleasure to be able in any degree to advance efforts that counteract the tendency and neutralize the evil. The Essays which recently appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, aimed at this, and many have borne testimony to the helpfulness of the teaching conveyed. The title of the volume, Foundation Truths of the Gospel (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott), fairly indicates the scope and nature of the contents.

The Essays are nineteen in number, and the writers are men whose praise is in all the churches. Canon Girdlestone deals with the sublime themes of God and the Bible; Rev. F. B. Meyer writes on the Fall, and Rev. F. S. Webster on Sin. There are three papers on the Cross and Atonement, from varying standpoints, the writers being Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., and Revs. William Crosbie and David Baron. The Bishop-elect of Durham (Dr. Moule) contributes a luminous chapter on Regeneration; Dr. Monro Gibson writes on Faith; and Rev. T. A. Gurney on the Person of Christ. Resurrection is dealt with in two papers by Dr. Robert Anderson and Mr. Henry Varley; and Repentance is also treated under two aspects, by Rev. D. M. McIntyre and the late Rev. Dr. Gritton. The other contributors are: Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas ("Justification"); Professor Laidlaw, D.D. ("The Holy Spirit"); and Rev. T. G. Selby ("Sanctification of the Spirit"). When it is added that Dr. Guinness Rogers opens with a paper on "The Value of a Creed," enough has been said to indicate the comprehensive character of the volume.

In the words of the preface, "From first to last the aim has been to guide the perplexed, and establish such as are troubled in mind." Seeing that our times present much opportunity for a ministry such as these pages aim to discharge, we bespeak the prayerful interest of our readers in the book and its mission.

The London Evangelist, a new monthly Christian-Evidence magazine, promises to be a worthy addition to the list of periodicals of its class. It is to be edited by Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, and, judging from the contents of its numbers, will merit a hearty reception in the Christian home. (1d. Kensit.)

Christian workers on the look-out for help in presenting Gospel lessons on the basis of Old Testament texts will find welcome material in Spiritual Patterns: Suggestive Outlines on the Tabernacle; its Vessels, Priesthood, and Offerings. By Rev. James Smith, of Coalsnaughton, N.B. (1s. 6d. nett. Glasgow: Pickering and Inglis; London: Bagster.) Mr. Smith knows how to help preachers and teachers, and this is as good as the best of his work in that line.

Readers of the Sunday at Home are familiar with the illustrated articles which for a number of years appeared in its pages from the pen of the late Mr. Henry A. Harper, dealing in most graphic fashion with Palestine and other Eastern lands. A notable addition has now been made to the illustrated volumes, published by the Religious Tract Society, in An Artist's Walks in Bible Lands (6s.), in which a careful selection has been made from the work of his pen and pencil. Beginning with Jerusalem, a number of scenes dear to every Christian heart are brought under review. The concluding chapter, "New Lights on Ancient Ways," is specially interesting, and gives to the reader the benefit of the observation of one who wandered over "the unchanging East" with "the seeing eye." The illustrations are of the highest order, alike in design and execution.

Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls have issued an illustrated edition of George Croly's well-known historical romance Tarry Thou Till I Come; or, Salathiel, the Wandering Jew. (6s.) The story raises questions of great interest. It was written some seventy years ago, and has from time to time appeared with varying titles. It deals with the momentous events that occurred, chiefly in Palestine, from the time of the Crucifixion to the destruction of Jerusalem. The pages are replete with Oriental charm and colouring, and the illustrations by Thulstrup are excellent and highly finished. General Lew Wallace, author of "Ben Hur," writes an introduction; and as the Jew is "to wander on earth till Christ comes again," some deeply interesting appendices are given, one of them on "Jesus of Nazareth from the Present Jewish Point of View," with letters from representative Hebrews. Dr. D. S. Gregory gives a succinct history of the doctrine of the Second Advent, and Dr. A. T. Pierson follows with reasons for the belief that Christ may come within the next twenty years.

Church of England.

Twenty-nine students—a number far in excess of the total of any previous year—resided in Ridley Hall, Cambridge, for the summer term. There are forty names entered for this term.

The Bishop of London is arranging for a round table conference on ritual, similar to that convened by the late Bishop Creighton, to meet at Fulham either at the latter end of the present year or early in 1902.

Sunday, October 6, was observed as Thank-offering Sunday at St. Paul's, Canonbury. The restoration of the church is now an accomplished fact. Of the £2,300 needed, over £2,000 has been already raised, and the vicar (Rev. H. L. C. de Candole) is inviting all the parishioners to join in a final effort to raise the remaining sum.

The C.M.S. Social Gatherings for Missionaries will be resumed this month at the Mission House, Salisbury Square. Arrangements have been made for October 10, November 14, and December 12. Each reception will be at three p.m. The usual Thursday prayer meeting will be held from four to five, and social intercourse will be resumed from five to six. Tea will be provided after the prayer meeting.

The annual Conference of the Carlisle Evangelical Union has been held in the parish of St. James, Carlisle, of which Rev. C. Askwith is the vicar. Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence read a paper on "Weak Points in our Harness." Rev. W. M. Shepherd dealt with "The Duty of Systematic Giving;" and Rev. C. T. Horan read a paper on "National Sins and Rapidly Increasing Indifference to Religion—the Best Means to Counteract Them."

Congregational.

Victoria Road Church, Cambridge, has decided to hold an evangelistic service on one Sunday evening in each month during the coming winter, with the view to reaching non-churchgoers.

The sixteenth anniversary of Rev. J. Thompson's pastorate at Northam was celebrated on October 2. Revs. D. J. Beynon, E. R. Pullen, and others took part. During the year good progress has been made, both in the church and Sunday school.

More than a thousand ministers and delegates have applied for tickets for the autumnal meetings of the Union at Manchester. A special train will be run over the Midland line, calling to take up delegates at Bedford, Kettering, Leicester, and Derby, on Monday, October 14.

The autumnal meetings of the Somerset Congregational Union have been held at Paul's Meeting, Taunton. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers preached powerful and soul-stirring sermons, dealing with the preacher and his message. The meetings were well attended, and great interest was evinced.

Rev. H. C. Carter has been recognised as pastor of Queen Street Church, Wolverhampton, so intimately associated with the name of the late Dr. Berry. The building was thronged, and among those who took part in the service were Revs. Principal Fairbairn and J. H. Jowett and Mr. Frank Lenwood.

Mr. C. Wickerson has closed his nine years' work as pastor-evangelist at Christ Church Hall, Enfield, and was at the farewell meeting the recipient of a substantial token of the respect of the workers. Rev. H. Storer Toms, and Mr. W. H. Brown, Chairman of the London Union, paid generous tributes to Mr. Wickerson's ministerial labours.

The thirty-sixth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. R. Allen Davies at Ventnor was celebrated on Sunday, September 29, and Wednesday, October 2. Sermons were preached by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, an old friend and neighbour of Mr. Davies, whose utterances were fresh, original, and very helpful. Rev. A. S. Welch, M.A., conducted the first part of the Wednesday evening service; short addresses having been delivered after tea by Revs. H. Coley, D. M. Bynnor, S. Parkinson, of Halstead, and the pastor. The congregations throughout the anniversary were very large. The past year has been one of the most spiritually prosperous of Mr. Davies' long ministry.

A warm welcome was given on Thursday last to Dr. P. T. Forsyth as the new Principal of Hackney College. The meeting was held in the West Hampstead Congregational Church, Finchley Road, and, in spite of the inclement weather, was largely attended. Mr. W. Marten Smith presided, and in extending a welcome to the Principal, spoke of the gratification felt by the committee at his acceptance of the post. Dr. Forsyth, who was enthusiastically received, paid a high tribute to his lamented predecessor, Dr. Cave, and in the course of his address pleaded for higher education. Dr. Forsyth expressed the belief that "one reason why Romanism and Ritualism have such scope and play to-day is that the people are not sufficiently educated on these themes. It has been asked, "Is the Gospel of the Reformation antiquated!" The answer is, "No, for it is the old Gospel, so old that it was not invented at the Reformation."

Baptist.

The total amount received by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., to the Twentieth Century Fund, up to Saturday, September 28, was £114,677 16s. 2d.

Foundation stones of a new chapel have been laid at High Wycombe. The Baptist Union was well represented by Rev. W. Cuff, who gave a stirring address, and preached a powerful sermon. The church is united and enthusiastic in the undertaking. The work was not commenced, however, until loyal support had been given to the Twentieth Century Fund.

Mr. D. Russell Smith, who has held the student-pastorate at West Hendon since December, 1898, has been formally recognised as pastor. Principal A. M'Craig delivered the charge to the pastor and to the church, and a sermon was preached by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon. At the public meeting Mr. Frank Gough, of Finchley, presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. G. D. Hooper (Bournemouth), Frank M. Smith (Peckham), F. J. Skinner (Pastors' College), and W. J. Sears (Willesden Green).

Of late years there has been a rapid growth of population in Barking and the surrounding district, and in order to meet the need, a tabernacle was erected in 1893, important enlargements being made five years later, the total cost being £5,000. The members are of the working class, but have succeeded in reducing the debt on the buildings to about £1,000. Pastor H. Trueman writes from 47, Cambridge Road, Barking: "This being our church jubilee year, we are making a strenuous effort to wipe out the adverse balance, though this is not possible apart from outside help. The work is commended by, among others, Pastors T. Spurgeon and A. G. Brown.

Methodist.

Under memorandum of the late Mr. Samuel Cocker, who was a well-known Wesleyan Methodist of Sheffield, the Religious Tract Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society have each received the sum of £19,500.

Rev. J. Gregory Mantle has been welcomed to his new sphere of work, the West London Mission, at a meeting addressed by Mr. P. W. Bunting, Mr. Bamford Slack, Mrs. Price Hughes, and Revs. C. Ensor Walters and W. N. Lax.

The purchase, by the Primitive Methodists, of the Livingstone Hall, Edinburgh, which, with necessary alterations, cost over £12,000, is being justified by results. The church and school have grown, and at recent Sunday services the large hall has been crowded.

Missionary services, in connection with the Bible Christians, have been held, with exceptional success, both in Jersey and Guernsey. Dr. and Mrs. Savin were warmly welcomed as the deputation.

The Wesleyan Mission at Wandsworth Road, S.W., is able to report progress, notwithstanding the paucity of workers and inadequate premises. The classes are well attended, and the spiritual life of the Church real and deep. Many useful agencies have been started, and are thriving. Open-air work has been vigorously carried on during the summer, and house-to-house visitation systematically organized for the ensuing winter. The new premises of the Mission, Springfield Hall, are rapidly approaching completion.

At the invitation of the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union and the Metropolitan Districts Centre, about a thousand Sunday school officers and teachers attended a two-days' convention last week at Wesley's Chapel, for the purpose of considering how best to make their work tell upon the youth of the land. Some useful suggestions were made in the course of the deliberations, and the papers read were of a highly practical nature. The carelessness and spirit of listlessness and indifference, so often found in the school, were deplored, and teachers and conductors were urged to throw more life and energy into their work. With reference to the decay of the morning school, it was felt that if a teacher did his utmost, week by week, to prepare a good and attractive lesson, and used his persuasive powers to induce his scholars to attend, he would rarely find that he had no class to teach.

Presbyterian.

The Exeter Hall Home Missionary Meeting will be held on the 30th inst. Principal Dykes will preside.

A new church hall at Redlands, Bristol, has been opened. It forms a branch church in connection with Rev. W. B. Cooper's congregation.

At the opening of St. Peter's Church, Sunderland, an anonymous friend contributed the sum of £500 towards the cost of that building. The same friend sent £1,000 at the laying of the foundation-stone. Both gifts came through Rev. Dr. Thoburn McGaw.

Society of Friends.

There was a good attendance at Kent Quarterly Meeting, held recently at Canterbury. A hearty welcome was given to William Hobson, who subsequently gave an interesting account of some portions of his travels, as well as some happy reminiscences.

A quiet and solemn meeting took place on Thursday at Devonshire House, to bid farewell to seven Friends who are shortly going to India and Ceylon as missionaries in connection with the Friends' Foreign Mission Association. The chair was occupied by H. Vigurs Harris, of Plymouth, and a message written by J. Bevan Braithwaite was read to the missionaries by Dr. William Wilson, Secretary of the Association. The message congratulated them on their work, and urged them not to allow any philosophy to disguise from them their central theme.

Warwick, Leicester, and Stafford quarterly meeting met at Leicester on September 25. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight was held the evening before, when the chief subject was the training of the young and inexperienced teachers in the children's Sunday schools held under the auspices of Friends. Quite a number of the junior teachers in these schools consist of elder scholars who have been promoted. In one school the elder scholars who have become teachers still form part of an elder class. In another, one of the members meets a small number of adult scholars who are now undertaking the work of teaching, and goes over with them the proposed lesson, considering both subject and method of teaching. This has been found very useful and suggestive.

In order to accommodate the congregations coming together at Vale Mission Hall, Guernsey, extensions have been made which add greatly to the usefulness of the building. Messrs. P. M. Vaudin, hon. superintendent, and B. H. Angel conducted the opening service, which was held recently and was attended by a crowded and appreciative congregation.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. HENRY CLARK, M.A., a venerable and esteemed minister of the Baptist body.—Mr. THOMAS CASH, a well-known member of the Society of Friends.—Heath Congregational Church, Halifax, has lost a zealous worker by the death of Mr. MILFORD SHAW, a deacon and former superintendent of the Sunday school.—Chapel Street Congregational Church, Blackburn, mourns the death of its senior member, Mr. JAMES SEFTON.—Mrs. SARAH OLIVER, of Wingate, Durham. She was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church for fifty-one years, and was for many years a devoted class-leader, and, although afflicted with a painful malady, she conducted her class up to a few weeks before she died.—On Lord's Day, October 6, AUGUSTA, elder daughter of Isaiah and Martha Jupe, late of Mere, Wilts.

London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews.

OFFERINGS IN THE NEW CENTURY.

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

Missions to the Jews are the most Scriptural and important of all Missions. Because—

(1) They are Christ's brethren according to the flesh.
(2) Still beloved for the fathers' sakes.
(3) The receiving of them shall be "Life from the dead" to the world at large.

"God shall bless us, and all the ends of the world shall see the salvation of our God."

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED FOR THIS WORK.

227 Missionaries now Employed
(Including Wives and Honorary Workers).
Fifty Mission Stations altogether.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Vice-Patrons—
Rear-Admiral H.R.H. The Duke of Cornwall and York, K.G., and the Four Archbishops, &c.

Increased FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of The Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

In consequence of these valuable extensions in ports abroad it has become unhappily necessary to reduce the staff working afloat in home ports. Further funds are required to fill up the vacancies thus caused.

The Society maintains 185 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 70 seaports in every part of the world.

Seventy-one Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels, and Boats, and 96 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1900—£49,166.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Offertories, Drawing-Room Meeting Collections, &c., should be sent to Commander W. Dawson, R.N.

The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

BIBLE STUDENTS, EVANGELISTS, OPEN-AIR PREACHERS, and CHRISTIAN WORKERS generally should write to MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., for CATALOGUE of their BOOKS, Tracts, Leaflets. Hymn Sheets, &c.

In Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

This is the First Volume of a

Re-Issue of Rev. F. B. Meyer's Scripture Biographies.

The volumes comprised in this re-issue will be large crown 8vo in size; printed on specially prepared Antique Wove "Zephyr" Paper, producing a book which is large and handsome, and at the same time light to the hand. The binding will be in cloth boards, with gold lettering on back and side; and the general "get up" will be found to be decidedly attractive and "up-to-date." The price of each will be 2s. 6d. per volume.

The Second Volume of the Re-issue ("Israel, a Prince with God") will be published on 21st October, and the others will appear at intervals of a month; of each due announcement will be made.

The appreciation by Christian readers of the works of this well-known Author has already resulted in the sale of a very large number, and it is hoped that the new form will quicken the interest in the series, and secure for it a still wider circulation.

Ask your Bookseller to show you a Copy of the Re-issue.

The Ordinary Editions are still on sale.

Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, and others.

A Foreword in The Christian.

The pages furnish a succinct statement of Scripture teaching on "those things which are most surely believed among us." From many quarters we have received letters commending the timeliness of the publication, and we sincerely trust that the friends of Evangelical religion will assist in circulating the book. Young people and Christian workers will find it of special service.

Notes & Comments

"Scripture Biographies." The second volume of the reissue of the series of Scripture Biographies by Rev. F. B. Meyer—"Israel, a Prince with God"—in new and larger form, will be published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott on Monday next (2s. 6d.). Private readers and pastors of congregations will find in it a worthy example of the "constant well-spring of freshness, variety, and interest," to be found "in the glorious biographies of Scripture."

Legislators and Temperance. The persistent indifference of successive Governments is keenly felt by leaders of the temperance movement; but the fact that the present position has been attained rather in spite of than with the help of the legislature, has not often been so frankly admitted as it was by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain on Monday evening:—

> It must be evident that any improvement in the habits of the people, any diminution in intemperance, has been due to the labour of individuals, and not the work of the politician, not to statutory compulsion, nor to the enactments of Parliament.

This is a somewhat tardy admission of a patent fact, and doubtless was intended and received as a compliment to temperance workers. In this light it is a great encouragement to all who seek the good of the nation to "go forward." But if a Cabinet Minister can make such an admission, it may fairly be asked why commendable efforts for amelioration are not supported by legislation. If politicians screen themselves from neglect of duty behind empty compliments to those who are entitled to practical support, such a statement as Mr. Chamberlain's calls for indignation rather than satisfaction.

Contact With Pitch. We have frequently drawn attention to the painful fact that in the lists of shareholders of the great brewery and distillery companies the names appeared of clergymen and ministers, and of men and women engaged in various forms of Christian work. Speaking on the subject of Covetousness at the recent Church Congress at Brighton, the Dean of Hereford referred in strong terms to this form of greed in connection with the liquor traffic, and said:—

> A great number of gentlemen, many ladies, and not a few clergymen are implicated. In old days, temperance reformers knew who their opponents were. Now they have no idea. Their opponents may move in the best society, may be members of church or chapel, and this fact interferes very much with the progress of temperance work. I have often suspected that those people who are in favour of a mild kind of temperance reform have some interest in the liquor traffic. This is covetousness. Let us keep our hands clean from this contact with pitch.

Unrighteous Revenue. A return just issued by the Board of Trade casts a lurid light upon the drink traffic in Great Britain, as it appears from it that a larger proportion of the revenue is derived from the taxes upon drink in England than in any other country, being at the rate of thirty-six per cent. of the entire national revenue. Thus, as regards the latest year available, the total duties on alcoholic beverages amounted to no less than £37,870,000. In France the proportion was nineteen per cent., in Germany eighteen, and in the United States twenty-nine per cent. In Great Britain the annual consumption per head for every man, woman, and child, amounts to thirty gallons of beer, two gallons of proof spirit, and a large amount of wine. And most of this revenue is built directly upon the degradation of men, women, and children, and the wrecking of millions of lives. Yet we continue to permit, for the enrichment of the brewer and the publican, the temptation to drink to be set at every street corner in the districts where the workers and the poor live.

A Terrible Outlook. It is almost beyond belief that the County of London has now nearly 20,000 lunatics under its charge, and that about 500 are added each year to the roll of inmates of its public asylums. These unfortunates cost at least £25 per annum each, and huge sums, in one case nearly £500,000, are being spent upon the erection of new asylums. The State, too, is adding at the rate of 700 each year to the members of insane in the prison asylums. The prospect, therefore, is an appalling one, and it is made more dreadful still by the fact that the drink traffic, fostered and encouraged on every hand by the Government, is one of the leading factors in the production of lunacy. This, however, does not shelve the individual responsibility, for the Government is just what the people choose to make it.

The House of Lords and Early Closing. The idea that "voluntary effort" is sufficient to solve the early closing question, is clearly shown to be fallacious in the Report of the House of Lords Committee on the subject. There are many valuable reforms that are traceable to individual and communal effort, but the difficulties here are such that whole neighbourhoods are at the mercy of individuals whose only idea is their own supposed rights, apart from the interests of others. So long as this is so, the only remedy is legislation, which will compel insignificant minorities to fall in with the decision of majorities, and force them to keep such compacts as they agree to. Then there will be a real chance of putting an end to the occasional tragedies that are attributable to the unwholesome hours to which delicate shop-assistants are sometimes subjected in the teeth of all considerations of humanity.

The Nation and the Individual. There is a thought which calls for serious consideration in the pastoral from the Archbishop of York, to which reference was made in our last issue:—

> "If God be the God of nations as well as of individuals, if there be any responsibility towards God in the conduct and character of national life, the punishment of national sin must be inflicted in the life that now is, for nations will have no existence as nations in the life to come.

In the absence, however, of a national humiliation before God, as the national sin is simply the aggregation of personal sins and shortcomings, the humiliation may well begin with the individual. God is ever waiting to be gracious, and if every Christian made it a rule to cry day and night to the Prince of Peace "to whom all power is given in heaven and on earth," we might soon rejoice in a cessation of the cruel struggle in South Africa.

Proposed Day of Prayer. Rev. F. B. Meyer writes:—Will you permit me through your columns to make an appeal to Christian people, that we should unite, as far as possible, on Friday, November 1, for the whole, or part of the day, in waiting upon God, that He shall bring about the cessation of this bitter strife in South Africa?

I would have been thankful if some great Church or Society could have secured a day of national humiliation and prayer, but as that seems impossible, and the weary months are passing by, surely private Christians in their own retirement, as well as little groups in public buildings, may on that day wait upon God in concerted prayer.

That we should do so, does not, I think, involve the expression of any opinion as to the origin or justice of the war, for, whatever we may think on these matters, we surely are agreed in desiring that a way should be speedily found out of the present complications.

Without further announcement, therefore, may it be taken as understood that all who can should agree touching this thing that we should ask, and upon that day?

I trust no one will count me presumptuous in making such a proposal. My plea is that no one else has made it, and that I am sure that many of God's children will be glad to fall in with the suggestion.

Liberty and Libertinism. Lord Halifax's "short way" with the legal and ecclesiastical restrictions to the vagaries of Ritualists, that if anyone wants liberty in these things, his best course is "to take it," sounds brave and bold; but it is simply an invitation to rebellion against all authority which happens to be distasteful. Our Sacerdotal friends seem to have lost sight of a great distinction—that between liberty and libertinism. The latter is an indulgence, the former a principle. The latter puts individual whim on the throne; the former, constituted authority. It is an ill day for England that a nobleman of high rank, and a religious leader, should be allowed to utter such sentiments from the platform of the Church Congress. The unity and the peace, for which such pious wishes were expressed at the Congress, will not come to the Church while such ideas are rife.

The Appeal to Antiquity. One of the most important questions dealt with at the recent Church Congress was that of the "Reformation Settlement." The debate practically turned upon the value of antiquity as authority for the Church life of to-day. In discussing the debate, the Church Times remarks:—

> Not everything which might laudably be done in the fourth century can lawfully be done now. . . . The Church of England is a part of the whole Catholic Church of Christ, is tied to the whole past of that Church, and lives precisely because so tied.

Of course, we know what is behind this dictum, and how much High Churchmen build upon it. But then, the whole point of the controversy between Catholics and Evangelicals is there. If antiquity is to be the rule for all time, why stop at the fourth century? Evangelicals have better reason when they say, "We will go back to the very beginning."

The Real Worth of Antiquity. Our Lord Himself has supplied us with the true method of dealing with any religion that supports itself solely upon antiquity. In answer to the Pharisees, who claimed a long and ancient descent from Abraham, He distinguished between the Word of God, and the "traditions" with which they had encrusted it; sternly rebuking his critics for their adulteration of the Word entrusted to them. The Catholic party admit what they call a "growth" of doctrine and ritual and "devotions," but loyalty to the New Testament—the original source—sees in this "growth," as expressed in the Mass, Mariolatry, &c., the growth of the fungus, and not the growth of healthy life. The Reformation was not the commencement of a "new religion," but the return to the oldest source of all—Apostolic life and doctrine. The argument from antiquity, therefore, is not the property of men who begin with the fourth century, but theirs who go back to the first. If the work of the Reformation had only been more thoroughly done, the Prayer Book would not have been what it is to-day—a bone of contention for two opposite parties.

Dr. Maclaren's Address. Rarely has a more masterly and timely address been delivered to Christian workers than that which Dr. Maclaren gave at Edinburgh before the Baptist Union. The venerable preacher sees what infinite harm has been done by that vague "moral" teaching which is the staple food served up from so many pulpits, and he counsels all preachers and teachers to return with increased emphasis to the central truth of "Christ in us" being all for life, morality, and service. It is not a pleasing reflection that such an admonition as this has become necessary; but, unhappily, there is yet much preaching in the name of Christ which has very little of Christ in it. The power of the pulpit is not in emphasizing the resemblances between the faith and philosophic morals, but in proclaiming the uniqueness of Jesus Christ and the life that He bestows upon men.

The Pulpit and Social Questions. Sunday, October 27, has been fixed as "Citizen Sunday," and this year again, London ministers are asked upon that day to deal plainly with some of the social questions which press heavily upon our London life. Not all, however, seem to be agreed upon the wisdom of devoting a Sunday to this subject. Mr. Meyer read out, at Edinburgh, a letter from a well-known Evangelical teacher, in which he declined to sacrifice an occasion for preaching the Gospel to the consideration of any social question. Mr. Meyer's spirited reply to this letter is worth reading, for it places the entire question in its right light. No one is asked to suppress the Gospel in favour of a social programme, but the preacher of the Gospel ought to take note of the terrible conditions in which so many Londoners live—conditions which open the route to hell rather than to heaven. These things must be dealt with, and the Gospel, which is the only remedy, must be preached as well. There is nothing of politics in all this—it is a question of saving the lost, body and soul, and this is the Church's work.

Purple and Fine Linen. It is painful to read that in London alone last year there were fifty-three deaths from actual starvation, and a perusal of the official returns reveals the fact that in most of the cases the sufferers were not of those who will not work—a class which Sir John Gorst has said is but few in number—but were members of that huge army of the "deserving poor." The list included seamstresses out of work, hawkers over eighty years of age, homeless widows, and doll makers, one of whom was in receipt of 2s. 6d. per week outdoor relief. Most of them were victims to the law of supply and demand, so much vaunted by those who defend the wasteful luxury of the present day. They were simply crushed out of the struggle for existence, and they pass out of sight in that blackness of great darkness which looms behind our boasted national wealth.

Dr. Parker's Health. The report of heart-weakness which explained Dr. Parker's inability to travel to Edinburgh to deliver the Baptist Union sermon, has caused wide disquietude as to the great preacher's condition of health. It is reassuring to learn that the medical report is mainly precautionary, and that there is plenty of work in Dr. Parker if he takes things more quietly, and limits his work strictly to the City Temple. Dr. Parker has driven a deep wedge into the religious life of the nation by his faithful preaching of the Cross in the heart of the great city. We trust he has years of efficient work still before him.

The New Revelation. The school of "Liberal Theology," which met last week, confessed itself unable to attract the attention of the public by means of meetings; hence it is prosecuting its work through a "Postal Mission." One of its great features, we observe, is an insistence upon what is called "progressive revelation"—that is we may discount Paul and the Apostles, and most of their doctrines, in favour of the advanced thought of the hour. "Why should not God speak to men now as well as to men in the olden times? Why are we to be tied to the dogmas of the New Testament?" Men who speak in this manner place themselves upon trial. They profess superiority to the Apostles—then they, and not the Apostles, are upon trial. There is no "crank" ever conceived in man's imagination that might not be accepted if this claim were admitted. And what have these new prophets to tell us? For the most part they deny the exceeding sinfulness of sin, the reality of the Atonement, or any need for one, and the need of regeneration. And the public has well appraised the value of their negations by absenting themselves from their meetings.

The Perfect Revelation. This vagueness of expression concerning "progressive revelation" is not confined to the school which claims to be its parent. Unhappily, nebulous notions about revelation are all too common amongst people who certainly are not marked by great power of thought. The Apostle of Jesus Christ, in the face of this vague and vain teaching, has one testimony to bear, viz., that God's final revelation has been given to men in our Lord Jesus Christ. In Him the last word about sin, redemption, and regeneration has been uttered. This revelation is final because it is perfect—and beyond perfection there is nothing. When the pretended prophets of the hour, who shelter themselves under Christ's name, whilst denying his Deity, are placed by the side of HIM, how paltry they look. All who really know the human heart, its sin and its need, understand that outside Christ there is no revelation that at once exposes and cures the maladies of mankind. These new prophets have, at best, only a philosophy—and a poor one at that. What men need, and cry out for, is a living redemptive power.

The Modern Service. Our spirited contemporary, The Examiner, which has, from the first, devoted a good deal of space to dealing with difficult and pressing problems of Church life, has some pertinent questions to ask, in its current issue, about our modes of conducting worship:—

"Everything must be short"; "choose a short lesson"—"one lesson is enough." Does the small quantity of the Bible explain the conspicuous absence of Scripture language, allusion, and influence from the prayer, as compared with the prayers of the fathers? Have we not carried the diversifying of the service to the point of distraction, and the pleasing of the least spiritual of our congregations to the point of weakness?

In contrast with this is the large space given in the Anglican service to Holy Scripture, in Psalms, Canticles, and Lessons. The Examiner's questions are worthy of being pondered by many who conduct free services. The Bible is so little read at home nowadays, that the only chance some people have of hearing it is in public worship. Whatever other parts of the service are cut short, surely the Word of God should receive its proper prominence; and when read, "the sense also" should be given.

"Practical" Living. One of the words that Christian men need to recover from the ill use to which it has been put, is the common word "practical." Too frequently we have allowed it to be monopolized by persons who perceive nothing substantial beyond what appeals to their animal life. Men who devote all their energies to making money, or to making a great noise in the world, are supposed to be "practical"; whilst others, who deal with the hidden forces behind the screen of common life are supposed to be unpractical. The reverse of this is the truth. The truly practical man is he whose life roots are struck deep into God, and whose expenditure of energy is the direct result of his union with the Eternal. "Practical" efforts, divorced from Divine energy, carry at their heart the fatal worms which must consume them.

Tainted Literature. Paris has followed Belgium in seeking to suppress the traffic in tainted literature. An English publisher has just been heavily fined for sending out prospectuses of an odious book, while both prospectuses and books will be confiscated. Not so long ago the Paris police cleared out an entire area in the centre of the city, noted for its offences in this matter. This is extremely satisfactory. It is of no use to deal mildly with men who live upon the moral downfall of others. A bad book is like a poisoned stream which carries death wherever it courses; and any man who deliberately starts such a stream is a moral murderer. London, however, is closer to us than Paris, and we ardently wish that our police would emulate their confrères of Paris, and turn their attention to some notorious houses in and near the Strand. More than once attention has been drawn to this matter, and yet no action has been taken.

Agricultural Depression—and its Remedy. "Some parts of England are becoming as lonesome as the veldt of Africa." In these words Mr. Rider Haggard sums up his impressions of the present agricultural condition of this country. The journey which this authority has made through the land has convinced him that our system of land-tenure is hopelessly breaking down, and will never be revived in the old form. The only persons who can prosper now in the country are tenant yeoman and peasant proprietors—tenants with so small a holding that they can work their land themselves with the aid of peasant-owners of the soil. Here we have the remedy suggested; but for this drastic legislation will be required, which is not likely to pass the House of Lords in a hurry.

"Hid in the House of God."

By Rev. G. P. McKAY, Stoke Newington.

"And he was with them hid in the house of God six years; and Athaliah reigned over the land" (2 Chron. xxii. 12).

HE who was hidden in the house of God was Joash, infant son of Ahaziah the late king of Judah, and now the only male survivor of the royal house of David. They who hid him were his dead sire's sister and her husband, Jehoiada, the high priest. Athaliah, who usurped the throne, was mother of the royal infant's father, so now a woman well advanced in life.

This Athaliah is one of the strongest characters, forceful and fierce, in Old Testament history. She was the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel, and, though her mother may be more notorious than she, Athaliah appears to have been her equal—if, indeed, she did not quite outstrip her—in lust of power, in blind devotion to her gods, and in inhuman cruelty.

She first appears upon the scene as wife of Prince Jehoram, son of King Jehoshaphat. Alliance with the heathen house of Jezebel could surely not have pleased Jehoshaphat, "who sought the Lord with all his heart." The young prince must have been of wayward disposition to seek such a bride. Be that as it may, the evil following was just what might have been expected. As Jezebel ruled over Ahab, to his hurt and Israel's sore distress, so Athaliah got the upper hand of Judah's prince. When Jehoshaphat his father died, he, as the firstborn, took the seat of power; then, with speed and cruelty, suggestive of his wife's fierce leading, "he strengthened himself, and slew all his brethren with the sword, and divers also of the princes of Israel."

ATHALIAH AND HER EVIL DEEDS.

After that, the Chronicler records, "He walked in the way of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab: for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord." A temple to Baal appears to have risen in Jerusalem, built after the fashion of the gorgeous pile which Jezebel had erected in Samaria to the same divinity. "Moreover he made high places in the cities of Judah, and caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit fornication, and compelled Judah thereto." Great judgment came upon the nation through this lapse into idolatry; but, by-and-by, after a disastrous reign of eight years, Jehoram, smitten with a most repulsive ailment, died, and left none but his youngest son to take his place.

Athaliah then appears for a brief space as the Queen Dowager. She had seen to it that all the brothers of her husband were put to death at the beginning of his unhappy reign, and the Arabians had slain all his sons, saving the one who now succeeded to the throne. Ruling that young prince, she still might hope to rule the land, and this she most effectually appeared to do, "for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly." Alas, for the son whose mother leads him into wrong! Woe, woe to the nation that has a prince so motherled upon its seat of power! Fortunately for Judah, the reign of this young man was not of long duration. But a brief year elapsed, and then "the destruction of Ahaziah was of God." The appointed agent was the zealous Jehu, whom the Lord raised up to execute "judgment upon the house of Ahab." By his sword was Ahaziah slain, and, with him, there were slain the sons of his departed brothers, so the only heirs of Judah left were his own sons, still in their infancy or childhood. This, with the overthrow at the same time of Israel's king, was manifestly wrought of God, and ought to have given pause to all in high places who were walking wickedly. "But when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah."

But there was more than ambition and fierce inhumanity in the destruction of those royal children. There was the spirit of revenge, and of defiance of the living God. This woman sought to wreak her vengeance on the house to which she had been wedded, for the many sorrows of her widowed state; and, as the follower of another god, to gain a victory over the God of Israel. That God had said, "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before Me." The Lord had made a covenant with David, and had "promised to give a light to him and to his sons for ever." What a revenge for Athaliah, then, and what a triumph for the gods she served, if the light which Jehovah had kindled could be extinguished, and the house with which the covenant had been made could be destroyed!

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD.

Ay, there was much more in the balances at this time than the fortunes of a royal house, or even the welfare of a nation. The truth and honour of Almighty God were here at stake, and the salvation of the race lay in the trembling scales. Had Athaliah's scheme succeeded, all, all would have been lost, and the very God of heaven would have been degraded. Nor Saviour nor Redeemer could the race have had! Through Jacob, the patriarch, Jehovah had declared, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come." Now was the sceptre going into other hands than those of Judah; for Athaliah was not of that tribe, nor even a pure-blooded Israelite!

But most disastrous would have been the issue in relation to the "Seed" which, even in Eden, God had promised would yet bruise the serpent's head. The fulfilment of that promise would have been impossible had Athaliah accomplished all that she designed to do, and which for six long years she thought she had accomplished. This vile idolatress was but a tool in Satan's hands all through, and it was the destruction of the promised "Seed" that he was aiming at. He had made many attempts at this before. The murder of Abel by his brother was the first of these; the seduction of the race, that culminated in the Deluge, was the second. Afterwards, when it was revealed that the promised "Seed" should come through Abraham, attempts were made upon his house. The most conspicuous of these was made in Egypt, when Pharaoh gave that dread command, "Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river."

By the time of the incident before us, it had been made apparent that the promised Seed would be a son of David. Here, then, was a point most critical! Of David's line not one was left beyond the family of Ahaziah; the destruction of that family would make the fulfilment of the word of God impossible; and that was what the devil designed to do through Athaliah! "She arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah!"

THE TRIUMPHING OF THE WICKED.

Our sympathy flows forth to those who in that day kept faithful to the God of heaven. What mighty men of faith they must have been! Against all evidence they trusted Him! On every side of them the "wise and prudent" would affirm that faith in God was now no more than lunacy. If He existed at all, it was quite clear He could not keep his word, nor stem the tide of Baal's might. Why, then, should men continue to confide in Him? And oh, what "trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment," the men of God would have to bear! "Athaliah, that wicked woman," ruled, we may be sure, with rod of iron. She, who "had broken up the house of God," would not be slow to break upon the wheel of persecution those who worshipped Him; so, of a truth, the days were evil, and the lot of pious men was terrible. There must have been abundant grace poured out upon the faithful few, or none would have been found to witness for the truth at all.

But was the Lord of Hosts discomfited? Had He forgotten his word, or was He powerless to maintain it? Surely no! He was at this time neither absent, unobserved, unmindful, nor incompetent. Appearances were against Him; but not less than omniscient and omnipotent was He.

"Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never failing skill,
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will."

A Significant Testimony.

THE following experience was related by a former infidel in one of Rev. E. Payson Hammond's meetings:—

"If I could have one minute of your time I would add a word to what Mr. Hammond has just said. I want to say this, that Jesus Christ has taken me, a confirmed atheist. For twenty-four years I did not believe in a God, in man, or in devil. The church was the last place I would enter, and I had made up my mind for over two months to end my life.

"After two hours' talk to me about Jesus, my life was changed, and inside of ten days I was praying to the unknown God, to a Being I did not believe in before.

"I tell you I wanted peace; I wanted rest. I did not know where I could find it, but the moment I cried out to the unknown God, I found it; and I say to God's glory, if there is one here to-night that does not believe in a God, may God find you on your knees before you go to sleep to-night. He says, 'Lo! this poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and delivered him out of all of his troubles.'"

Our Place of Refuge.

To those who on the Saviour call,
How rich, how good is He!
Whene'er they at his footstool fall,
He will their Helper be.

'Tis good to bow before the throne
Unseen by human eye;
To catch the vision all alone,
As Jesus passes by!

To all He lends a listening ear,
Who in his mercy trust;
With outstretched arms He draweth near,
To raise them from the dust.

He lifts them from their low estate,
And whispers words of cheer;
He bids them thro' the darkness wait,
For lo! the dawn is near!

Above the storm a voice we hear,
The Saviour's voice divine:—
"Fear not! for I am ever near,
And thou shalt still be mine!

"Though 'whelming waters round thee rise,
Yet will I hold thy hand,
Until, before thy raptured eyes,
There shines the Promised Land!

"Though called to pass through wreaths of flame,
Thou shalt receive no harm,
For my protection shalt thou claim,
Whose word ensures a calm!"

Thus with the pilgrim's staff and scrip
The Christian homeward hies,
A song of praise upon his lip,
Hope beaming in his eyes!

Isaac Watts Commemoration

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

A SERIES of celebrations in memory of Dr. Watts were held in his native town of Southampton, on Wednesday of last week. The proceedings began at 2.30, when about 200 friends assembled outside the old gaol, and under the guidance of Mr. W. Dale, F.S.A., visited places of interest connected with Dr. Watts. It was in this gaol that Isaac Watts, the father, was imprisoned for his Nonconformity; and from its barred windows he looked down upon his wife, who sat on the steps, with the baby Isaac in her arms. The company proceeded to Watts' parish church, St. Michael's, and while seated in the nave listened to an address by Mr. Dale.

Susan Watts, a sister, is buried in this church, and a verse, evidently by her brother, is inscribed on the stone. The next point of interest was Watts' birthplace in French Street. The present owner kindly allowed entrance to the old garden, "walled around," where all joined in singing, "Our God, our help in ages past," &c. Some of the party saw the room in which the hero of the day was born.

At four o'clock an out-of-doors demonstration was held in the Watts' Park, near his statue. About 1,000 people assembled; hymns were sung, and two short addresses given by Rev. W. Pierce (Hampstead) and Rev. Stanley Rogers (Liverpool). Mr. John A. Hunt (chairman of the Southampton School Board) presided. An illustrated biographical pamphlet had been prepared by Mr. E. Stainer, with hymns, and a programme of the day's proceedings.

The Above Bar Congregational Church is full of interest. The original chapel was built on a garden belonging to the Watts family, situated just outside the city gates, and was designated, "The Meeting-House Above the Bar." The present edifice, the fourth in succession built on this spot, was reconstructed in 1889. Behind it, and connected with the church, is the famous "Watts Memorial Hall," built in 1875. On the memoral stone it is stated that "the first name on the Baptismal Register is that of Isaac Watts, D.D., 1674-1748, whose father, Isaac Watts, was a deacon of this church for forty-eight years." Six o'clock found the church well filled with young people, to whom a suitable and characteristic address was given by Rev. Stanley Rogers.

Arranged in one of the lecture halls was a most interesting collection of portraits and illustrations, with some of the original copies of Watts' works. A letter written by his father, and the first "Church Book," recording the formation of the church and baptismal register, which runs thus: "1674, Isaac Watts, eldest son of Isaac Watts, born July 17, baptized about September following;" then follow the names of eight other children of the family, bracketted together with this note—"All these by reason of an unsettled estate of the Church att the tyme were not registered till afterwards, soe the p'ticular dayes of their baptisme were not remembered."

The proceedings concluded with a large public meeting in the Above Bar Church. Rev. W. F. Clarkson, B.A. (pastor), presided. Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers, in the course of an address, said: We confess our debt to our fathers who suffered for conscience sake; we are not self-made, but "the sons of sires." Dr. Johnson's criticism of Watts was, "He was a man whom no church would be ashamed to honour. We honour him for all but his Nonconformity." Isaac Watts was great as a preacher, wise and methodical as a teacher, but greater as a hymn-writer.

Rev. W. Pierce gave a clever résumé of Watts' work. He was a little man, with a frail body, but with tremendous force of character, and his great mind triumphed over his bodily weaknesses. When a boy he complained to his father of the hymnology at Above Bar Church. "Give us something better," said his sire; and on the following Sunday was sung his initial hymn, "Behold the glories of the Lamb." The landscape beyond Southampton Water is said to have suggested "Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood."

Missionary Farewells.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND ZENANA MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE autumnal dismissal meeting of the C.E.Z.M.S. was held in the Queen's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. There was a large attendance of friends and supporters of the Society. It was hoped that the Bishop of Calcutta would preside, but his health would not permit, and a letter of regret was read from Dr. Welldon, stating that his medical adviser had forbidden him to return to India for the present, and had urged him to refrain from undertaking public engagements. In his absence the chair was occupied by Rev. H. G. Grey, Principal of Wycliffe Hall. In his opening address, the Chairman dwelt on the need for those contemplating foreign missionary service to weigh the difficulties and count the cost, and uttered a caution against undertaking missionary work without due consideration. He expressed his pleasure that the outlook of the Society was much brighter that in recent years, although they had not yet arrived at a satisfactory position, either in regard to funds or the number of missionaries.

The instructions of the committee to the missionaries were read by the clerical secretary, Rev. G. Tonge. He stated that the total number of under the auspices of the Society, was forty. Of these thirty-one are returning after furlough, and nine are new workers. There are also two Australian ladies, who are being sent forth in connection with the Church Missionary Association of Victoria. Mr. Tonge added that the committee have received from the British Consul an assurance that it is safe for the ladies to return to the Fuh-kien Province, and they are sending forth all who are medically fit, including those who were detained last year, and those who had to be summoned home.

Brief addresses were given by two representative missionaries, Miss Wanton speaking on behalf of India, and Miss F. Codrington for China. The valedictory message of Rev. E. Grose Hodge was a helpful and timely utterance. He explained how the workers might be quite certain of the reality of their commission as missionaries. Two things were essential if they were to claim the strength of that commission—an inward prompting and an outward call. If they had the coincidence of the two might they not then rest on the certainty of the commission? The honour of God and God's family was bound up with that commission, and a sense of that fact should act as an incentive in their work; but, most of all, a realization of the personal presence of Jesus Christ would make them strong in the midst of difficulty, trial, and perplexity.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION.

In connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, a number of ladies are shortly leaving England for India—some to resume their labours after furlough, and others to take their stand for the first time in the foreign field. A meeting was held in Exeter Lower Hall on Tuesday week in order to afford an opportunity for friends to wish the missionaries God-speed, and to assure them of a prayerful interest in their labours.

Sir Charles Douglas Fox presided over a large attendance. He remarked what a wonderful amount of work the Society has accomplished with limited means. In offering a little advice to the missionaries, he reminded them of difficulties which would have to be faced, and gave some practical suggestions for preserving perfect health. It was false economy not to study themselves in this matter; and, on the other hand, it was the duty of those at home to see that the missionaries had all needful provision made for them. He urged them to make friends with the people among whom they lived, by steady, loving, quiet, and continuous visitation.

The missionaries were introduced by Rev. A. R. Cavalier, secretary. They include Dr. Annie Connall, who is returning to the at Lucknow; Miss Brett, who is to take charge of an orphanage in the North-West Provinces; Miss King, returning to Bombay; Miss Powell to Gorakhpur; Nurse Nelson, and Miss Spackman, also bound for Lucknow; Miss Weatherley, returning to Lahore; Miss Kerry, returning to Fyzabad; Miss Howlett, one of the new missionaries, going out to village work in Nigohan; and Miss De Sélincourt. Mr. Cavalier announced that the efforts to make the mission better known in Australia had borne fruit, and that a Melbourne lady had just offered herself, and was going out to India at her own charges as a honorary worker. Several of the missionaries gave addresses, and briefly described the work which they are going to take up. Among these was Miss De Sélincourt, who has passed through the whole course of study at Cambridge, and has had experience in India in connection with the Student Volunteer Missionary Movement, and is about to take charge of the training of women students at the Lady Muir Memorial College, Allahabad. In the course of her remarks she spoke of the need for training the natives for evangelistic work.

The valedictory address was given by Rev. W. Hooper, D.D. The motto of the missionary should be, "Serviceable to the Master." All other aims must be subordinated to this one. The question should always be asked when new efforts are contemplated, "Shall I, in this new position, be more useful to the Master than I have been in the past?" He reminded them that a missionary's duties are simply a Christian's duties specialized, and emphasized many ways in which it is possible to be of service to Christ abroad. Concerning the culture of their own spiritual life, Dr. Hooper gave to the workers some earnest counsel, and offered some timely words on the methods of mission labours which will bear the most fruit.

Method in Preaching.*

By Mr. EUGENE STOCK.

IN touching on the method of preaching, I only desire to dwell on one point; namely, the preacher's treatment of his text-book—the Bible. (1) I am afraid of ignorance of the Bible; and it is the preacher's solemn duty, as "a man with a message," to gather that message from the Bible, and so to familiarize his hearers with the facts and teachings of the Bible that those facts and teachings may of themselves convey the messages needed. I plead that no part of Scripture be omitted.

(2) I plead for expository courses of sermons. Some years ago a young clergyman came to a new parish. He had a heavy debt on the church to clear off, schools to build, everything to organize. But he did not neglect his Bible study, nor the sermons that were the fruit of it. On Sunday evenings he would take a course on the Life of Abraham, or Jacob, or David, or Peter, or on Israel in the Wilderness, or on the Book of Nehemiah. On Thursday evenings he would take an Epistle and go through it verse by verse. He quickly filled the church on Sundays, and the Thursday night lecture was attended by 400 people. A good many of them came to know the Bible pretty well. But, although he by no means ignored critical questions, he was always "a man with a message," and that is the man people will listen to.

(3) If one prominent feature of Holy Scripture is unity in variety, would it not be well, seeing that the critics are so strongly emphasizing the variety just now, for the preachers to lay stress upon the unity? This can be done by what are called "topical" sermons, in which a doctrine or principle, or precept, or promise, is traced through the Bible. It is true that this is sometimes done too fancifully; but that is no reason why it should not be done at all. "I must confess," said Mr. Spurgeon once, speaking of an old-fashioned commentator named Gill, "that Gill finds Christ in the Scriptures where Christ is not; but that is less culpable than refusing to find Him where He is."

Baptist Autumn Assembly.

NOTES AND IMPRESSIONS.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

In connection with the autumn assembly of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the Baptist Missionary Society, of the opening of which we gave an account in our last issue, a large and enthusiastic meeting was held under the auspices of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association. This gathering was presided over by Mr. Ald. Geo. White, M.P., and the principal speaker was Dr. J. Quincy Adams Henry, of New York. The singing of the Fisk Jubilee Singers was greatly appreciated.

STERNNESS WITH LOVE.

The missionary sermon was preached on Tuesday morning by Rev. R. J. Campbell, B.A., Brighton (Dr. Parker having been forbidden by his medical adviser to undertake this duty), at St. George's United Free Church—text, Psa. cxxxviii. 8, "The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me." He said we could not escape from the intellectual and spiritual climate of the times in which we lived. Men of the study, and men of the street, alike felt the pressure of that climate. The present was a time of moral apathy. Men were not in earnest now about anything. They were willing to let things take their course. There was also a weakening of the sense of sin. It seemed to him sometimes that we were more in earnest to comfort and reassure humanity than we were to press home to sinners their responsibility to the Judge of all the earth. Let us never cease to preach the sternness of God as well as his love.

VALEDICTORY MEETING.

A missionary service was held on Tuesday afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. John Marnham, J.P. (Boxmoor), who in his opening remarks appealed to the churches to raise the additional £9,000 or £10,000 needed annually to sustain the existing work. From all parts of the field, he said, there were appeals for more workers, which, through lack of funds, they were unable to comply with.

Farewell was taken of the following missionaries returning to their fields of labour after furlough:—Rev. J. G. and Mrs. Potter, Rev. J. I. and Mrs. Hasler, Rev. T. W. and Mrs. Norledge, to India; Rev. J. S. and Mrs. Whitewright, to China; Rev. G. Cameron, Rev. A. E. Scrivener, Rev. L. and Mrs. Forfeitt, Rev. S. C. Gordon, Rev. W. and Mrs. Millman, to the Congo. In addition to the foregoing, Rev. R. M. and Mrs. McIntosh, returning to India, and Rev. J. C. and Mrs. Wall, returning to Rome, were prevented from being present. Leave was also taken of Revs. G. E. Moore, W. R. Kirby, and A. Mayo, reinforcements for the Congo. All the brethren present who were going out briefly addressed the meeting, while Mrs. Potter sang a Hindustani hymn. Rev. S. Vincent, Plymouth, delivered the valedictory address.

MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

On Tuesday evening a great meeting was presided over by the Right Hon. Lord Overtoun, who expressed his feeling that we ought to offer to the outside unbelieving world more frequent proofs of the unity of the Church. Denominationalism sank out of view as we gathered round the feet of the Master, and considered the mighty aim we all had in view—the bringing of the world to Jesus Christ.

Very interesting addresses were delivered by Rev. W. Carey, of India (a great-grandson of the famous William Carey); Rev. J. S. Whitewright, of China; and Rev. T. Lewis, of Central Africa; and a resolution was adopted expressing thankfulness for recent encouraging additions to the number of converts in India; and for remarkable progress on the Congo, with the prospect, under Rev. George Grenfell's superintendence, of the fulfilment of the original plan of the Congo Mission, viz., the establishment of stations from East to West of the dark Continent; as well as rejoicing in the resumption of the labours of the missionaries in China under circumstances of much hope and promise.

On Wednesday afternoon the Baptist Union sermon was preached by Rev. Alexander Whyte, It was a privilege the delegates greatly enjoyed, of listening to Dr. Whyte in his own church—St. George's United Free.

ŒCUMENICAL SESSION.

The Œcumenical Session, held on Wednesday evening, was a gathering of great interest. Occasion had been taken, as this was the first autumnal assembly of a new century, to invite colonial and foreign unions to send representatives to the gathering at Edinburgh. An address of welcome was delivered by Rev. Dr. Glover (Bristol), who pointed out that, the world over, Baptists were, with the exception of Methodists, the largest Protestant denomination, numbering some five million members, the bulk of whom were in the United States. Referring to South Africa, Dr. Glover said that all our hearts went out to brethren there, English and Dutch alike; we grieved with them in their present trials, yet we had faith in the sovereignty of God, and in the integrity of British motive, and we trusted that the issue of the present struggle would be for the good of Briton, Boer and native alike.

Brief speeches were made by Rev. W. Newton Clarke, D.D., for the United States; Rev. E. M. Keirstead, D.D., for the Maritime Provinces of Canada; Mr. G. J. Dennis, for South Australia; Rev. A. S. Wilson, for Western Australia; Rev. J. Muirhead, for New Zealand; Mr. T. B. King, for South Africa; Rev. A. James, B.A., for Jamaica; Rev. A. Cadôt, for France; Signor Cesano, for Italy; Dr. Bickel, for Germany; Rev. C. Mensing, for Holland; and Rev. J. Byström, M.P., for Sweden.

Every speaker had something of interest to say. The Canadian representatives stated that of the five million inhabitants of Canada, two millions were French Catholics, more Catholic than the Italians. In connection with South Australia Dr. Maclaren mentioned that his own father was the first pastor of the first Baptist church in that colony. Rev. A. S. Wilson told a story of wonderful progress in Western Australia, and pleaded for assistance for extension work. In the backwoods of the colony, he said, children grew into manhood without so much as seeing the face of a Christian minister. The New Zealand Baptists are just celebrating the jubilee of the formation of the first Baptist Church in that colony, and Revs. Chas. Williams and J. G. Greenhough, M.A., are assisting in the celebration.

THE CONDITIONS OF PROGRESS.

On Thursday morning an address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Clifford on "The Place of Baptists in the Progress of the Kingdom of God." Dr. Clifford pointed out that the visible unity of the churches of Christ is vitally associated with the progress of God's Kingdom. The need of the world was "to know Christ, and to be found in Him," and the function of the churches was to supply that need. That was a task demanding the utmost service of each and every church, with its own ideal and methods, its polity and principles, its specific type of Christian character and labour.

Sacerdotalism encroached on the prerogative of Christ. The usurping priest fettered the intellect, imprisoned the soul, crippled the life, debased the home. We might welcome federation, and complete our organization, but we must build up barriers as high as heaven against that Pagan foe of the Saviour—clericalism. Baptists certainly did not object to the most searching inquiry, but welcomed it.

The great closing gathering, on Thursday evening, under the presidency of Mr. G. W. Macalpine, J.P., Accrington, was a fitting conclusion to a magnificent series of meetings. In an address on "Christian Reunion and Denominationalism," Rev. Charles Brown said that reunion was not simply in the air, but in the minds of Christian people. Union would not come in organic or corporate form. God's order was diversity, but a basis would be found in the New Testament terms of "disciples," "believers," "saints," who were to be found to-day in all our varying systems of polity and doctrine. To accomplish unity, we must recognise that there were truths which were of supreme importance, while other matters might be subordinate. For himself, while he held firmly to the Baptist position, he would not shut the door of the church of which he was minister against any who answered to the New Testament designations. If we needed anything beyond our Lord's prayer to urge us to seek for unity of feeling and action in the Church, surely it was to be found in the state of the heathen world and in the spiritual condition of our own country.

Stirring addresses were also delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., on "The Highest Churchmanship;" and by Rev. John Smith, D.D., Edinburgh, on "The Free Church Ideal of Union."

At the missionary breakfast on Friday morning, Mr. Alfred Henry Baynes gave an address, in which he referred to criticism of mission work in the daily press. "It is no wonder that writers who never feel the sinfulness of their own hearts, or the personal need of a Saviour, misunderstand the object and motive of this great enterprise, and misinterpret and misrepresent it. One newspaper says the novelty of missionary work has died out; we should not waste treasure and life in so Utopian an enterprise. What," he asked, "has novelty to do with the plain command of Christ? and is novelty a factor in all that is noble and best?" He pleaded for greater enthusiasm, as men are offering for work, and cannot be sent for want of money.

An Aged Christian's Appeal.

CHRISTIAN, are you and I levelling ourselves up to the mind of Christ in all humbleness of mind and heart confession? Or are we levelling Christ down to our low standard, and is our self-satisfaction rather increasing now?

Human nature always levels Christ down; Holy Ghost light always levels Christ higher and higher, and human nature lower and lower.

The heart of the true child of God can in calm, prayerful moments ascend very high, and Holy Ghost power gives to us these very, very high spiritual perceptions of Christ's holiness, perfection, and love in the Atonement.

But the flesh and our own minds (minds are only powerful engines worked by the heart of man) never, never fly; they love the earth; its magnetic influence is most powerful. The mind of the flesh is enmity against God.

An unsaved divinity scholar never lets his idea of Christ place Christ beside God. Christ's high morality, his noble life, is his Christian maximum; if he is compelled to call Christ divine, then he says, "all men have some divinity of character." He levels up man to keep Christ down.

To name the blood of Christ as our only "life" is treason—treason in the eye of both Socinian, Ritualist, and mere moralist, because it lifts Christ quite out of reach, and at the same time it lays men down at the foot of the cross, and gives to the blood all the merit.

Christian Evidence Brigade.—In connection with Dr. Barnardo's "Edinburgh Castle" mission, at Limehouse, E., a Christian Evidence Brigade is doing work in combating infidelity. In the course of an interesting review of the operations recently issued, Mr. C. Baker, the leader of the Brigade, says:—"In London the dissemination of infidel ideas of the cruder sort is carried out by an organized society throughout the summer months from some twenty-five open-air platforms. It agents jeer at Christian belief; refer to everything we hold sacred with a biting scorn that cuts deep into the hearts of the unprotected youth around. The Bible and Christianity need no bolstering; they are their own best defence. But the young and uneducated need protection from travesties of sacred facts." Operations are maintained in the open air by a number of speakers, and helpful literature is distributed.

Other Lands.

China and the Gospel.*

OUR POLICY FOR THE FUTURE.

By Rev. ARTHUR E. CLAXTON, L.M.S.

THE first century of Protestant Missions to China has witnessed an abundant entry into the once sealed land.

When we think of the solitary Robert Morrison, in 1807, not allowed to preach, and then of the Missionary Directory, published at the close of 1899, containing the names of over 2,000 missionaries in China, we can thank God, and take courage. Missionaries are now in all the provinces of that great Empire. That they have been able to gather a multitude of believers numbering 100,000 is remarkable; and that, in these few tens of years, they should have so leavened the whole lump of the Chinese nation as to cause the Scribes and Pharisees and rulers, trembling because their gains and monopoly of privilege are threatened, to cry again: "Crucify Him, crucify Him; but release unto us this Barabbas"—these are facts which should make us shout with enthusiastic fervour: "Praise the Lord, for He hath done great things whereof we are glad. This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

THE LESSON OF THE PAST.

We ask, What should be the Church's programme in the days to come? Shall we take fright at the difficulties, and, like craven cowards, betake ourselves to safer places? Shall we let our fluent and sometimes flippant critics, ignorant of our actual work, and incapable of understanding our motives, close the door which it has cost so much to open? Shall we heed the opposition of the cynical worldling who would have us let the Chinese remain in the darkness, smoking away soul and body with the accursed opium pipe, lest the slumbering giant should awake and prove a successful rival for the commerce of the world? Our answer is an emphatic and unanimous NEVER. The souls of the Chinese are precious in the sight of the Lord. They were precious to us before we went to them with the Gospel. After we had been first spurned and buffetted, and then welcomed with open arms, have they ceased to be precious?

What, then, do we intend and what do we claim (for our voice should be heard and our cause recognized and considered in the new arrangements that are to be made)? Our claim must be a Christ-like one. We have the new commandment now in place of the old law of a life for a life. It is for us to love our enemies, and to pray for them that persecute.

TO HIM THAT HEARETH.

Our claim is for an undiminished opportunity, that we may be free to travel, to reside, and to preach the Gospel wherever we can persuade the Chinese to receive us. This is not much, but, if it can be securely guaranteed, it is sufficient. I do not mind the scowling faces of a Chinese crowd on a first or second visit to a new place. I do not mind the mud and stones and the unpolite epithets which the pioneer missionary is sure to meet at first. It does not take long for a Protestant Evangelical missionary, by God's help, to find a few friends, and to start new work. My experience is that, in the course of a few months, hostility and prejudice can be lived down; and, in the course of a few years, a missionary can be surrounded by a band of earnest and noble native helpers, whose efficient co-operation soon leads to an accumulation of many inquirers, with whose claims for instruction a missionary is hard put to it to find time and strength to deal satisfactorily.

During the last few years God has heard my prayers, and blessed my efforts in starting two new stations in West China. The process has been the same in both cases—suspicion at first, developing into more or less violent opposition; a gradual change round to friendliness; a large patronage of our preaching hall, dispensary, and school; and, ere long, baptism of the more promising inquirers, who bravely testify for the Lord before their neighbours and countrymen.

PROTESTANTS AND ROMANISTS.

We should definitely and unanimously claim that no favour be shown to any one section of the Church of Christ; but that, as Protestant missionaries, our undiminished opportunity shall be equal for all. It has been asserted that the Chinese do not and cannot discriminate between Protestant and Romish missionaries; but I am able to say that there is a widespread disposition to welcome the Protestant missionary, in marked contrast to thee qually widespread desire to get rid of the Romanist.

In 1895 there was a violent outbreak of fanatical hostility to foreigners in the western province of Sze-chuan, when Protestant and Romanist alike were driven out of all cities beyond the treaty-port of Chung King. Protestant missionaries in that province had not then had time to make a very distinct impression upon the seventy millions of population.

More strenuous effort followed, as is usual after persecution. When, in 1898, the young Emperor, Kwang Hsu, issued his famous reforming edicts, especially those relating to the founding of schools and colleges for the spread of Western knowledge, Chinese students flocked to Protestant missionaries, begging to be received into science classes. For the first time in history Protestant missionaries were at a premium among well-to-do and educated Chinese. Not only did tract societies circulate an unprecedented number of well-written tracts, but the Christian Literature Society published and circulated translations of many Western books, and these were pirated by enterprising Chinese printers.

Hence, when another violent outbreak occurred in West China in 1898, tens of thousands of Romanists were driven out of their homes; but only one Protestant Mission outstation suffered, though there were many within the area of the disturbances. It was explained that, in this solitary case, the leader of the mob had misunderstood instructions.

OFFICIAL STATUS RENOUNCED.

In 1899, the claim of French Romanist bishops and priests to have equal official status with Chinese governors and prefects was granted by the Pekin Government. But the prevailing conviction of Protestant missionaries is that, for them to accept such a status, would be a very serious error; and already the fruit of this renunciation is apparent among the intelligent section of the Chinese people, in a mitigation of that hostile suspicion of our aims which operates so largely against our more rapid success. Indeed, we should be rendering a service to the Romish cause if we insisted on the repeal of the mischievous concession of official status. The voice of Protestant Christendom, therefore, should be unanimous and clear, demanding that our undiminished opportunity to preach the Gospel in China should be an equal opportunity for all.

There is a wonderful and substantial unity among the Evangelical missions in China; but there is still room for improvement in this respect both at home and abroad. It is not sufficient that we refrain from pulling in opposite directions, though that is much; but it is highly desirable that we have positively harmonious co-operation, while still retaining our individuality and independence.

CLOSING UP THE RANKS.

The disposition to do this in the mission field is evidenced by the large and helpful conferences which have been held in so many centres in China. Early in 1899, in a conference at Chungking, in the far west of the empire, seventy missionaries, representing ten societies, met together to discuss plans for increased efficiency in work and for closer co-operation with a view to speedier covering of ground. Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, Bible-Christians, and others thus manifested unity in the presence of the common enemy of light and truth. If this spirit can be maintained and increased at home as well as in the far mission fields we shall achieve a much larger success and receive a much more abundant blessing in the new era of which the present upheaval is the inauguration.

To borrow an apt expression from a certain newspaper, "We are at the commencement, not merely of a fresh chapter, but of a new volume, when the pen of fate is poised over the open page. What shall be written?" It is for God's people to say. Shall we write upon our banner the word retreat or the word ADVANCE? Let us give a clear pronouncement that we will redouble our efforts.

* Notes of an Address.

Rabbi Lichtenstein.

THE Council for Rabbi Lichtenstein has been enabled for ten years to care for the support of this well-known servant of God, during which time he has been enabled to do a quiet but important work. As a rabbi who was in office for nearly forty years, and who still lives as a Hebrew among Hebrews, he has borne an influential personal testimony of Christ, and has aided other agencies for the evangelization of the scattered people by putting within their reach literature suitable for the Jews.

Rabbi Lichtenstein has written altogether ten pamphlets in which the claims of the Saviour are set forth from an entirely Jewish point of view. Most of them have been translated into several languages, and Jews, especially in Germany, Austria, and Hungary, who have never come into contact with any mission or missionary, have had their attention powerfully directed to the great Christ-question through the writings of this aged master in Israel.

During a recent visit which Rev. D. Baron paid to Budapest he found the aged Rabbi greatly elated by the fact that he had that morning given away to a Jew the thousandth New Testament, and that these were either given or sent by post to Jews, by their own special request, desire having been awakened in their hearts to become acquainted with this blessed book through the reading of Rabbi Lichtenstein's writings.

Financially, the Council is at present in a difficult position, and there is great need for more practical help. The sum required for the support of Rabbi Lichtenstein, and the circulation of his pamphlets, is about £250 a year. Several generous friends have passed away, and there is need for others to take their place.

Southern Morocco Mission.

THE annual meeting of the Southern Morocco Mission was held in the Masonic Hall, West Regent Street, Glasgow, on Thursday last. The proceedings were in part valedictory, there being present five missionaries, male and female—now on the eve of returning—who have been home on furlough; besides two others who are going out for the first time. The chair was occupied by the Right Hon. Lord Overtoun, who, dealing with the difficulties encountered in mission work, alluded to the fact that the hardest fields of to-day were those where the Theistic element abounds, as in the case of Mohammedan countries. Mr. John Galloway, of Kilmeny, asked for prayer and sympathy on behalf of the missionaries, in view of the difficulties with which they are confronted; while Mr. John Anderson, under whose guidance the Mission took shape, stated that since the commencement of the work in 1888 fully £18,000 has been received for its support.

Mr. C. Naiern, one of the returning missionaries, mentioned that 1,000 patients a month visit the mission station at Marakkesh for medicine and advice, and to all the Gospel is preached; and Mrs. Nairn spoke of women whom she had met in the course of visitation who had never been outside the city, and had never seen a blade of grass growing. Each of the outgoing missionaries having spoken a brief word, Mr. Hugh Paton, formerly connected with the Mission, gave a stirring closing address. J. C.

From Prague to Russia.

ONE sunny morning we left the land of Huss, and in the evening found ourselves in a room, bearing the name of the Bohemian reformer. With us arrived Dr. Clark, with his valuable helper, Mr. Adlof, who is a Tchek.

Among the 1,200 who attended this year's Conference at Blankenburg, were brethren and sisters from Sweden, Norway, Holland, Russia, England, America, &c., all recognizing a higher citizenship than that of a particular country or nation. The motto of the Evangelical Alliance, "We are One Body in Christ," was particularly emphasized in the early morning meetings, when a chain of loving prayer was formed around the globe, comprising within its circle all races, tongues, and nations.

We met here with an Armenian brother, Sembat Bagdasarians, who, in speaking of his past, previous to his conversion, does not give himself a very good character.

He was the son of a well-to-do tailor at Tiflis, and was engaged in a business of his own, when in 1881 he received a tract from a Stundist, leading him to read others, and to attend some of the Stundist meetings. The assurance of his own salvation filled him with a burning desire to let his testimony be heard in the streets and market-places of his own native town. It was not long before the Russian police came upon his track, making it desirable for him to seek refuge with friends beyond the frontier.

Through Pastor Armichanjanz, the translator of the Bible into Armenian and Tartar, Sembat obtained admission to the Methodist Mission School (Predigerschule) in Frankfurt-on-Maine, where he remained for three years. In 1885 he returned to his homeland to work among the Russian Stundists. He traded with books while seeking opportunities to preach the Gospel; but even then he was, at times, exposed to great danger.

A PRISONER OF CHRIST.

In 1891 the police broke into a prayer meeting, dispersed it, and confiscated all the books and papers that could be found. The evangelist prepared to flee, but before he had time to do so, he was taken prisoner in his own house early one morning, and banished to Achalkali, on the Siberian frontier, where the climate is very rough and cold. His family joined him a few months later, after passing through untold hardships on the journey, which undermined the last bit of strength of his delicate wife. Eight months after their arrival the desolate husband and children stood by the grave of mother and infant child. Many deeds of kindness, some of them under the cover of the night, had been shown by the inhabitants to the suffering exile, which the bereaved ones never forgot. At the request of his dying wife, he married without delay a friend who had been nursing her—a step which the circumstances rendered urgently necessary.

The day of the Coronation of Nicholas II. came; but instead of being included, as the banished man had had reason to hope, in the amnesty which the Czar on this occasion granted to a number of prisoners, he was startled by the news of

A PROLONGED EXILE.

Three more years added to five. What was to become of his children? He could not endure it any longer. He would flee. With the help of some friends he was able to reach Tiflis, Batoum, Toworossisk, Rostow, and at last Charkow, where he met with his wife and children. The brethren there, however, insisted upon his leaving his family behind, and continuing his escape, in company with another refugee and his brother. They went to Odessa, where they were able to obtain passports. The rest seemed easy. Yet it was only after some more difficulties, and intense anxiety, that the reunion with his own could be effected on the free soil of Roumania. Mr. Bagdasarians has since then been a more or less wandering evangelist. We suppose him to be now in England.

Before leaving with Dr. Baedeker for his prison trip to Russia, we spent three days in Berlin. To Christians visiting that city we would recommend the Hospiz St. Michael, Wilhelmstr., 33, where pleasant rooms and good fare can be had at moderate prices. The Hospiz, as we were informed by its Lady Superintendent, Frau von Below Serpenten, owes its existence to Count Pückler, who in 1890 rented the house from the Y.M.C.A. It is in connection with St. Michael's Society, having for its aim the evangelization of the working classes of Berlin. We were glad of making acquaintance with Herr von Ziegler, the late and much-valued secretary of the Vienna Y.M.C.A., and also with Herr von Rothkirch, who is the secretary of the Berlin Y.M.C.A. Dr. Baedeker and Mr. Morgan had a nice time at the Association in giving their testimony to the young men on Monday evening. They also had a pleasant chat with Mr. Morrison, of the Bible Society.

There is said to be a movement in Germany similar to that of the "Los von Rom" in Austria. There the Government is in its favour. In Mecklenburg-Schwerin the Evangelicals make, in some places, a house-to-house visitation, winning friends to the Gospel. The Berlin City Mission—a creation of Herr Stoecker, the much praised and much blamed anti-Semite, organized on a broad base—is in full vigour, continuing its work among the rapidly-increasing masses of the German capital. We went to his church, but found that he was away for his holidays. In his stead Pastor Evers preached, also in connection with the City Mission, giving utterance to a faithful Gospel message. One of his illustrations, as to the quietude of God's children, was the following:—"A hurricane raged once over a mountain-village, and the people rushed out of their houses in search of a place of safety, not knowing where to find it. In passing, some of them noticed a poor old woman sitting peacefully in the front of her humble hut, and murmuring something to herself. 'How can you sit here?' they cried. 'Don't you know that the roof may fall upon your head at any moment?' 'Oh, I praise God,' said she, 'that I have a Redeemer who can shake up the world as He does.'"

ENTERING RUSSIA.

Our parting day coming, we booked for Russia, in company of a Christian brother and sister who had attended the Blankenburg Conference, and were now on their way home. We pass swiftly through Germany, reaching at midnight the Austrian frontier. After two hours of waiting we continue our journey via Cracow and Lemberg. The day is grey, and the country flat and poor. At ten o'clock p.m. we arrive at Woloczyska in pouring rain. The wind is high and cold, but we are kept warm by the proceedings that follow. "Have your passports ready," says our travelling companion. We give it up before passing into the Customs Hall, where confusion seems to reign. Our hand-baggage is opened and every bit of print seized. After a little while, the books are returned. With several CHRISTIANS, our Bible notes, and other papers, in hand, the official is endeavouring to explain matters to us. We shake our heads at the strange sounds. He raises his voice, but the louder he speaks, the more we shake our heads, until our German friend comes to our rescue. "If you are willing to pay 50 kop., your printed matter will be sent to the office of the censor at Odessa," he says. By his advice, we prefer sacrificing our property. At the other end of the hall a motley crowd gathers around an official, who, behind a counter, is returning the passports. Our name being one of the last ones, we encounter no difficulties in the revision of our registered luggage; and now, by means of our passports and small tickets to show that our hand-bags had been duly examined, we pass into the waiting-room which is at the same time the restaurant. Bright, shining samovars greet our eyes and we enjoy the amber-coloured beverage, called czaj (tea). A formidable amount of luggage has been heaped up at the entrance to the platform, and as soon as the door opens, there is a scramble and a shouting, passengers calling out for the number of their "najsilstchiks" (porters), each trying to squeeze through first. We climb with others over the luggage barrier, and, half dazed, follow the stream. Somebody good-naturedly pushes us into a compartment. It is our German friend who has kept all the time a sharp eye upon us. "But where are our bags?" we ask, bewildered. "No fear," is his quiet reply. In a short while, indeed, all is settled, and as our train passes out of the station we begin to realise that we have crossed the threshold of Russia. W. M.

From the New Hebrides.

IN a recent letter, dated Tanna, July 3, Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, New Hebrides, writes:—

We are now assembled here in happy gathering for Synod. Cheering accounts have come in from nearly all our stations. There have been no deaths in the Mission families this year, and, on the whole, the health of the members of the Mission has been very good.

Personally, I am glad to report that I have been very well of late, and have given much of my physical strength to road making. I have commenced a cart road, intended to go from one end of the island to the other—about six miles. This will, when finished, be a great help to me in carrying on my meetings, and will be a great boon to the natives, who at present are carrying their produce on head or back.

Whilst the day of the "first love" is now long since past, and many of my first "Christians" have gone threadbare again, I have, of late, had good reason for feeling cheered by seeing several giving indication of real life springing up.

For the last few months we have had a magnificent volcano springing up in the sea some three miles from Tongoa. It was such a sight as few have witnessed, and vividly impressed us with our own littleness and the greatness of the powers that surround us. It stopped some days ago, and has how left a new island on our earth, about three-quarters of a mile or a mile in length. Its name is Koai. So may we soon see the fire and power of God working among the people in Tongoa, and exhibiting results as far beyond the glory and power of man!

Books for the Blind of India.

AS I get many letters from workers asking for information about our literature for the blind in India, I shall be grateful if you will allow me to state that the system we use in our school is the Shirreff-Braille; that is to say, it is the bonâ-fide Braille system, adapted to Urdú by Mrs. Shirreff.

It is remarkable for simplicity, adheres as closely to the English Braille alphabet as possible, and can be adapted to any of the purely Sanskritic-derived languages of North India. Practically this adaptation has been done, in the case of Gurmakhi (Panjábi), Hindi, Bengali, Maráthi, Gujeráti, and Sindhi. I wish friends interested in the blind of India to know that it is as easy as possible to provide books for the blind in any of these languages by means of the Shirreff-Braille system. Anyone conversant with one of these languages can have our sketched-out alphabet for that language, and improve upon it, if he thinks well, in certain small details; but he should first be sure that he understands Braille methods.

Those working in Urdú may be glad to know that the British and Foreign Blind Association is sending me out some Primers and First Books in the Shireff-Urdú Braille.

Not being able to get first-class paper in India, we have to import the Manilla paper from England at a considerable outlay. If anyone can tell me where to get equally good paper in India, I shall be grateful.

The Shirreff-Braille system can be adapted to Arabic and Persian, also to Kashmirí and Pashtu. I have no doubt that it would cover Burmese and the South Indian languages also.

Coloured British Subjects.

Dr. J. E. LONDON, Demerara.

AMONG delegates from abroad to the meetings of the Congregational Union, a prominent figure is that of Dr. J. E. London, who represents the British Guiana Union. The story he has to tell is one of great encouragement in the work of the Lord, in a field presenting great difficulties. A native of Berbice, brought up and educated at New Amsterdam, his whole concern is for the welfare of the coloured race to which he belongs. He enjoyed the great privilege of Christian nurture and home-training, and the crowning satisfaction of the retrospect is that through the pious example and teaching of his parents, supported by the earnest Gospel preaching of Rev. John Dalgleish, he was converted about the age of sixteen.

Choosing at an early period to follow the teaching profession, he was soon led to set his thoughts on the Christian ministry, and owed his classical and theological training to his pastor, Mr. Dalgleish, with other two agents of the London Missionary Society, Rev. James Scott, and Rev. Charles Rattray. From 1859 onward, concurrently with his training, he found outlet for much evangelistic work at Brunswick, on the Berbice River, Germania and Lonsdale. From 1862 to 1868 he laboured at Ebenezer and Freedom Chapels, on the west coast of Demerara, and was recognized as minister's assistant there, as well as at New Amsterdam, and on the Upper Berbice River.

Ordained at New Amsterdam in 1870, to the pastorate of Brunswick Chapel, he also undertook the duties of superintendent of the missions to the aboriginal peoples and mixed races at Maria Henrietta, St. Lust, and Calcunni. Coming to England on furlough in 1877, Mr. London was deeply impressed with the great need for medical work among his countrymen. He remained till 1882 as a student at King's College, and when he returned early in 1884 it was with several diplomas, including those of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons. His usefulness was in this way greatly increased, and, in addition to the help rendered in individual cases, he was able to give much instruction and help to nurses in preparing themselves for future usefulness.

On returning to the colony he devoted his attention to the remote districts, chiefly in the neighbourhoods of the Berbice, Demerara, and Essequibo Rivers, preaching, administering medicine, and performing surgical operations among all kinds of people. Now Dr. London has his residence at Georgetown; and, while engaged in private practice, opens his doors every Wednesday to the poor of the town, in special cases giving medicine free, as well as advice and attendance. Over the week-ends he is an itinerant medical missionary, conducting services at stations where no minister is available.

Throughout the colony the long-continued labours of the London Missionary Society have resulted in the establishment of Congregational churches, of which some are not only self-supporting, but are able to extend a helping hand to weaker causes. The Society still takes a keen and practical interest in the work, aiding it in many ways. Among the names which stand out in bold relief from the story of bygone years are John Wray, John Smith ("the Demerara martyr"), Ebenezer Davies, Thomas Henderson, Edwin Angell Wallbridge, and Joseph Ketley, who with many more missionary fathers endured bitter persecution, but went on in faith to sow the good seed of the Kingdom; "and the seed has taken root, grown in the true spiritual soil, and now the fields are white unto the harvest."

Other denominations are also actively at work in the colony in a true spirit of brotherly co-operation. One of the great troubles has been the decline of the sugar industry, which has driven population almost entirely away from districts formerly populous and flourishing. The people have, however, been carefully followed; and Dr. London's testimony is that town and country congregations alike have large bodies of members and adherents attached to them. They are doing much, but still there is room. Pastorates in various localities are vacant, and there are districts more thinly populated where the natives have none to tell them the Good News.

A source of great encouragement to the native workers has been the addition to their number during the last year of Rev. H. J. Shirley, formerly minister of Fulham Congregational Church. His own central congregation at New Amsterdam is growing rapidly month by month; and, in addition, he is making his presence felt in many ways. The disabilities of the coloured race aroused his sympathy at the very outset, and his influence has already told in the removal of a number of these. The impossibility of finding outlet for his opinions through the public Press has laid on Mr. Shirley the necessity of starting a bi-weekly paper on his own account, and great hopes are entertained by the friends of the coloured people of its influence as a moral and spiritual force.

The prospects of British Guiana, from a business point of view, are brightening, other products gradually taking the place of sugar; and the field for Christian effort is also most promising. A deep interest in spiritual things is manifest among the people. The harvest truly is great; the call is for labourers to go in and possess the land.

Realities.*

Facts are still facts! They do not alter when
The questioning and doubtful minds of men
Refuse so to accept them. Truth likewise
Is always Truth—though our hearts recognise
It not as such—and it is well to know
That Right is what God made it long ago,
And not a fancy of our passing mood.
We judge between life's evil and its good
Not by what is but by what seems to be,
And only see as little children see
Whose dreams are goals to which their steps they bend:
God seeing farther—even to the end—
And understanding all things, as we pray
For that which seems our highest good to-day,
Proves his great love—denies our blind request,
And gives us only what is truly best.

Wanted—Men and Women.

The following statement accompanies an urgent appeal by Rev. F. Coillard for twelve additional workers:—

PEOPLE ask us, "How can you, sitting comfortably at home, send men and women to their deaths?" The reply is, "We cannot, we dare not, take such a responsibility." Long ago the idea was abandoned of inviting particular candidates to go to the mission field. Our Lord in his wisdom and tenderness takes upon Himself the task of recruiting. But those whose physical and mental capacities (or incapacities) prevent their going to the field are not debarred thereby from encouraging others to go. True, the harvest is great and the labourers are few. But as regards individual vocations it is not for us to create them. "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the Harvest that He may send forth labourers into his harvest." An unseen Power puts it into the hearts of one and another to carry his message to the heathen. As the Editor of the Journal des Missions says, in an article "On our Recent Losses":

Is not this intervention of God Himself, in a question which at the present moment is distressing our Churches, of a nature to inspire us with confidence and calm? And has not the office exercised here by the Head of the Church the effect of marking out more rigidly, in their respective limits and relative importance, the offices of man—whether the missionary, the Church at home, or the committee?

The part of the missionaries is to make these needs known. Our blessed Saviour, Himself the first of soul-winners, first uttered this momentous word, and every active worker since has the right to re-echo the cry, "The harvest is great and the labourers are few."

The part of the Church is to spread these letters before the Lord of Harvest, and pray Him to send out labourers into his harvest. This prayer will be answered; it is being answered, volunteers are offering themselves.

Here comes in the work of the committee: in dependence upon the Holy Spirit, to encourage and equip the fit, to prevent the despatch of the manifestly unfit, and to point out to the latter class that, even if debarred by health or other causes from direct contact with the heathen world, there are ways in which they may still help the cause of missions, and that of the Barotsi in particular.

Particulars regarding the work in Barotsiland may be found in News from Barotsiland (1s. per annum. Miss C. W. Mackintosh, Harley House, Bow, E.)

"Not Having a Shepherd."

WE have been seventeen days on a journey from Chongking to Kuei-chau, on our way to Yunnan-Fu, and all along the way we did not come to one place, until we reached our destination, where the Gospel was preached. Hamlets and villages innumerable, towns and cities, too, were passed, with their poor, miserable, opium-smoking residents, but no place where they could hear of the God who loved them, or the Saviour who had died, and who could save and bless. And this is one of the most highly-famed public roads in this province of Kuei-chau.

Occasionally the voice of a missionary is heard as he passes from one of these cities to the other; but in many parts of this province, and even more in the adjoining province of Yunnan, very large districts are still practically untouched by the Gospel message. Surely the Lord would have his people obey his command to pray the Lord of the harvest that He would send labourers into his harvest, natives or foreigners, just as He may please.

We were thankful to find how wondrously the Lord had answered prayer. As far as we could judge from the conduct of the people, and their respect and kindness, we had no evidence of any unkindly feeling towards us as foreigners.

A Consecrated Business Life.

THE LATE MR. MARTIN HOPE SUTTON.

THE obituary notice, in last week's issue, of Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, of Reading, called the attention of our readers to the close of a long and notable career. Born in 1815, he grew up in the years in which Europe and England were settling down to cultivate the arts of peace after a long period of war and tumult. From his earliest years the boy gave evidence of those devout and practical qualities of mind which have resulted in a life lived to the glory of God, and in promoting the good of his fellow-men, bodily and spiritually. The family ideal for him was a professional career, but his tastes clearly pointed out his sphere in business life, and even the nature of the business was never in any doubt.

His favourite studies were botanical, and he had more pleasure in experimenting with different varieties of seeds than in the recreations which would have been thought more suited to his youthful years. Even special holidays were spent in such walking tours as could be planned for the widening of his knowledge along these lines. By-and-by, he was able to go further afield by the use of railways and other conveyances, and was not content till he had made himself conversant with the chief private and public gardens of his own country and on the continent. At the age of twenty-two, Martin induced his father to add a department for flower and vegetable seeds to the family business of corn factor and miller; and the firm became John Sutton & Son, being six years later changed to John Sutton & Sons through the addition of Martin's brother Alfred.

The disastrous Irish famine of 1847 turned the thoughts of the elder brother in a new direction. Alfred took over that branch of the business connected with ornamental gardening, and Martin Hope was able on a large scale to show that his experiments in cultivating, adapting, and selecting vegetables and food plants were capable of being turned to account in the service of humanity. Public men discovered the value of his suggestions, and the substitutes he suggested for the devastated potato crop were adopted by the Government with the most beneficent and satisfactory results.

The development of the post-office and the railway system placed within the reach of the keen-sighted partners practically unlimited openings for extension, of which they were not slow to take advantage; and, step by step, the name of the firm became known over the length and breadth of the land.

In 1861, Mr. Sutton contributed to the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England an article on Permanent Pastures, which was reprinted by request, and has since passed through many editions. It was afterwards incorporated in the larger work, "Permanent and Temporary Pastures," written by his eldest son, Mr. Martin John Sutton. Several editions of this book have also been called for, and it has become almost as well-known in some of the colonies as in England. Efforts for the improvement of food plants by hybridization and selection were never relaxed, and almost all the favourite roots now used in British agriculture are the direct or indirect results of his labour.

Close application to business did not in this case mean the exclusion of higher interests. At one time he wished to devote his life to foreign mission work, but was persuaded that for him the path of duty lay rather in business. He carried the same spirit which would have actuated him in mission work into commercial and private life. His testimony to the faithfulness and grace of God was borne daily before his family, his employés, and his fellow-townsmen; and in each of these directions it has borne much fruit. Only the Great Day will declare all the good that has been done by his words and example to promote the interests of the kingdom of God.

As an earnest Evangelical Churchman, he took a deep personal interest in the affairs of the Church Missionary Society, the Church Pastoral Aid Society, Irish Church Missions, and kindred institutions. But his sympathies were wider than any church bounds, and went out to every effort for the succouring of the helpless, or the bringing back of wanderers to God. He took a practical interest in the British and Foreign Bible Society and the London City Mission, and in the latter case he stood in the breach more than once when special effort was necessary for the succour of "run-down" workers, and the furtherance of the great object. Alongside these it is natural to find that the Evangelization Society and the Open-Air Mission also claimed successfully a share of his interest and support, feeling, as he did, the need for a simple going out to the people with the Gospel message after the Saviour's own example.

THE LATE MR SUTTON.

From Photograph by Mr. Wm. Salmon, London Street, Reading.

In "Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe," by his wife (Morgan & Scott), warm testimony is borne to the support received from Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, among others who were not ashamed to be identified with the work of the Lord at a time when open-air testimony was resented by the populace. The occasion was Reading Races in 1855, and the effect of the preaching of the Word, accompanied by the distribution of Gospel literature, is thus described:—

"Flour, carefully wrapped in small paper bags, with dirt, &c., was thrown, till the square looked as if snow had been falling. Our beloved and now aged brother, Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, a disciple indeed, rescued Mr. Radcliffe in a wounded condition, conveyed him to a doctor, and then home to his own house, where he took care of him."

Sunday-school teaching, continued during a long period of years, was to Mr. Sutton a work of great joy and profit; and thoroughness in it led to his being also a pioneer and enthusiast in Ragged-School work. With his business helpers ever before him, it was natural that he should recognize the importance of the Y.M.C.A. Only one year after the formation of the London Association, he formed one at Reading, of which he remained president till his death.

Until May last he was in his accustomed good health, taking an interest in all meetings and other efforts for the advancement of evangelical religion and philanthropy. The hot weather of the summer tried him a good deal, but he still busied himself, with the help of his private secretary, in attending to the great correspondence which he carried on with Christian workers in all parts of the kingdom and abroad. Early in September he found even this too great a tax upon his strength, which had been much impaired by constant neuralgic pains, seriously interfering with his sleep. The doctors still assured the family that there was no cause for anxiety, and their opinion was fully confirmed by Sir William Broadbent, who paid him a visit a fortnight before he died. However, Mr. Sutton himself was fully persuaded that the time of his departure was at hand, and he insisted upon making every preparation for that event, which took place at 3 p.m. on Friday, October 4.

Even the night before, his doctors had told the family that his body was so perfectly healthy in every respect, that there was no physical reason why he should not be spared another five years, but on the Friday morning, before getting up, he sent for the members of his family, who were near at hand, to tell them that he believed that in a few days, at least, he would be taken, and he wished once more to make a formal declaration to them as to the faith in which he died, and his perfect happiness in the prospect of departure. He asked them to tell everybody that he was trusting alone in the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour, and that the truth that was his greatest comfort and reliance was, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." He seemed particularly happy and cheerful, and shortly afterwards proceeded to dress with the help of his servant. He then walked across into another room, sat down in a chair, and expired without a sigh or symptom of the slightest pain. He was called up higher without the ordinary experience of bodily decay; "he was not, for God took him."

This was a life full of simple faith in God, and of many activities for the purpose of doing his will. His sanctified common sense made him a much-sought and trusted adviser. His knowledge of Scripture was altogether remarkable. Again and again he pushed from him opportunities of acquiring wealth, actuated, as few men have been, by a fear that he might become wealthy. Mr. Sutton died full of years, but to the last he preserved that charm which drew young people round him with confidence and love. The great company which gathered at his funeral was an eloquent testimony to his catholic spirit and to that true unity which over-rides all Christian distinctions and divisions.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, October 20. Galatians i.

THE Apostle was always very clear about his personal and direct call to the Apostleship. He felt that he had been commissioned by that same voice which summoned the twelve from their lowly toils, to be first disciples, and then apostles. See how he reiterates his favourite affirmation here (verses 2, 12, 15). He had not even sought fellowship with the rest of the Apostolate, or with the mother-Church at Jerusalem (19). The river of his teaching was fed directly from the throne of God and of the Lamb.

This Epistle especially elaborates the fourth verse. It teaches us that the death of the Lord Jesus has delivered us, not only from the curse and penalty of sin (iii. 13), but from the power of the present evil age, which is self-will, that we might live according to the will of our God and Father (4). This is the complete Gospel, which Paul proclaimed; and anything less than this falls short of the Divine plan of human redemption. You have known the Cross as delivering you from the just punishment of your sin; do you now realize that it is standing between you and your past, you and yourself?

When, like Paul, we are suddenly awakened to realize that the Lord Jesus has really entered our nature in the moment of regeneration, and is actually immanent and indwelling; when the veil of our most secret shrine is rent in twain, and we discover that Jesus is within—ah, we cannot refrain from preaching Him then, and we confer not with flesh and blood (15, 16)!

MONDAY, October 21. Galatians ii.

The great fight of Paul's life was over circumcision, the initial rite of Judaism. His career would have been comparatively calm if he had once admitted that Christianity was a sect of Judaism, and that men must enter it by first becoming proselytes of the Law. From first to last he insisted that the Gentiles might come directly to Jesus Christ for salvation, without going round by the circuitous route of Hebrewism. Where men insisted on circumcision being administered, and on Jewish customs being maintained (vv. 3, 12, &c.), he protested with all the fiery vehemence of his nature; but when his opponents had admitted it to be comparatively unimportant, he was willing to administer it as a matter of concession to uninstructed and inquiring minds (Acts xvi. 3).

What blessed intercourse Paul must have had with James, Cephas (Peter), and John! Each of them would give details of our Lord's life and ministry, which would be of immense interest to him. James could tell of those obscure years of his earlier manhood, when they dwelt together in the same home (i. 19); Peter would narrate the stirring scenes of his active ministry, in which he had played so great a part, and would specially dwell on the experiences of Pentecost; John would dwell on the inner life of Jesus, which lay open to his loving heart. Together these devout and loyal hearts would tread again the spots made sacred by those holy feet. But when Peter vacillated, Paul did not hesitate to rebuke him. The younger had progressed beyond the elder. Paul told him that if he went back, he confessed that he had been wrong in the liberty which he had previously practised; but since that liberty had been given him by Christ, he made Christ a minister to wrong-doing and sin, which, of course, was unthinkable. Therefore he was wrong to return to a bondage from which the Lord had set him free.

The twentieth verse must be lived to be understood. Our Lord was not only crucified for us, but asks us to identify ourselves with Him in his death and resurrection, that He may become our life; and that, in the words of Origen, we may be "his harp, his flute, his temple."

TUESDAY, October 22. Galatians iii.

The first paragraph of this chapter (1-14) is of the utmost importance to those who desire the fulness of the Pentecostal Gift. Three times over the Apostle emphasizes the fact that the Holy Spirit, in his special functions, is to be received by faith (2, 5, 14). Faith is simple receptiveness—the laying open of the heart to God—that his gracious Presence may pervade and fill the inner sanctuary. Oh, that every reader of these lines would retire to some lonely spot, and say: "There is a filling of the Holy Spirit which, if I do not possess, I may have, and I long for it, and I am prepared to put away all that would grieve and quench Him, and I do now open my heart to receive Him into all its unlocked chambers."

We are not under the law of Moses, as represented by circumcision. Jesus has perfectly fulfilled on our behalf all its requirements, and borne its curse and penalty. It is absurd, therefore, to insist on any rite, be it circumcision or baptism, as necessary to justification. Our righteousness is in Christ, and it is ours, in actual possession and enjoyment, as it was Abraham's, directly we believe. Have you ever claimed the blessings which God promised to him? They are yours also, and God waits to fulfil them all, if you will only claim them by faith.

The Mosaic dispensation was a parenthesis in God's dealings with his people. It was intended for a special purpose, as their tutor; but it could not interfere with the great covenant of grace, initiated with Abraham, and confirmed in Jesus Christ. With many individuals now, as with the Hebrew race, there is often a period in which the conscience is confronted with the holy demands of God's law, which men cannot keep, that they may be shut up to Christ. But when the absolute helplessness of the sinner is realized, then the full vision of divine grace is unveiled.

WEDNESDAY, October 23. Galatians iv.

The Apostle often uses the word "rudiments," or "elements" (3, 9; Col. ii. 8, 20). High and holy as the Mosaic legislation was in itself, yet, so soon as it was forced on inquiring souls, as the necessary portal to the Gospel, the Apostle spoke of it as belonging to an age already passed, and to a system that had become antiquated. No longer are we but a little different from bondservants, we are lords of all in the one Lord Jesus—no longer slaves, but sons—heirs and joint-heirs! What a royal heritage is ours, rich with the promises of God, and waiting for cultivation.

There is still a slavishness among professing Christians, which is sadly out of keeping with their rightful position in the Son of God. "The really devout man," says one, "does not overwhelm himself with vocal prayers and religious exercises, which leave him no breathing-space. He aims at constant freedom of heart. He is neither scrupulous nor overanxious, but moves on his daily road in simplicity and confidence. He is firmly set to refuse nothing that God asks of him, to yield in no way to self-love, never to be guilty of any deliberate fault; but at the same time he does not torment or worry himself with petty vexations.

There would be greater holiness among professing Christians, if their ministers could appropriate Paul's words in verse 19. Perhaps we get a hint of his thorn in the flesh from verse 15. In this allegory of Sarah and Hagar, notice that the Apostle is not dealing with the principle of evil within us, but with the mistaken mingling of two dispensations, of two methods, of the Law and Gospel. Most truly he urges that the two are incompatible, and therefore, like Abraham, we must cast out Hagar that is Sinai, which tendeth to bondage.

THURSDAY, October 24. Galatians v.

We are free. The Son hath made us free, and we are free indeed. But not free to do as we like (v. 13). We are set free from the minute prescriptions, the rites and ordinances, of the Levitical law, from the surveillance and prescriptions of human priests, from all that would cramp and hinder the full development of our spiritual life. But we are still bound by the laws of the Spirit, by the commands and precepts of Christ. Free from law, as the method of righteousness and acceptance with God, but more than ever bound to see to it that the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, as the outcome of our devotion, and love, and loyalty to Christ, through the indwelling grace of the Holy Spirit. When the eagle is freed from its chain, it is not free from the laws of flight, but simply at liberty to fulfil the nature which God has given. We, free as we are, must live and walk in the Spirit, and be led by Him (vv. 16, 18, 25).

Let it never be forgotten that though we are not in the flesh, yet the flesh (i.e., the me-principle, Rom. vii. 18) is in us. There is always the possibility of our reverting to it, and walking in it. Even in our most religious hours, there is a fear of our doing good things from a selfish motive. Therefore, we need to walk in the Spirit, as He reveals the living Saviour; and as Jesus is more and more revealed to us and formed within us, the new foliage and fruitage of the risen life will appear, whilst the dead works of the flesh shrivel and drop away.

FRIDAY, October 25. Galatians vi.

Christian men may be overtaken by a sudden gust of temptation, beneath which they fall. The fact of their being so overtaken, proves that they had not been living in close fellowship with the Lord, else they had been as sensitive to the approach of temptation, as the aneroid barometer is to a depression of the atmosphere. The most spiritual men in the church are the fittest to restore such, and they must do it with meekness and humility. In this way we bear each other's burdens, by sympathy and helpfulness; but there are some burdens which each must bear for himself alone—of existence, of personal accountability, and of the care of personal growth.

Life is a sowing time. Earth and time give the occasion of preparing for heavenly harvests. The open furrows of opportunity invite the seed, and every time we do good, and work that which is good, we scatter seeds that shall finally yield a hundred-fold.

From the eleventh verse the Apostle adds the postscript in his own hand-writing — the characters were large and clumsy (11), perhaps owing to the calamity referred to in iv. 15. Here, for the third time in this Epistle, he names the Cross, in its reflex influence on the believer's inner life (ii. 20; v., 24; vi. 14). Notice the repetition in verse 15 of v. 6, and compare 1 Cor. vii. 19. Mark the width of the Apostle's benediction (v. 16). Study the R.V. rendering of verse 17. Oh, to be so branded with the name of Jesus, that people might never expect aught else than that we should live as his slaves!

SATURDAY, October 26. Ephesians i.

The Epistle of the Ascension, of the Church, of the Life of In-ness. It was probably intended as an encyclical, to be read throughout the wide district of which Ephesus was the centre.

We are borne along in these glowing words from the Father's eternal choice, when foreknowing all who would trust in his Son, He chose them in Him, before the foundation of the world; and we are landed, at the close of the chapter, in the glory to which the Lord Jesus has been raised, and where He awaits the consummation of his Body, by which He will manifest his fulness.

Count up the blessings enumerated in these paragraphs. Blessed with every spiritual blessing, chosen before the world's foundation, foreordained unto adoption, redeemed and forgiven through his blood, acquainted with the secret intentions of his will, become a heritage of God, sealed with the Holy Spirit, wrought upon by the very same power that raised Christ from the dead, and set Him at God's right hand in the heavenlies—what a galaxy of stars shine in this square inch of the great firmament of truth! But notice that they are all sphered "in Him." Let us ask, as part of our daily prayer, that the eyes of our heart may be enlightened, that we may know all the riches of grace and glory which are stored for our use in our ascended Saviour.

Home Missions.

The Open-Air Mission.

A SEASON OF VICTORY.

YES, it has been victory all along the line. Never have we seen more to encourage us; never has the Spirit of God more mightily manifested Himself among us. The old ground has been maintained with undiminished vigour; fresh racecourses have been invaded in the Master's name, amid the amazement and wonder of onlookers, sometimes ending in showers of ginger-beer bottles, sticks, and stones; village evangelization, too, has been a marked feature, and has been wonderfully blessed of God. There is no more vitally important work. Country fairs—hiring, cattle, and pleasure—have been visited, east, west, north, and south, by companies of devoted evangelists, and the Word of the Lord has sounded forth amid throngs of listeners. Yet much more could have been accomplished had we not been constantly hampered by lack of funds.

The seaside missions have been extraordinarily fruitful, continued, as they have been, in some cases for four or five weeks, and witnessing the conversion of many souls. Often audiences of 2,000 and 2,500 in the aggregate would be addressed on the Lord's Day, and many hundreds would hear each week-day. At Great Yarmouth, for instance, it is computed that more than 25,000 people heard the Gospel during our stay, and most of these gave quiet, reverent attention such as could be exceeded in no church or chapel. Often the stillness would be intense, and the work of conviction would be clearly seen on scores of faces. May I give your readers some instances, that they may share our joy?

OPEN-AIR MISSION BAND.

SIN-SEARED FACES SOLEMNIZED.

At Chester Races, on the great Cup day, a stand was taken in the vortex of the gambling evil, amid crowds of bookmakers. Presently a number of "fast" men became listeners. Their faces were marked by evidences of vice and sin, and they were a pitiful sight. Such was the power of God present, that four of these men came forward publicly for Marked Testaments, accepting them most thankfully. One young man, who was led aside in tears, offered a penitent prayer, accepted Christ, and wrote his name and address on the fly-leaf of a Gospel. Never were men more evidently solemnized.

MEN AND WOMEN ON THEIR KNEES.

A wave of blessing flooded our work at Newcastle Races. Day after day souls were saved, and most cheering letters have since been received from many who then accepted Christ. Their joy in the Lord is deep and abiding. On the racecourse, amid many difficulties, a powerful testimony was borne, this being the second time of its invasion by the Mission. Never before last year had there been preaching amid this scene of wickedness, where the noise of the betting swelled into a sickening roar. On the Town Moor, too, where a fête is held (attended by 100,000 people on one day alone), Christ was lifted up, and drew hearts to Himself. But in the evening meetings, in Bigg Market, surrounded as we were by nearly 100 splendid local workers nightly, God's arm was indeed made bare. Between forty and fifty souls came forward publicly for our "Converts' Cards," which many signed on their knees, amid tears. Among those who came forward for a card was one who had often preached infidelity on that very spot. He has since written hopeful letters, but has not as yet signed the card. God is dealing with him.

"Come and see the show!" So said a young clergyman (we fear unconverted) to two young lady relatives at Douglas, Isle of Man. The "show" was the Open-Air Mission service on the beach, which he regarded with contempt and anger. They accompanied him to the spot. "There, that's the show. What do you think of it?" For answer the young ladies took seats, and presently were listening intently. Growing restless, the clergyman said, "Let us go. We have had enough of this." But they declined to move, and at the close of the meeting spoke to the evangelists. The result was their happy conversion. Thereafter they were at every meeting, sometimes holding the banner, and helping in other ways. It is deeply interesting to know that these ladies are related to one who in the early days of the Open-Air Mission was among its chief supporters and devoted workers.

OPEN-AIR MISSION AT ASCOT RACES.

A LADY'S CONVERSION, AND WHAT FOLLOWED.

"I was converted at the service on the beach last Thursday." So said a young lady, rising in a Y.W.C.A. meeting at Douglas, conducted by our evangelists. This young lady was engaged to an unconverted young man. She immediately wrote telling him of the great change, and saying that, unless he was prepared to take the same stand, they must separate. In alarm, the young man crossed the Channel from Birkenhead, wondering what it all meant, and having only the haziest idea of conversion. His young lady immediately took him in hand, and marched him off on Sunday morning to the churchyard service at Kirk Braddon, where a powerful Gospel sermon was preached by the clergyman. The truths enunciated made a deep impression on the young fellow. In the evening she took him to hear the same clergyman at another church, and he was still more deeply convicted of sin. Thence she brought him to the Open-Air Mission service on the beach, where the arrow was driven still deeper, until he completely broke down, and, we trust, gave himself to the Lord.

"WILL YOU GO? WILL YOU GO?"

This was the refrain which some Salvationists were singing in Southend-on-Sea one day, when there passed by a gentleman from London who had just come from the railway station, seeking health and change. The words reached his heart by the power of God's Spirit, and so affected was he by them that he could go no further. Forthwith he returned to his home in London. "What have you come back for?" said his wife. He told her. "But you must have a change. You need it. You had better go to Yarmouth." To Yarmouth he came. On arriving he was about to take a drive, when something said to him, "Go down to the beach." He went, and found the Open-Air Mission holding a service. The Word was blessed to his soul, and being spoken with by Colonel Major, he became deeply anxious. A few days afterwards, he stepped into the light and liberty of the Gospel, gladly signing a "Convert Card." Thus "one soweth, and another reapeth."

KNEELING ON THE SANDS.

One evening at Great Yarmouth anxious souls were as usual invited to come forward and seek the Saviour. Immediately a lady left her seat, knelt at the platform, and was prayed with by Colonel Major before all the audience. Night was falling, and the scene was most solemn and impressive. She trusted Christ there and then, and became a happy believer. Her case was only one of a great number.

At Doncaster races, from September 8 to 13, where sixteen of our evangelists laboured, many were the "slain of the Lord." On the racecourse, in the Market Place, where tipsters ply their trade, and in the town at night, souls were convicted and converted. Memorable, indeed, were many of these wonderful meetings.

In conclusion, may I beg the continued prayers and gifts of God's people? Our financial need is most urgent, and the autumn fairs are in course of visitation by many evangelists. The whole work sadly needs more liberal and constant support.

West End Sorrows.

By Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE.

MULTITUDES spend their life in London, and yet know nothing of its sin and shame, its sorrow and suffering. The very district where Parliament sits is the headquarters of everything that is cruel and diabolical in the English-speaking world; and it is only those who go behind the scenes of shameless revelry and licence who know what it is "to sigh and cry for the abominations that are done in the city." If, like Nehemiah, God's servants would only sometimes steal out by night, and look at ruined humanity under the soft light of the moon, they would be saved from an optimism that is too tranquilising because it has never grasped the dismal and dreadful facts; and from remedial measures that are altogether inadequate because of a false and superficial conception of the disease.

I was coming to London intending only to take charge of the morning service at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, which for the past fourteen years has been conducted with such abundant blessing by Mr. Mark Guy Pearse, in connection with the West London Mission. The regrettable illness of Mr. Price Hughes, the superintendent, has necessitated his complete withdrawal from the Mission for the next twelve months; and the responsibility of conducting both morning and evening services devolves therefore upon me. I have not to gather a congregation; it is already gathered. The morning service is devoted to the deepening of the spiritual life, while the evening service is distinctly Evangelistic. In the evening the hall (which seats 2,500 people) is packed long before the service commences, and affords a glorious opportunity of leading men and women to immediate decision for Christ. Few Sundays have passed during the last fourteen years without such results. On my second Sunday in St. James's Hall, six of the inquirers were young men. It is to them my heart is specially drawn. There are between 700,000 and 800,000 young men in London, and we shall not rest until a multitude of these recognize the inanity of a life of sinful pleasure, and realise the liberty and blessedness of a life lived wholly for God.

OVERCROWDING AND ITS EVILS.

Overcrowding in West London has reached alarming proportions. In the registration districts no fewer than 61,056 persons are living in one room tenements, while if we add St. Giles-in-the-Fields, St. Marylebone, and St. Pancras, the number of persons living in one room tenements reaches the enormous total of 128,120. Even these figures do not represent the full extent of overcrowding, inasmuch as a large proportion of those living in two or three room tenements live under crowded conditions. Soho is the most notorious district. It has no fewer than 232 persons to an acre, and 148,608 persons to a square mile. The borough of St. Pancras, in which two of our halls are situated, has all classes of houses and inhabitants. Within its borders there are more persons living in one or two room tenements than in any other sanitary district in the metropolis.

The Rescue work of the Mission is carried on by two of the Sisters, who devote all their time to the rescue and after welfare of those who have been tempted or driven to the terrible life on the streets. They go at midnight to Piccadilly and Regent Street, taking with them flowers and cards bearing an invitation to any in distress, or anxious to escape from the life of sin, to call at Winchester House, where there is always help and a welcome. A bed is kept in readiness for anyone who can be induced to return with the Sisters. These Sisters are well-known, and their work is appreciated by many of the poor girls, who, even if they themselves do not accept the advice and help offered, often send their suffering and unhappy companions. A police inspector remarked to one of the Sisters, "There are 300 police on this beat, and there isn't one that does not know you, Sister!" The primary aim of the workers is, of course, to bring the girls under spiritual influence, knowing that by that alone can any ultimate good be attained.

One of these girls had been chambermaid in a West End hotel. She lost her situation through some slight carelessness, fell in with evil companions, and drifted on to the streets. She belonged to a respectable family in the North of England, who were in despair when their letters remained unanswered, and finally were returned marked, "Not known." Application was made to the Sisters, who were, after some time, able to find the poor child—she was little more—just after she had made an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide, and thus end the life which she loathed. Once an inmate of Winchester House she wrote to her parents, received their forgiveness, and, after some little time spent in the Home, was placed in a good situation—at her own request far from the temptations of London. From her kind mistress and from the girl herself letters have been received telling how well she is doing in her new life.

"THE VESTIBULE OF HELL."

A few nights ago I paid a midnight visit to Piccadilly. The more I dwell upon what I saw, in what Mr. Price Hughes calls "the vestibule of hell," the more I am shocked at the existence of this open, shameless market of vice, in the very heart of West London. It is awful to know on the authority of these Sisters that a large number of the women who constitute this wretched throng are from respectable, hard-working families, who have been ruined by the men to whom they were engaged to be married. Deception, desertion, and despair, are the three rungs of the ladder that lead to an ever-deeper degradation. Sister Margaret says that, as she has come to know in detail the history of these girls, she has stood on the pavement feeling crushed with helpless sorrow, crying mutely to God, "How long, O Lord, how long shall these things be?"

"Fourteen years ago," says Sister Elizabeth, "I was walking in a street in my district, when a hand was laid on my arm, and a voice said 'Won't you help me?' Turning, I saw a tall, handsome girl. 'Tell me what is the matter,' I said. It was the old story—a good home, a good position, a good character—all lost through drink. I heard all she had to say, and then asked for references. She referred me to the head of one of the departments in a large West End business. I went to the place she named. 'Yes,' he said, 'her story is all true, and I am very sorry for her. She is one of the cleverest girls in London. Two years ago she came up to town, a bonnie, innocent Scotch girl, and she was taught to drink by a man I know. If you can do anything for her, it will be a work of mercy, and I shall be glad to help you in any way I can.'

"Receiving this encouragement I set to work. I got her a good situation, good clothes, and saw her started again with every prospect of doing well. She stayed in business four months and then left, because in a moment of great temptation she had given way again. She now sold and pawned everything for drink, and after a few days came back to me again as destitute and miserable as when I had found her first. It was indeed but there were in the circumstances of the relapse extenuating facts, and I felt that she should have a fresh trial. She went into a home, remained there for five months, and left with an excellent character. I rejoiced to think, also, that her heart was changed, and with renewed hope went about the difficult task of re-instating again in business a girl who had no reference. Again we succeeded, again she was supplied with all that was necessary, and again she started with every promise of success. For four months all seemed well, and then I heard something which made me anxious. I went over to her place of business to find that she was dismissed, and that for weeks she had deceived me. Yes, it was the old story, she had fallen again. What to do now I hardly know. The poor prodigal appeals to me, but I am so utterly disappointed. 'You say that Jesus is able to save to the uttermost, please therefore don't forsake me, Sister; I have no one but you, and if you give me up, what will become of me?' What, indeed! I remember that the Good Shepherd goes after his lost sheep until He finds them, and I think his under-shepherds must do the same. In the Master's name, for his sake, I must still try to save this poor girl from worse than death."

A TRUE TALE OF TWO SISTERS.

The work of the "Pension" department of the Mission cannot be better illustrated than by the following case. Two sisters, aged fifty and sixty, had lived in the same two rooms in Soho for thirty years, supporting themselves by tailoring. The elder, lame from her birth, went to the workroom, where she was allowed to make up a bed, and in the season spent her time there from Monday morning to Saturday night. The younger looked after the home, and did piecework. In the season their joint earnings were 18s. a week, out of which 6s. 6d. went for rent. The fearfully unhealthy life utterly broke down the health of the elder sister; and when Sister Edith found them, the elder had not left her room for two years. At last the work she still struggled to do fell from her fingers. Realizing that the invalid needed the whole care of the younger sister, Sister Edith determined to save these two noble-hearted, Christian women from the workhouse by providing them with a small pension for life. Two relatives promised 1s. each weekly and Sister Edith collected 8s. more, making a weekly pension of 10s. The two moved into cheap suburban rooms. After eleven years of great suffering for the elder, and of absolute sisterly devotion on the part of the younger, the invalid died, and the sister is left alone, and receives a pension of 6s. a week from Sister Edith, to which she adds by needlework. This one case has cost up to the present nearly £300; but could any better investment be found for the gifts of God's stewards than this? This is only one of many cases which the Mission is helping in this way, and we should help many more if we were but able.

HOW TO HELP.

Of the Home of Peace for the Dying, of the work done at the Dispensary and by the Nursing Sisters, of the Crêche, and many other beneficent agencies, space will not allow me to write. It will be readily perceived that such work as I have outlined cannot be done without a large expenditure of money; but if ladies are willing to renounce the comforts of home in order that they may go down into the depths to seek and to save the lost; if men and women are found who gladly give the most precious thing they possess—life itself—to this work, surely it ought not to be difficult to find among those who have been entrusted with wealth a sufficient amount to relieve these workers from financial anxieties, so that they may devote themselves to the full extent of their powers to this important and urgent work. Owing to the long illness of Mr. Price Hughes the Mission is in great need of funds. The sum of £1,000 is required at once to carry on its many-sided activities.

When the Tide Came In.

Black and foul the harbour lay,
While no waves their way could win;
But it gleamed, transformed and gay,
When the tide came in.

Motionless the vessels lay
Locked the harbour-mouth within;
Stranded there, and thus to stay
Till the tide came in.

All my life disordered lay
Graceless and begrimed with sin;
Oh! the change, that hour of day
When God's tide flowed in.

At its ease my small craft lay
Cramped a narrow space within;
But it pulsed and sped away
When God's tide flowed in.

. . . . .

Yea! the Holy Spirit came,
His renewings to begin;
Leaving nothing quite the same—
Thus God's tide flowed in!

Winifred A. Iverson.

"One by One" in the Navy.

AN INTERESTING TESTIMONY.

IN his Quarterly Magazine* for this month, Mr. Hogben, of the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, records a work of grace among the men of our Navy. A leading signalman gives his experiences of the "One by One" Band as follows:—"I have for years (ever since I have known the Lord, in fact, been working on the 'One by One' lines, but had never laid hold on God so definitely before. Many of those whom I had begun to pray for, were forgotten; but since I have begun to enter their names in my 'Throne of Grace" book, God has brought them back to my remembrance. God has wonderfully blessed my feeble efforts in his service since I began to work for Him on these lines. At first I got no direct answers, and, instead, was led to see how utterly unfit I was, in myself, to pray at all. But I just told God my need as He revealed it to me, and then He supplied it; and not only gave me the power to pray, but waited to answer.

"I got my first answer (direct answer) on April 14, 1901, and it cheered me greatly, and encouraged me to look to God with increased faith for others. In less than a month three other shipmates decided for the Lord, and ever since that time God has been giving me many direct answers. I call it a direct answer when one of those whom I have entered in my 'Throne of Grace' book, and remembered before God by name, gets converted. Apart from these I pray for many of my old shipmates, and for those amongst whom I am living, and I have had the joy of seeing many of them brought to a knowledge of Jesus.

"I got into conversation with a lad, found he was thirsting for a power to save him from sin, told him of my Saviour, and had the joy of seeing him profess to find the Lord. Nor was this all, for in less than an hour, on the same evening, three more young fellows professed to trust the Lord. In all, I should think there were a round dozen came to the Lord, as far as we know, in about six weeks.

Then, various works that I have been praying for have had similar tides of blessing. A brother to whom I spoke on the subject said, 'Yes, but you don't think it was in answer to your prayers, do you?' 'Of course I do,' I replied; 'not to my prayers only, but still, an answer to my prayers.' Now I am praying that God will establish a branch of his 'One by One' work in every ship in the Royal Navy."

Mr. Hogben constantly impresses upon Christian men that the only way in which the navy can be won for Christ is by the men who are saved so living, praying, and working, that they they shall win their shipmates.

A Fruitful Y.M.C.A.

THE Totterdown (Bristol) Y.M.C.A. originated in a remarkable way in 1890, in the house of the present secretary, who was then carrying on a drapery business in the district. Mr. Marsh invited young men to meet in his dining-room on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and at the end of twelve months the number attending was such that three rooms were secured and opened each evening, while sixteen young men had been led to decision for Christ. These rooms were occupied for two years, greater blessing attended the work, and in 1893 the movement had so developed that increased accommodation once more became a matter of urgent need, and a scheme for extension was initiated. By the following year sufficient funds were in hand to purchase the first of the houses which have since been pulled down to erect a new building, which was opened in 1900. The total cost of the premises (inclusive of sites and furnishing) £6,025, of this sum £4,160 has been raised, leaving a balance due to the treasurer of £1,865. The officers and committee are now making strenuous efforts to bring this scheme to a successful issue, in order that they may proceed if possible in the spring with the erection of a large hall in which Gospel services, conventions, and temperance meetings may be held. Donations amounting to £700 have been promised conditionally, and the office-bearers cherish the hope that they may at an early date be able to meet the entire liability. The address of the secretary, Mr. J. C. Marsh, is "Fairlawn," Brecknock Road, Totterdown, Bristol.

London Tent Campaign.

THE final rally of the London Tent Campaign, held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, October 8, attracted a vast audience, and proved, in spiritual force and enthusiasm, a fitting conclusion to the evangelistic operations maintained in the tents during the past five months. The singing was led by a brass band and choir, while solos were rendered from time to time by Madame Annie Ryall, Mr. Frank Weaver, and Miss Angel, with much acceptance.

After Pastor Marsh, of Sunderland, had led in prayer, Mr. G. R. Williams, secretary, gave a brief

SUMMARY OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Twenty-one missions have been held, each lasting from four to six weeks. As a general rule the tents were half full each week night, and crowded on Sundays. The total attendance is estimated at considerably over one million, and the names of some thousands of inquirers were registered. The work at Islington proved particularly prosperous, the audiences numbering about 24,000 per week. An important department of the work was the system of visitation organized by Miss Wallis, and carried on by some 400 lady workers.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. T. A. Denny referred to the increasing difficulty of inducing the masses to attend places of worship, and to the general disregard of the Sabbath, and the thirst for amusement, which tend to widen the gulf between the churches and the people. We invite the "outsiders" to church, but the invitation is disregarded. In view of this lamentable position of affairs, it is encouraging to find that the Tent missions have drawn large congregations, and that the fervent and direct preaching of the evangelists has been the means of winning many souls.

Dr. John Robertson, of Glasgow, who followed, gave earnest counsel to the converts, and Mr. Charles Cook pointed out that in some instances entire families have been brought to the Lord, while the vigorous evangelization work undertaken by the converts has had far-reaching results. There have been of blessing. Mr. Cook told of a man, at present in Holloway Gaol, who is charged, on his own confession, with no fewer than fourteen burglaries. This repentant criminal had surrendered himself to the authorities as the result of his conversion at Shepherd's Bush tent.

Financial questions were dealt with by Mr. A. Garstin, who showed that a deficit of £700 had to be met. Proceeding, the speaker told of a brewer who, after attending a meeting at one of the tents, become deeply impressed, and after seeking the Lord, abandoned the brewing business.

Mr. Charles Inglis and Mr. Bewley Weaver, who have taken prominent part in the campaign, added words of thanksgiving and appeal, and Mr. Leonard Weaver, after calling for a brief testimony from a converted atheist and blasphemer, who had been brought into the light at the Fulham tent, noted some results of the campaign; (1) upon the unconverted; (2) upon believers who have entered into a fresh experience of joy in the Christian life; (3) in Gospel testimony amid neighbourhoods largely influenced by infidelity on the one hand, and ritualism on the other; and (4) in its stimulating effect upon the churches. At another stage of the meeting, Mr. Weaver led a kind of "roll-call" of the converts and friends, those from each district standing in turn, the whole body subsequently joining in a song of praise.

The concluding address was given by Mr. William Grove, whose description of the Deptford mission was at once vivid and pathetic, as he described the influence of the mission upon the drunken and degraded.

An overflow meeting, held in the lower hall, at which Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard presided, was also marked by spiritual fervour, and many testimonies were given to the far-reaching results of the campaign.

Rev. T. Connellan in Limerick.

EVANGELICAL Christians have been deeply concerned about the condition of things in Limerick, and the persecution to which Dr. Long has been subjected. Our readers will, therefore, be glad to learn that Rev. Thomas Connellan has just conducted a most successful mission in that city. The Committee of the Limerick Y.M.C.A. invited Mr. Connellan to Limerick and placed their hall at his service. Much prayer has been offered for our brother, and the Master's cause in Limerick.

Mr. Connellan arrived on Saturday, October 5. He preached in St. Munchin's Church the following morning, and in the Munster Hall at eight o'clock every evening during the week. From the commencement the hall was too small to hold the crowds who attended. Many had to turn away from the doors every night, although every inch of available room was utilized. The spirit and tone of the meetings were delightful. Roman Catholics were always present in larger or smaller numbers, yet there was not a whisper of opposition to anything the speaker said. Mr. Connellan walked to and from the hall, as well as about the city, unattended, and without let or hindrance. A priest was present at some of the closing meetings, and made notes. The same gentleman drove away a crowd of Roman Catholics who stood under the hall windows. He might have spared himself the trouble, however, for he had scarcely turned his back when the crowd returned. He gave most careful attention while Mr. Connellan was speaking.

Limerick Christians declare that the Spirit of God was present with power in every meeting. Some of the weaker brethren prophesied riots, but there has not been even an attempt at opposition. All agree that Mr. Connellan must pay another visit, and that the theatre must be secured for his next mission.

Mr. Connellan opens a week's mission in Belfast on November 20, and then goes to Manchester for work there. Prayer is asked that God may lead out a great company of the priests, and use them, as He uses Mr. Connellan, for the emancipation of Ireland.

The legal expenses incurred by Dr. Long in his successful defence of the action brought against him by the Limerick Corporation have now been fully defrayed by the contributions received from friends. The Society for Irish Church Missions asks continued prayer on behalf of Dr. Long and his work, and invites special contributions towards the maintenance of the Limerick Medical Mission. A full report of the recent trial in Limerick, with press comments, has been issued, and can be obtained from the secretaries, Irish Church Missions, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C., price 1½d. post free. A good portrait of Dr. Long appears in the Banner of Truth (October), the official organ of the Irish Church Missions, which as usual contains instructive and enlightening notes of evangelization in Ireland.

Death of Rev. Dr. Purves.

FIFTH Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, has suffered the loss, by death, of its esteemed pastor, Dr. George T. Purves, who passed away on September 24. Dr. Purves had been ailing for a day or two, and physicians were called in to diagnose the case. While they were examining him he was seized with a sudden attack of heart weakness, and expired almost immediately. Dr. Purves went to Fifth Avenue Church so lately as January last year, as successor to Dr. John Hall. Previously he had been pastor successively at Wayne, Baltimore, Pittsburg, and Princeton, New Jersey, where, in addition to filling the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church, he became connected with Princeton Seminary. The sudden death has given a severe shock to all connected with the church over which he so ably presided, and to a wide circle of friends both in America and the United Kingdom. Dr. Purves was in in his forty-ninth year.

Notes on the Competition.

THERE have been no papers of very exceptional merit this time, but a great many give evidence of solid hard work. Some competitors give too much time to elaborate appearance, and too little to answering the questions fully. The ideas of others, as to what may reasonably be expected in a Prize Competition, are very scanty indeed.

In describing events, the names of the places where they happened are too frequently omitted, which means loss of marks.

There have been an unusual number of curious mistakes this time. Let me correct some of them. Barnabas and Barsabas were different persons, and Paul's companion was not Barabbas. It was Paul and not Aquila (and certainly not Priscilla!) whose head was shorn at Cenchrea. Paul was not "born at the feet of Gamaliel;" and it was the sight of the brethren, and not "the Three Taverns," for which Paul "thanked God and took courage." I should like to point out also that Judas and Silas were the "men who had hazarded their lives," who were sent with Barnabas and Paul.

I think it will meet the wishes of parents and children alike if, beginning with next year, we have only two competitions instead of four. The March and September questions come during term time, which, I feel, makes them too much of a task, when ordinary lessons are pressing; and I wish above all things that our "Bible Searcher" should be a pleasure and not a burden. For the same reason I propose to move the June competition to the end of July, so that it can be done after schools break up. But we will talk more about this after Christmas.

Meantime, I want you all to remember that in this and in everything, and in the Christian life most of all, the most important thing is thoroughness, as Mr. Luff told us on his "Tickets," a week or two ago. Thoroughness and carefulness over small details go to make a successful competition and a successful life; and no amount of ornamentation can take their place. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might. . . . heartily as unto the Lord. . . . Do all to the glory of God."

I read a striking incident in the papers on Saturday. A police-officer was conducting a prisoner from Liverpool to Bristol by train. Suddenly, when the train was going at full speed, the prisoner opened the door and jumped out. Without a moment's hesitation, the officer followed him. They were both injured and partly stunned, but presently began to "come to"—the prisoner first, however, and off he ran. But the officer was after him like a shot, and a hot pursuit led to the capture of the runaway. By that time, they were both so exhausted that neither could speak. But the prisoner was safely caught.

Wasn't that a persevering and thorough-going policeman? Quite as great hero as a soldier, for he had no one to command him, but acted promptly upon his sense of duty. He might have made plenty of excuses, but he knew his duty, and faithfully performed it. I hope we shall all try to do the same when tempted to do otherwise. Uncle Tom.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, October 20.

Genesis xxv. 29-34.

JACOB was different from Esau, not only because he loved a quieter life, but because, beyond all the natural meanness of his character, there was a desire for the friendship of God, a sensibility to spiritual influence. It may have been the consciousness of his own weakness that led him to crave connection with some Being that might ennoble his nature, and lift him above himself.

Esau, on the other hand, was generous, open-hearted, jovial, a creature of sense and appetite, with many of the qualities which are most attractive in men, and with no sort of care for the Unseen and Eternal. He is a living type of those who have their portion in this life. In the Epistle to the Hebrews he is spoken of as a profane person, that is, as one whose interests were limited with the narrow horizon of this world.

The event in which the contrastive characters of these twin brethren were most distinctly revealed, was an instance of the most ordinary and trivial kind, and you might think it hard that the whole after career of the brothers, and especially of Esau, should be determined by the occurrence of a single hour, unless you remember that it is in the most trivial incidents of life that our characters are best manifested. Our true nature is not apparent on some festal day when we are the observed of all, and realize that there is a general expectation that we should be worthy of the character which our fellows give us. No, it is in the most insignificant incidents of home and daily life that our real selves reveal themselves.

It is hard to say which brother deserves most reprobation in this transaction. One is inclined to be hard on Esau, who was so swept away by the desire to gratify passion, that he was oblivious of all spiritual consideration. But what shall we say of Jacob, whose cold-blooded calculating spirit took advantage of a twin brother's weakness, and bound him by an oath lest he should change his mind?

Yet this incident is perpetually repeated amongst ourselves. That was not the last time that the steam of savoury meat, appealing to appetite, has arisen on the desert air. The hunger for gratification is in us all. The desires of sensual passion lie very near the surface of our nature. As we pass through the world, we are constantly meeting with the alluring bait that tempts us to the indulgence of appetite, and too many of us are willing to sacrifice peace with God, purity of heart, and power over our fellows, for one brief gratification. The world is full of the wrecks of lives of men, who, like Esau, for one appetizing morsel, have sold their birthright. Probably there is not one of us who has not been strongly tempted to make just such a fatal bargain. The hunger for passionate gratification overleaps all other considerations. We know that it will grieve God and bring shame upon ourselves, and yet none of these things restrain us; and afterwards we find "no place of repentance," which does not mean that we are unable to repent, but that our repentance does not serve to reverse the past. We may be forgiven, but we cannot alter what has been done. This is what was in the Apostle's thought when he said that he kept under his body, lest by any means, having preached to others, he should himself become a castaway. Only the Spirit of God, in whom you walk and live, can keep you from such a choice (1 Cor. ix. 27; Gal. v. 16). F. B. M.

Among the Hop-Pickers.

THE WEALD OF KENT.

A NEW branch of work has been established this year at Curtisden Green, an outlying hamlet in the parish of Goudhurst, in connection with Rev. T. T. Kendon's work. A "Hop-pickers' Shelter and Medical Mission" has met some of the needs of these poor people, who were most grateful for such a warm, cheery place wherein to spend their evenings and write their letters. Its white painted walls were made bright with texts, and muslin-curtained windows gave a homelike and inviting aspect to the place. In one corner a table was set apart for writing; pens, ink, paper, and envelopes being provided free. An Irish girl who had listened attentively at the services, and seemed to receive the truth into her heart and life, said one evening, as she was about to close a letter home, "Please give me a tract to put in, then they will know at home I've turned religious." It was crudely expressed, but it was her first testimony. At another corner of the room was placed the reading table, well supplied with Gospel literature.

On Sunday mornings children's services were held, and the happy faces of many who came hatless, coatless, and grimy showed how much the youngsters enjoyed the meetings. On Sunday evenings, men and women gathered in to a simple informal service; some were patients or friends of patients, and with softened hearts they listened as doctor and missionary spoke of the Saviour.

The Medical Mission work stands out as a useful agency for bringing the Gospel home to the hearts of the people. The upper end of the shelter was partitioned off with crimson baize curtains (which could be drawn aside for the services). This formed a room where the doctor and sister saw the patients, dressed wounds, and dispensed medicines. The patients were of all ages, from the little baby suffering from a burn to the old "grannie" of ninety-three, who pathetically remarked, "I do think this will be my last hopping, my dear. I can't do much, but I've come so many years I don't like to be left at home." In many instances, it seemed, not only was bodily healing vouchsafed, but the consciousness given of sin pardoned.

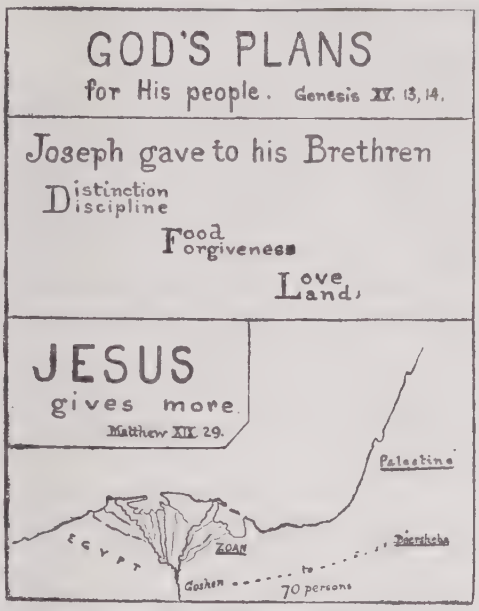
JOSEPH AND HIS BRETHREN (Gen. xlv. 1-15).

GOLDEN TEXT: Rom. xii. 21.

INTRODUCTORY.

THE wonder is often expressed why Joseph lived so long in Egypt without letting his father know he was living. Well, the first thirteen years he was a slave. Two years of that time at least, he spent in the dungeon; then when raised to power it was for the express purpose of doing a great work which he could not leave, and there were no posts or telegraphs as we have. Also we know that Joseph always waited for God's will to be revealed.

Our story is resumed in the second year of the famine. The work of the seven plentiful years has been well done, and all the nations around are coming to Egypt to buy corn. Pharaoh is greatly enriched. One day Joseph is startled to see his ten older brethren among the crowd of purchasers. They could not recognise him, dressed as an Egyptian, speaking the language of that country, especially as they had not seen him since he was seventeen, and now he is nearly forty. He decided to try and see if they were changed. (Relate the story as told in xlii., xliii., xliv.) Judah's touching appeal is too much for his feelings.



LOVING FORGIVENESS (1-3, 5-8).

Now the brethren were in a right state of mind, when forgiveness would be a blessing; true repentance must precede forgiveness, this is God's way. All but the brethren were ordered away, and then the pent-up feelings of twenty-two years burst forth as Joseph made known who he was. He "gave forth his voice in weeping," so loud that the report of it reached Pharaoh's palace; the same expression is found in Num. xiv. 1. His first thought is for his dear old father; then he tried to comfort and re-assure his brethren; he had now the power to punish them for all they had done to him before, but instead of revenge and retaliation he studied their feelings and pointed out how God had overruled all their wickedness, and made it turn out for the good of many. This did not lessen their guilt, but brought out the tenderness and consideration of Joseph's love. "Come near to me," and he kissed them till they were obliged to believe in his forgiveness. Love's triumph.

THE BRETHREN (3, 4).

Filled with fear and shame, terror and dismay, conscience stricken and repentant. This brother whom they had as good as murdered is now their ruler and judge. Verily they felt guilty and undone, but Joseph overcame them with his goodness, and they talked with him (chap. xliv. 16). They would remember Joseph's early dreams.

THE COMMANDS (9, 15).

Go and fetch all the others. Come, and you shall live near me. Make haste. I will feed you on the fat of the land, you shall share my glory. Leave all your old things behind. I will supply every need. Do not quarrel! (v. 24.)

THE LAND OF GOSHEN.

An outlying province of Egypt, between the eastern outlet of the Nile and the desert; very fertile. From its chief town it is called "the land of Rameses." Zoan, where Joseph lived, was north of Goshen.

TYPES AND PARALLELS.

I. The sinner coming to Christ. Conviction, contrition, confession (xlii. 21, and 1 John i. 9).

II. "His blood be on us" (xlii. 23, and Matt. xxvii. 25).

III. Christ yearning over sinners (xliii. 30, and Matt. xxiii. 37).

IV. Jesus says, "Come near to Me" (xlv. 4, and Matt. xi. 28).

V. Christ's mission (5, and John iii. 17).

VI. The Saviour sets the guilty conscience perfectly at rest (Rom. viii. 1).

VII. After we have come to Jesus, He says, "Go," "Make haste" (9, and Luke xvi. 15; John ix. 4).

VIII. Our Lord makes the same promises (10, 13, and John xvii. 24; 11, and Ps. lxxxi. 16, John vi. 51; 20, and Phil. iii. 8, 13, 14; 24 and John xv. 12, 17).

IX. The Brother born for adversity (Prov. xvii. 17; xviii. 24).

X. He is not ashamed to call them brethren (Heb. ii. 11).

Temperance Notes.

AT the Petty Sessions at Bearstead, Kent, Mr. A. Willis, J.P., formerly secretary of the South-Eastern and Chatham Railway, called attention to the drunken scenes which he had witnessed in the district among the hop-pickers. He said he had seen young persons of eighteen years of age drunk before twelve o'clock on Sunday morning, and in his opinion the licensing laws had been flagrantly broken.

A Board of Trade return shows that in the United Kingdom 36 per cent. of national revenue is derived from alcoholic drinks, in the United States 29 per cent., in France 19 per cent., and in Germany 18 per cent. are so derived. The consumption per head of population in the case of spirits works out to about one gallon in Great Britain and the United States, as against two gallons per head in France and Germany.

"It seems sad," says The Echo, "that the authoress of 'What to do with our Girls' should be found lying drunk and disorderly in Oxford Street. In our workhouses and infirmaries may be found large numbers of people who, a few years ago, were in a good position, and almost beyond the dreams of avarice. Drink is generally more or less the cause of their downfall. Intellectual and moral excellence are not the same thing."

The Church of St. James the Lees, Bethnal Green (Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield) having formed a temperance society, is about to start a vigorous crusade against the evils of intemperance. To this end "pledge seekers" will frequent the various streets of the parish; meetings will be held monthly, when reports will be received as to the work done by the "seekers." Lectures are to be delivered, and strenuous efforts made to put the question of drink before the people in its proper light.

Writing on behalf of the Westminster Licensing Reform Committee, Professor Westlake, K.C., and Mr. Francis W. Fox suggest that the Government should introduce a Bill during the next session of Parliament—(1) Placing all retail liquor licences under the control of the magistrates, including the provision for clubs, a measure which it is believed would be cordially supported by the majority of the liquor trade, at well as by the temperance party; and (2) providing that in the case of cities and towns having a population of more than 100,000, the refusal of the local magistrates to renew a licence on the ground of its being in excess of the wants of the neighbourhood shall not be subject to appeal.

Letter to the Editor.

The Deaconess House, Bucharest.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask you to be so kind as to correct an inaccurate statement in your number of September 26? Your correspondent, "W. M.," under the heading of "From Treffen to Prague," makes Sister Anna Nitzek, of the Deaconess House, Bucharest, say that the Liberal Government ef Roumania would compel the sisters to give up their right to the internal government of the establishment.

Your correspondent evidently misunderstood what Sister Anna said. It was not the Liberal Government of Roumania—that has never interfered with the work of the sisters, but rather welcomed it—but the so-called Liberal party in the German Church Council, which refused them the right to such self-government as they consider necessary for the true evangelical work of their house. The sisters are most anxious that this disclaimer should find a place in your next issue if possible. They have made a noble stand for evangelical truth here, and are most anxious that they should not appear in a wrong light.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

THE EDINBURGH CAMPAIGN.

THE noon meetings in Carrubber's Close Mission, addressed by Rev. Dr. Henry on Monday, last week, partook very much of the character of the solemn and inspiring times when Mr. Moody was with us.

The evening gathering in the Synod Hall was equal to that of the four previous meetings, both in numbers and in close, thoughtful attention on the part of those present, to the burning words which fell from the lips of Dr. Henry. There were outbursts of emphatic approval as telling points were made by the speaker.

The last, but not least, important occasion on which Dr. Henry spoke in Edinburgh was on Tuesday evening, October 8, when by special arrangement he addressed the delegates of the Baptist Union (ministers and office-bearers), when living seeds were scattered which, no doubt, will be carried hither and thither by those thoughtful, earnest listeners, and so prepare the way for a wide-spread Gospel Temperance Mission, for conducting which Dr. Henry is proving himself to be so eminently fitted.

THE GLASGOW MEETINGS.

The welcome given at Glasgow to Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers was most encouraging. St. Andrew's Hall, with seating accommodation for 4,500, was well filled, in spite both of the rain and of the Exhibition and other attractions.

Had Dr. Henry's engagements admitted of a prolongation of the meetings in Glasgow, doubtless a fire would have been kindled which would have spread throughout the length and breadth of the city. The cause was greatly helped in having three such out-and-out total abstainers for chairmen—on Wednesday evening, Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P.; on Thursday afternoon, Rev. James Wells, D.D.; and in the evening, Mr. R. Hunter Craig, M.P. On putting the question to the large audience, at the close of the third and last meeting, whether or not they would like to have a second visit from Dr. Henry, there was an immediate and unmistakable reply in the affirmative, which was nothing more than could have been expected after the clear and convincing address they had just listened to.

In Dr. Henry we have one of God's seasonable gifts for the edifying of the body of Christ in reference to this war between heaven and hell. He is "a new, sharp threshing instrument having teeth." Toothless, dumb dogs, in this conflict, which aims at nothing short of the annihilation of the liquor traffic, are of no use, neither are carnal weapons, seeing "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world," against him who, "as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour," and who does, indeed, devour tens of thousands. Because Dr. Henry is, under God's guidance, an expert in wielding the Sword of the Spirit, there is every reason to hope that we are on the eve of a fresh movement against the drink traffic.

It seems harsh, and at first sight almost vindictive, to declare a war of extermination against a business in which many thousands are engaged, some of whom have entered upon it unthinkingly as a means of livelihood, others by inheritance, and not a few desiring, in their inmost hearts, to be happily out of it. But when we look upon the liquor traffic, as a ravening wolf let loose by the enemy of God and man, and used to an extent beyond all other agencies for the ruin of our fellow creatures, then, both in the interest of those engaged in the pernicious traffic, their families, and their victims, we need have no compunction in endeavouring to destroy it by every legitimate means and with the least possible delay.

The more one sees of the awakening character of this Temperance Mission, and the urgent call for it, the more one feels that it should be prosecuted with the utmost vigour, until the whole nation shall be awakened to a sense of its peril, morally, spiritually, and financially. The good beginning which has been made in three of the most important cities in the United Kingdom, is being followed up by campaigns in a number of other large and important centres, and all that remains to be done is for the many enthusiastic Christian total abstainers throughout the country to awake to a sense of their responsibility, and to prepare to throw themselves into the effort with heart and soul and self-denial—both in time and money—so as to ensure that this movement shall not be "a flash in the pan," but a thing of life and growth, ending in the overthrow of the traffic, which threatens the life of the Church of Christ and the well-being of the nation at large. R. S.

ENTHUSIASM AT SHEFFIELD.

At the conclusion of the Scottish campaign Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers proceeded to Sheffield, where a large gathering was held on Saturday evening last in the Albert Hall, the capacious building being filled in every part. Speaking from the chair, Mr. Henry Adams pleaded that all members of the Christian churches should become abstainers, and said he would rather be called a fanatic than be guilty of ruining the younger generation of this country with strong drink. Dr. Henry followed with an impassioned address.

"On Sunday," writes Rev. J. Thornley, "three meetings were held, one in the afternoon and one in the evening, in the Albert Hall, which was packed to its utmost capacity. Hundreds had to be turned away. Dr. Henry spoke impressively and earnestly, carrying his audiences completely with him. The Jubilee Singers were at their best. Revs. T. Smart and W. Howard May presided, respectively. A large overflow meeting was held in the Temperance Hall. The demonstrations have caused a sensation in the city."

The campaign was continued in the Albert Hall on Monday and Tuesday last, when large audiences were attracted, and public interest in the temperance cause was greatly stimulated. Many persons signed the pledge during the meetings.

FUTURE ARRANGEMENTS.

Oct. 18-21, Leeds (Town Hall, afternoon at 3, week-day evenings at 8, Sunday evening at 8.15); 23, Bradford (St. George's Hall); 24, Huddersfield; 25, Nottingham (Albert Hall); 26-28, Leicester (Melbourne Hall); 29-31, Liverpool; Nov. 2-5, Norwich (2-3, Calvert Street Free Methodist Church; 4-5, St. Andrew's Hall). Meetings will follow at Cambridge, Manchester, Wolverhampton, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Portsmouth, and Brighton; particulars of which will be duly announced.

Personalia.

Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Haifa Mission, Mount Carmel, is on a visit to this country, and will be glad to avail himself of opportunities for addressing meetings in behalf of the work. His address is, care of Mr. R. Morgan, 138, Clifden Road, Clapton, N.E.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Varley intend leaving England shortly on a visit to their daughter at Northfield, who for the last five years has assisted in the literary work of Mr. Moody's institutions. Mr. Varley will spend the winter holding missions in various cities in the States.

Our readers will learn with sincere regret of a breakdown in the health of Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who is at present residing at his Scottish home, Orchill, near Braco, Perthshire. He is feeling severely the strain of over forty years of public life. Christian friends will do well to remember in prayer one who is widely esteemed for his work's sake.

Rev. James Wall, of Rome, is still laid aside by illness, and friends are asked to continue in prayer for his recovery. Mrs. Wall writes: "As yet we cannot see any very marked improvement. The weakness is so very great; but we are not discouraged, as our eyes are ever towards Him who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think.

Mr. Charles Carter, secretary of the Australian Evangelization Society, who recently paid a brief visit to this country, writes of his return voyage:—"A large number of Christians were on board, and a committee was formed to carry out arrangements for holding many services. I was elected chairman, and we had, in addition to seven services each Sunday, a week-evening meeting. We have had the joy of meeting inquirers, and all classes on board the White Star steamer Afric rallied round us, including the captain and his officers."

About Books.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

From the Religious Tract Society.

The Girl's Own Annual (Vol. xxii.) is a wonderful collection of wholesome reading. There are long stories by Ethel Turner, Leslie Keith, Mrs. G. de Horne Vaizey, and Emma Richards, with many short stories by other popular writers. The main feature of the Annual, however, is the large variety of helpful papers for sensible girls. The Boy's Own Annual (Vol. xxiii.) has the usual features—stories of thrilling adventure, and papers on the various interests that engage growing lads in well-conducted homes. Sports and pastimes have their place, and useful occupations are described and advocated. Both these handsome volumes are profusely illustrated. (8s. each.)

Among magazines for home reading, the Sunday at Home still occupies a worthy place. The new volume contains serials by Amy Le Feuvre and David Lyall, and a host of other interesting items for the Sabbath enjoyment and profit of every member of the Christian household. Bishop Moule's "Thoughts for the Day of Days," and the "Notes for the Month," are among the best contents. The Leisure Hour has many short stories, also Silas K. Hocking's "Awakening of Anthony Weir." The biographical sketches, and the "Notes on Science and Discovery," are deeply interesting. These volumes also are admirably illustrated, and there are numerous plates, coloured and monotint. (7s. 6d. each.)

Smaller volumes are:—Our Little Dots—a grand book for the infants; The Child's Companion—a great improvement upon the favourite paper of our childhood; Light in the Home—a bright successor of the old "Tract Magazine"; and The Cottager and Artisan—with large-type readings and splendid pictures, for the homes of the people. These volumes are all very attractive, both within and without. (1s. 6d. each.)

A peculiar and tender interest attaches to the history of the Martyr Church of Madagascar, and this is well brought out in narrative form by Rev. J. J. Kilpin Fletcher under the title The Sign of the Cross in Madagascar (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier). The book is well fitted to enlist the fullest sympathy of youthful readers.

As in former years, Messrs. Marshall Bros. have published The Keswick Week, containing the whole of the addresses delivered at the annual Convention at Keswick. A perusal of these pages will recall hallowed memories in the hearts of such as attended, while those for whom attendance at the Convention was impossible may, by reading, enter into the spirit and share the privilege of the meetings. (2s.)

"The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." This might well be the motto of The Awakening of Anthony Weir, by Silas K. Hocking. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) A young man who enters the ministry merely as a profession is awakened to the spiritual realities through fiery trial. The temptations of ministerial and social life are vividly portrayed, and the faithful ones are shown to be the true overcomers. Many deep and far-reaching lessons are taught.

Messrs. Partridge have issued some capital books for the young—pictorial inside and out. Father Time will assist in teaching the little ones "how to tell the time"; it will also furnish more general entertainment. Other books, similar in size, with admirable illustrations, are Happy Playmates, pictures and stories; Our Pets' Picture Book; and Bible Pictures and Stories, in two series, one for the Old Testament, and one for the New (all 1s. each). Sweet Blossom, and Sweet Stories Record, are smaller, but good (6d. each). A new series of picture-books (3d. each) includes Toby and Kits, By the Sea, and Bible Stories (two series).

The Evangel of the Risen Christ, by Henry Varley. (3s. 6d. Alfred Holness). The Evangel of a Christ who was dead, but is alive, is the only true and glorious Gospel of the blessed God, and the starting-point for the preaching of that Gospel by lips and by pen is a Cross and a Tomb, both of which are empty. Mr. Varley does good service in stirring up our minds by way of remembrance of this central truth, and his résumé of the evidences for the Saviour's resurrection is distinctly useful. With this central idea in mind and heart, the author sets to work to show how it gives the clue by which heresy may be avoided, sacerdotalism exposed, the highest spiritual life realized, a strong grip upon the Deity of our Lord attained, and a firm footing kept upon the Word of God amid the critical discussions of the day.

Two of the papers read by Mrs. Creighton at the Brighton Conference of the National Union of Women Workers have been published—A Purpose in Life, and The Modern Home. (2d. each. Wells Gardner.)

Evangelistic.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough at Bristol.

At Anvil Street Congregational Church, St. Philip's, Bristol, Mr. C. E. Barraclough recently conducted a mission which has had a remarkable spiritual effect. The word was with power, and many, both young and old, including some of the boldest servants of sin, have sought the Saviour, while the church members have been inspired with renewed zeal and earnestness to labour for the Master in a dark and difficult place. The pastor, Rev. J. B. Uffer, and Mrs. Uffer rendered valuable assistance.

Archway Road Chapel, N.

The mission at Archway Road Wesleyan Chapel, Highgate, N., conducted by Rev. Edward Davison, which concluded on October 1, was a time of spiritual awakening. Preliminary arrangements were carefully made by a large committee, under the direction of Rev. F. M. Parkinson, and 3,000 houses were visited and canvassed, with the result that a large number of strangers attended the services. The mission proved a blessing to many souls. In response to the faithful and loving appeals of the missioner large numbers decided for Christ, and old members at Archway Road can remember no such rousing times in the chapel's history.

Rev. C. H. Yatman at Belfast.

A mission in Belfast, conducted by Rev. C. H. Yatman, was commenced on Sunday, October 7, in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. In the afternoon the splendid hall was crowded in every part, and at night a vast congregation gathered. Mr. Yatman's addresses created a profound impression, and night after night, throughout succeeding evenings, large assemblies listened to the appealing words of the preacher. Bible readings in the afternoons have also attracted large numbers, principally of the business community. Local ministers rendered cordial support, and a fine choir has been organized.

Mr. Henry Varley at Inverness.

Mr. Henry Varley's visit to Inverness has proved to be a most inspiring evangelistic effort. Day by day, whether in teaching or preaching, the interest has extended or increased. On Sabbath last the evangelist had a busy day. Four services were held; the first in the Baptist Church, which was crowded. At 3 p.m., the large music hall was filled with men only, who took the deepest interest in Mr. Varley's address. At 6.30, the Free High Church (Dr. Black's) was crowded, and again at 8.15, the closing meeting of the day furnished the West Parish Church with another large assembly. Expressions of regret are heard that the well-known preacher could not have extended his mission.

Mr. Monro Collings at Wakefield.

Great blessing has attended the closing meetings in connection with Mr. Collings' Y.M.C.A. campaign at Wakefield; and the hearts of many are full of praise for what God has wrought. Night by night the congregations increased, until, on a few occasions, many had to be turned away. The results have been good, and many persons, both young and old, have professed conversion to God; among whom was one who says he "has not been sober for the last sixteen years." Many Christians have received blessing, and the end is not yet, for there are signs of greater blessing to follow. Mr. Collings proved to be a hard worker. On the last Sunday he spoke five times. Besides the ordinary mission services during the week he preached in several of the mills, at the police barracks to the men of the West Riding Constabulary, and in many chapels.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Another fruitful mission has just been concluded in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E. There is no other hall in England where so many services have been held consecutively, and where after the lapse of time so large a congregation can always be found. The attendances have been exceptional during the past month, and on four successive nights the place was packed from floor to ceiling, while on the Harvest Festival Sunday it was filled an hour before the usual time of service, and as many, it is computed, were turned away as were inside. Mr. John T. Leafe, from Hanley, Staffordshire, was the preacher during the month. This was his first mission in Mile End. From the beginning, it was evident that he was much appreciated, and his abilities as a preacher won for him the affections of the people. His matter is well thought out; as one working man remarked in his own quaint style, "Well, he does larn us something, don't he?" The faithful deliverance of the old truths has again proved the power of God unto salvation, and many were those who sought the Saviour. Some very interesting cases of conversion have taken place, in some instances of persons who were in London on a visit, and, during sight-seeing, called in "just to see what was going on." Believers were greatly stimulated and helped by the excellent practical addresses given to Christians.

Whitefield's Tabernacle.

In his mission at Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, W., Mr. W. R. Lane has been greatly used of God. The district is a difficult one, but day after day large numbers came together and listened to the searching messages of the missioner. Conviction was everywhere manifest. There was emotion, but emotion that was linked with judgment, Mr. Lane being evidently conscious that sin and salvation must be submitted to heart and mind if Christ is to have true dominion. Many persons came out for the Lord, the greater number being young men and young women. Excitement of an unhealthy kind was entirely absent. Spring breezes were blowing in the autumn days, and the Lord's trees were revived, and those in whom the seeds of truth had been prayerfully sown gave proof of the mighty power of God. Some very remarkable cases of conversion were noted. One night the pastor told how, when he was a child of eight, he had fallen into a flooded river, and was in imminent danger of drowning. He was rescued by a dear young fellow, who subsequently married, and, dying at the age of twenty-six, left a widow with two little children. The elder of the two had been converted in the Tabernacle the night before. "God only knows how fully I am rewarded," said he, "by this one thing for all the burden-bearing the rebuilding of the Tabernacle has entailed." We humbly bless God for Mr. Lane's gracious labours, and expect a harvest far exceeding what our eyes have yet beheld. We waited on God, and He hath glorified Himself.

George A. Suttle.

London Tent Campaign.

The mission at Deptford has been remarkably well attended, especially on Sundays and Thursdays, when the tent has been crowded. The earnest appeals of Mr. W. Grove have been listened to with the deepest attention and sympathy, and numbers have stayed each evening for prayer and religious conversation. During the month special meetings have been held by Revs. John Wilson, of Woolwich; Dr. Robertson, of Glasgow; J. T. Chenhalls, and Mr. Leonard Weaver. On three evenings lantern services have attracted large audiences; one for children was attended by about 500, who paid the closest attention. Mr. Grove has been supported by an earnest band of helpers, and many have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, while a very large number have signed the temperance pledge. The closing meeting was addressed by Mr. Grove, Rev. J. T. Chenhalls, the chairman, and Mr. Harmsworth, the secretary of the local committee. The new converts were strongly urged to remain faithful to Christ, to cultivate prayer and the study of the Bible, and to enter upon definite Christian service. One of the chief features of the Mission has been the singing of Madame Annie Ryall, whose message reached many hearts.

A united rally of lady workers and friends interested in the campaign will be held in the Friends' Meeting House, Devonshire House, 12, Bishopsgate Street Without, on Tuesday, October 22, at 7 p.m. Lady Agnes Anderson has kindly promised to preside, and Mrs. Darlow Sarjeant, Miss Grace Petmann, Mr. Leonard Weaver, Mr. Garstin and others will speak. The Central Council still require some £500 to close this year's work free of debt.

The Railway Mission.

Much blessing has been experienced during the past few weeks among the railway men at various branches of the Railway Mission. Mr. Cheeseman has just conducted a mission at Halifax, which has been a time of ingathering; a good number of the people professed to trust Christ, and others have been convicted of sin. One man employed in the goods department, who professed conversion during the mission, once held a good position in the town, but was brought low through the drink. He is now witnessing brightly for Christ among his mates. A railway-man's wife came to the Lord one night, and the next evening brought her daughter, who was also led to trust the Saviour.

At Swindon, too, the workers are rejoicing over some striking cases of blessing. Clubs where men can get drink when the public-houses are closed, on Sundays as well as on other days, are a curse of Swindon; but among those who have lately been converted were two men who had been members of a club and foremost in drinking and card playing. Now they are testifying brightly to the saving and keeping power of the Lord Jesus Christ. A foreman porter who was also given to drink has recently come out for the Lord, and another man, who had been an infidel, is now an earnest Christian.

The work at York has been full of encouragement, a bright band of young railway men having come out for Christ during the summer. One of them writes:—"Thank God that ever the Railway Mission came to York."

The Railway Mission Convalescent Homes at St. Leonards and Southport have also been the means of much blessing to the men, and a number of the patients have yielded to God during their stay at the homes. The startling fact that no fewer than 15,698 railway men were injured in the United Kingdom last year, shows the great need for these convalescent homes. Prayer is earnestly asked for the work of the railway mission, as the increase of Sunday work on the lines makes it more difficult every year for the men to attend the services.

At the tent mission, Ranelagh, Dublin, conducted throughout September by Mr. Musa Bhai, widespread interest was aroused. The seating accommodation had to be increased, but in spite of adverse weather the tent still proved too small for the large congregations which came together on Sunday evenings. A report, forwarded by Mr. William Pickering, tells of numerous instances of blessing.

The closing services of the season in the Gospel tent at Cobo, Guernsey, were fraught with blessing. On the Sunday afternoon the tent was nearly full for a service in French, at which Pastor C. Merle d'Aubigne. In the evening Mr. B. H. Angel and Mr. J. T. Collins gave addresses. Negotiations are in progress for the erection of a permanent mission-hall for services of an undenominational character.

Open-air services have been conducted during the summer by Mr. Albert E. Pett and a band of workers at the Pond, Clapton, N.E. Crowds of non-church-going people have been attracted by the preaching of God's Word, and many have been impressed. These workers are willing to conduct Gospel services in any evangelical church or mission hall in or near London. Address Mr. Albert E. Pett, 18, Powerscroft Road, Lower Clapton, N.E.

Church of England.

Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe has celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as vicar of St. Paul's, Onslow Square, S.W.

Rev. G. W. Sall, curate of Stoke Poges, Slough, has been presented to the rectory of Pakefield, Lowestoft, in the gift of the Church Patronage Society.

It is stated with authority that the Bishop of Worcester will resign his see in November. "I owe it to the diocese," says the Bishop in a letter to his clergy dated October 7, "that I should make way for a younger man."

The Archbishop of York, in a letter to his clergy on "The Church and the War," says: "More earnestly than ever I hold fast the belief that the most urgent need of the nation at the present time is a national humiliation, not for our want of success, but for the greatness of our national sins. It may be that the nation is not yet sufficiently awakened to be prepared to take this step. There may be greater sorrows in store for us before a proud and prosperous people will consent to humble itself in the confession of its sins. But for the coming of such a time we can, at least, most earnestly pray."

Congregational.

The Women's Settlement at Middlesbrough finds a wide field for its operations now that winter approaches. Its work is growing, and the value of its influence among women and girls is increasingly recognized in the town. There is, however, great need for more workers.

At a recent conference of Sheffield Congregationalists it was decided to recommend the Association to finance temporarily the new chapel buildings at Darnall and Crookes, and to appeal to the city churches to raise £2,000 for the building funds. The two churches in question report good progress, and the conference was impressed with the urgency of their appeal.

Rev. Henry Varley, B.A., has closed his seven years' ministry at Horton Lane Chapel, Bradford. A very large and cordial gathering assembled to take formal leave of the retiring pastor. Rev. Professor Armitage, M.A., presided, and in the course of an address said that for Mr. Varley and his people alike the pastorate now ended had proved the occasion of earnest and faithful service to the great Head of the Church.

Baptist.

The week beginning November 17 has been selected as the self-denial week for London auxiliaries of the L.M.S.

Cornwall Road Church, Brixton Hill, has just concluded a fruitful series of Sunday evening open-air services. Large numbers of young men and women have gathered round, and bright, vigorous addresses have been given by the pastor, Rev. C. H. Sheen, and others.

At Peckham Rye Tabernacle on Monday, October 7, the sixth anniversary of Rev. H. J. Knight's pastorate was held. The report showed the membership to be 348. The sum of £75 was raised in connection with the services, and the occasion was one of much encouragement.

Re-opening services have been held at the church at Rochester, the pastor (Rev. G. Anderson Miller), and Rev. W. Fuller Gooch taking part. Encouraging addresses were given at a public meeting, and an increase in membership was reported. All the gatherings were large and enthusiastic.

Services of an encouraging character have been held at Waltham Abbey in connection with the ninth anniversary of Rev. George Kilby's settlement. Pastor Archibald G. Brown preached an impressive sermon, and Principal Whitehouse, of Cheshunt College, referred to the substantial work that is in progress.

Meetings for the deepening of spiritual life were held at Winchester on October 3, the topic being "Revival." A conference of ministers was held in the morning, when Rev. E. R. Pullen (Shirley) gave an address on "The Pastor's Part in Revival," which was followed by a helpful discussion. In the afternoon Rev. G. D. Hooper (Bournemouth) preached, and a public gathering followed in the evening.

Visits have been paid to Priory Street Church, York, by four former pastors, in the order of their successive pastorates—Revs. F. T. Smythe, F. B. Meyer, T. E. Cozens Cook, and E. Fisk. The visits have occasioned the meeting of many former friends and helpers of the work, and have been marked by cordial feeling and much blessing. The work of renovation and redecoration of this beautiful sanctuary has gained general approval.

The quarterly meetings of the Gloucestershire and Herefordshire Baptist Association were held at Leominster on October 3. The subject for the afternoon conference was "Church Work in the County." Mr. Beeson (Hereford) had been at great pains to prepare a large map, which he exhibited, showing the various centres of work by each denomination, and the position they respectively occupy in the towns and villages. A good number of brethren spoke on the subject, which proved one of deep interest.

Methodist.

Rev. T. Jackson, of the Whitechapel Primitive Methodist Mission, is adding rescue work to the many other agencies in operation.

Primitive Methodism at the Central Hall, Bradford, is making rapid progress. The P.S.A. is attended by nearly 1,000 persons weekly, and 100 have joined the church.

Rev. Vallance Cook, of Mayfield Road Wesleyan Church, Dalston, N.E., has just issued in booklet form the record of another year of fruitful effort. Without any circuit, Connexional, or London Mission grant, the various departments of work which are characteristic of modern missions, are carried on with most encouraging results, the directly religious work being as fruitful as the social.

A rearrangement of the Wesleyan Methodist work in connection with the Canterbury Garrison having taken place, by which the whole of it has been brought under the charge of Rev. Richard Hall, Mr. Hall invites Wesleyan parents who have sons enlisting, and who are sent to Canterbury, kindly to send the names of such to him without delay, that he may visit them and influence them for good. As a result of the weekly service instituted at the barracks three weeks ago by Mr. Hall, thirteen men are now meeting in class.

Presbyterian.

Rev. James Marchant, who has done such excellent work in Chatham, has resigned his position as assistant at St. Andrew's Church in that town, having accepted an invitation from the Yorkshire Presbytery to take up the pioneer work in the Yorkshire district, begun by Revs. J. J. Mackay, E. Ritchie, and Dr. Monro Gibson.

Rev. A. Allan has conducted services at Putney. Since he resigned his charge at Hull to devote himself for two years to work for the stirring up of the churches to a more Scriptural and more spiritual life, Mr. Allan has visited some of the Northern Presbyteries, but this is the first church he has visited in London. Much earnest thought has been aroused, the results of which will be confidently looked for in humble, thankful lives of Christian service.

The newly-erected church hall in Cranbrook Road, Bristol, in connection with Trinity Presbyterian Church, has been opened. For many years past the need has been felt for a place of worship additional to that which for the past fifty years has done good service in the city at St. James' Parade. The opening services were conducted, in the morning by Rev. W. E. Shaw, of Cardiff, Moderator of the Bristol Presbytery, and in the evening by Rev. W. B. Cooper.

Society of Friends.

At the autumn meeting of the Home Mission Committee on October 3 Charles B. Cox, of Shipston-on-Stour, gave some account of the tent work of Friends in that district. In each of five villages a fortnight's meetings had been held. Some striking pictures of the spiritual darkness of village populations were given.

John F. Hanson, in the course of his Norwegian journeys, visited Throndheim with his wife. They were cordially received at the Methodist meeting, and an open-air gathering was announced for 5 p.m. A great audience gathered, and the meeting lasted for two hours, the people sitting and standing, and giving good attention.

An encouraging commencement has been made with the series of meetings to be held at Devonshire House on First-day evenings, to which the public are invited. At the inaugural gathering Henry Brady Priestman, of Bradford, spoke impressively and fully on "Christ and the Needs of To-day," alluding, among other subjects, to the questions of drink and the housing of the people. Hymns were sung, and vocal prayer was offered by Dr. Hingston Fox, who presided.

The Railway Mission Hall at Hastings continues to be the centre of fruitful work. The former hon. superintendent, Mr. Arthur H. Habershon, recently visited the hall and conducted the Sunday services. On October 6, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch preached. A correspondent writes: "A solemn sense of God's presence was realised, and the gracious help of the Holy Spirit with the word spoken, whilst at the close of the service, tearful eyes and thankful lips testified to broken hearts bound up by the great Physician."

Fallen Asleep.

Notes & Comments

"The Christian" Almanack. Our next issue will contain, as a Supplement, a copy of The Christian Sheet Almanack, for 1902, with portrait of the Pandita Ramabai, and six illustrations of the famine rescue and other work for the benefit of the much-wronged widows of India. The daily Scripture texts have been chosen in the same prayerful spirit as in past years, and we feel assured will prove as helpful to those who read. No additional charge will be made for the Almanack.

Proposed Day of Prayer. The yearning for the termination of the war in South Africa is deepening daily, and we learn with satisfaction that friends all over the country are responding readily to Rev. F. B. Meyer's proposal, in our last issue, that Friday, November 1, should be set aside, in whole or in part, for special waiting upon God about this matter. As has been pointed out, the proposal has been made in the present form because there seemed to be no prospect of any great Church or Society taking action; and it involves no expression of opinion as to the origin or justice of the war. We assume that as a body our readers will agree as touching this thing, and upon the day named. Much more may also be done if friends will enlist others of the Lord's people in a great chain of intercession.

The Herald of Mercy. The value of a localized magazine in maintaining Gospel work is admitted on all hands; many churches and missions attribute their greater usefulness to such monthly messages delivered at the houses of the people. The inside pages convey religious instruction; the added covers announce meetings, and describe church or mission operations. Many organizations are adopting The Herald of Mercy (illustrated, ½d. monthly), in the preparation of which every care is taken to put "first things first," and drive home the Gospel appeal in a telling manner. (Particulars from Morgan & Scott.)

The Colour Line. In connection with the article, "Up from Slavery," appearing in another column, it is matter for profound satisfaction among Christian people that, among other commendable acts with which President Roosevelt has signalized the beginning of his term of office, he has entertained Mr. Booker T. Washington to dinner at the White House, an honour never before accorded to a member of the coloured race. It is not to be thought that a racial prejudice, so deep-seated as this, can be uprooted by any one or two acts, but those who are fighting the battle of obtaining justice for the down-trodden must thank God for a precedent of such an outstanding character. Only those who have made special study of the subject can appreciate the full meaning of the President's action to American society.

Working and Waiting. The difficult problem of harmonizing the two elements of activity and quietude in the religious life cannot be solved by any set rules; but the root principle is clear. The power for service comes from above; "of ourselves we can do nothing;" receptivity is, therefore, the first law of Christian life. The age is too self-reliant, in religion as in other things. "Martha," to quote Dr. Maclaren, "has it all her own way now. We hear a dozen exhortations to service, for one of sitting at the feet of Jesus in blessed receptivity. There cannot be too much work, but may be too little communion." There is nothing mawkish or unmanly in this; for we receive that we may give; we are made strong that we may serve; we are filled that we may overflow. The reservoir must be fed ere the stream can flow. We work well for God only after waiting well on him.

The Need of Lay Preachers. We are glad to see that a place of importance was given, during the Congregational Union meetings last week, to the pressing subject of lay-preaching. It was pointed out that in Methodism there are nearly sixteen lay preachers to one ordained minister, and unquestionably Methodism could never have done its great work but for the lay element which figures so largely in it. Other denominations, however, have been backward in this matter; so statistics lead us to believe. If England is to be thoroughly evangelized, the churches must make fuller use of the power of what is called (although we dislike the term) lay agency. There are great numbers of business men who might, and ought to, undertake the work of preaching in cottages, halls, and churches, but who at present content themselves with hearing sermons. There is no surer way of keeping a church healthy than that of training its Christian members to do active service for Jesus Christ. He who only receives good, generally ends by degenerating.

The Foe of the World. In the course of his presidential address at the Congregational Union, Dr. Parker spoke powerfully on the drink question. He said:—

> The traffic is the mortal enemy of all things good and sane. We must support the United Kingdom Alliance, the original moral suasion societies, Lord Peel's Report, Bands of Hope, Sunday closing proposals, and every possible form of temperance effort. Drink is the foe of the world. Drink has challenged and defied the God of Israel; let the Christian Church adequately answer the blatant and impious challenge. A sober nation will have no difficulty in settling all its own social questions.

Women and Drink. Among the most serious aspects of the drink question in recent years has been the growing conviction that, whatever progress may be made among men, women of all ages are more and more becoming the victims of intoxication. In an article which appeared in The Echo last week is given the analysis of the persons who entered two East End public-houses during a period of an hour and a half on a recent Saturday evening. In one case the entrants comprised 209 men, 380 women, 83 youths and girls, and 123 young children, in all 795. In the second 591 persons were made up of 240 men, 267 women, and 84 young persons. In the West End matters are even worse, and there is a terrible side to the statement that

> Out of every hundred deaths from alcoholic excess in England and Wales at the present time, women contribute eight more than they did twenty years ago, for (the writer adds) of all the women whom I have known who were enslaved by drink, I have never known one who was permanently set free from the habit.

Is Temperance Legislation any Good? Mr. Chamberlain's challenge to temperance advocates to point to a single temperance Act of Parliament during the last seventy years which had had any effect whatever in reducing drunkenness is very easily answered. To take only one kind of law, the effect of the Sunday Closing Acts in Scotland and Wales has been markedly beneficial in this direction. In proof, we have only to recall the report of the Welsh Commission ten years ago on the working of the Act in the Principality. It was then shown that, in spite of certain faults in the Act which made illicit drinking in the larger towns only too frequent, the general effect was that the Commissioners were thoroughly convinced of its general efficacy, and advised the Government to make it more stringent. What is wanted is more, not less, temperance legislation, and that of a kind that goes to the root of the evil, instead of compromising with it. Legislation is often spoken of as an alternative to moral suasion. Each is really the complement of the other, and they should go hand in hand.

Drink and Insanity. Insanity—one of the distinctive curses of civilization, for among savage tribes it is said to be unknown—is increasing at an alarming rate within the Metropolitan area. The causes, as explained by Mr. Hubbard, Chairman of the Asylums Committee of the L.C.C., to an interviewer, are pronounced by experts to be due predominantly to two causes. The first is alcoholism, and the second the consequence of social vice. In view of this fact, which should be more widely known than it is, temperance and social reformers should redouble their efforts to remove the causes. Especially should the education of the young, as to the results of drinking and impurity, be carried out more systematically than is often the case now-a-days.

A Self-Satisfied Nation. Lord Rosebery's recent speeches have gone to the heart of things, and it cannot but be an excellent thing that such grave and fundamental words as his should be circulated throughout the country. His epigrammatic sentence, "The nation that is satisfied is lost," will pass into current speech. His complaints of the nation's intellectual apathy, and the lazy acceptance by the majority of other men's notions, is surely well founded. At the same time, what his lordship calls "independent thoughts" need safeguarding. What the people need is real thought: the personal facing of the stern facts of the present, with some effort to comprehend their import. The danger of the movement is that our people believe the country to be impregnable in every way, and they will not face the ugly facts which tell of possible or probable decay. Stern, true thought is the first step to conversion. "I thought . . . and turned."

The Worship of Success. A letter from a correspondent in our last issue opens up a large question. Many, doubtless, like the writer, are working for God amidst great difficulties, and with but a small measure of what men call "success." Reports of great gatherings elsewhere, and numerous conversions, tend, by contrast, to depress them. It is quite human to desire the largest success, and if the motives be purified, such desires are holy. At the same time, "success" is a word that needs the most delicate usage. What men applaud as success may be regarded by God as other than that. There is, undoubtedly, a growing tendency with many to measure the work of God according to the vulgar rule, display and figures. But the only "success" we should seek is that which most exalts Christ and truly blesses men; and of which our Lord can say, "Ye did it unto Me." Whatever fails of this ideal is a failure indeed—however imposing its show.

A Spiritualist's Confession. A few days ago the New York Herald published the confession of Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, a famous spiritual medium of Boston, whose services had been used by the Society for Psychical Research in its investigations of the supernatural. It is well that wide publication should be made of her conviction that her trance seances "furnish no evidence whatever of the possibility of communication with the other world"; and that she frankly attributes the bewildering phenomena to telepathy and hypnotism. Very much indeed has been built on this side of the Atlantic, as well as in America, on Mrs. Piper's "messages," and we shall watch eagerly for the result of her new statement: "I must truthfully say I do not believe that the spirits of the dead have spoken through me when I have been in a trance." In another part of her statement she goes on to add:—

> I never heard of anything being said by myself during a trance which might not have been latent in my own mind, or in the mind of the person in charge of the sitting, or in the mind of the person trying to get communication with some one in another state of existence, or of some companion present with such a person, or in the mind of some absent person alive somewhere else in the world.

The "Church Times" and the King. The attack of the Church Times on the King for having attended service at the Presbyterian parish church during his stay in Scotland, on the plea that no one can "profess two religions," is as ambiguous as it is in bad taste. Does the writer claim that Presbyterianism and Anglicanism represent two "religions"? If so, it must be in a meaning of the word religion peculiar to the Church Times. Bigotry goes very far when sacred words are bandied about in a way so grotesquely inaccurate and offensive. The King is only doing what his beloved mother had done all her life, to the great satisfaction of her subjects in both countries, and he is not likely to listen to a protest so narrow and carping. Meanwhile, the Church Times has made a still further revelation of the true "inwardness" of the sacerdotal movement, which can scarcely commend itself to the good sense of English people.

What of Armenia? The friends of Armenia have reason to be very anxious as to what is going on in that unfortunate country. No news is bad news under Turkish Government, and an ominous silence reigns over the district where outrages and massacres are suspected to have occurred. For two months the region of Sassoon has been cut off from communication with the outside world, being surrounded by hordes of fierce and cruel Kurds. The Armenian population amounts to 10,000 souls, whose brave resistance to Turkish misrule has caused the Government to build forts in the heart of the country. What has just been happening there, is a matter of conjecture and of dread. Here is a call for earnest intercessory prayer on the part of all devout and loving souls.

Missionary Pioneers. There is one side of the missionary life to which but little attention is given, and yet it is of great value and importance to the State. In very many instances he is the pioneer of that civilization which there is a tendency to-day to rate above the Gospel, but which, in its best and highest form, is the fruit of Christianity. The Bishop of Ripon claimed some time ago that the man who had shown himself the profoundest and most intelligent student of anthropology, and who by means of his observations had contributed greatly to the development of the science, was a missionary in the Sandwich Islands.

> They had spread all over the world men who were not merely contributors to the sum total of human knowledge, but men supported by that large and splendid and heroic enthusiasm which was calculated to lift the spiritual character of the whole human race.

Such work in science is, however, but subsidiary, and any assistance which may be given to scientific knowledge, or social progress, can never be adequate motive for the diffusion of missionary work throughout the world. The true basis of that is the Divine command, "Go ye into the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." The moral and physical improvement of the races follows as a natural consequence.

More Missionary Criticism. The work of Christian missions to the heathen is not allowed to rest for long from the attacks of critics. Major Keith, who has distinguished himself as an archæologist, writes to the Times a startling letter in which he criticises mission work in India as being—well, a failure, for that is what it amounts to. He would have missionaries confine themselves to the material welfare of the people, and leave their ancestral religions alone, on the ground that they are too much part of the national character to be ever disturbed. To Christian people such a criticism is simply ridiculous, and we should certainly not notice it here but for its appearance in so influential a journal as The Times. All we have to say is, that if Major Keith is consistent, he would not even advocate interference with the material condition of the people, since that is very largely the product of their religious ideas. But why do people rush into print and offer criticisms upon work which it is obvious they only imperfectly understand?

Roads to Rome. The Romanists in this country have just issued a book under the above title, with the avowed intention of showing poor Protestants how they may reach Rome. One thing, which comes out very prominently in the volume, justifies, to the hilt, the attitude that we, in common with all Protestant papers, have assumed towards the Romeward movement in the Church of England; for a number of writers in this volume attribute their "conversion" to the teaching they received at "advanced" High churches, and to practices with which they were familiarized, such as might be seen any day in a Romish chapel. We wonder if, in face of these confessions and of the recent "conversions" of High Church "priests" to Rome, the traitors in the Anglican camp will still have the effrontery to deny their Romeward trend.

The Bible Society and the Revised Version. The decision of the Bible Society to send forth editions of the Revised Version of the Bible side by side with (and not in opposition to) the Authorized Version, will be hailed with satisfaction by those who desire the dissemination of true Biblical knowledge. It is twenty years since the Revised New Testament was published, and sixteen years since the Old Testament came into general circulation. Meanwhile, those who have wished to possess copies have had to go to the only source where it was available — the University Presses. In future, the two versions will be obtainable from the B. and F.B.S. The older version will, no doubt, still be preferred by many, both in their private and public reading; but a knowledge of the Revised renderings is essential to a fuller grasp of the meaning of the original Hebrew and Greek; and the study of both versions should be encouraged, especially among readers who do not understand those languages, since they often bring home the truth by a kind of binocular process to the mind.

The Sabbath for Man. The working man's indifference to Lord's Day observance is likely to recoil on his own head. There is an instinctive dislike among the wealthier people to demand service on the Day of Rest from such as conscientiously object to Sunday labour; but where the religious motive does not exist, those leisured classes who have ceased to observe Sunday religiously will gradually encroach on the leisure of the working classes, and demand that their wants be attended to. There is, in fact, only one effectual and finally defensible basis for the Day of Rest, and that is the religious basis. Even the economic question cannot withstand the steady onslaught of selfish ease on the helplessness of grinding poverty—the one forcing the other to do its bidding. Christ is the true guardian of the Day of Rest.

An Army in Gaol. The Inspector-General of Military Prisons has just issued his report, and it is very disheartening to learn from it that during last year the gaol accommodation has been "seriously strained," the military prisoners in England and Wales numbering no fewer than 7,357, as compared with 4,583 in the previous year. Some of the prisons were overcrowded, and this "notwithstanding the occupation of every prison and barrack cell in the country, and notwithstanding the transfer to (civil) criminal prisons of 2,696 military offenders." Similarly, at the Cape the gaol accommodation has been found insufficient. The Inspector-General ventures to hope for satisfactory results from improved methods of dealing with military offenders, but, in face of the painful statistics, it is somewhat difficult to take an optimistic view of the matter. In front of these figures it is difficult to accept all we are being told just now as to the value of the military life in the formation and development of the best points of character. Perhaps, however, if more attention were given to the moral and spiritual welfare of the soldier the prison statistics would prove less startling. Apart, altogether, from any higher view, expenditure in this direction would be far more economical than the vast outlay upon gaols.

Religious Self-Complacency.

LORD ROSEBERY has just reminded his fellow-countrymen of a great national danger, which he calls "self-complacency." His timely words have more aspects than those on which he touched. It would not be too much to say that "self-complacency" is the special sin of the typical religious man and woman of the day.

Complacency is a form of self-satisfaction that has a specious and harmless aspect. It recognizes a certain satisfactory attainment of character and condition. It breathes of appreciation and contentment with things as they are. It looks back and sees improvement; it looks around and recognises its superiority; it looks forward and sees nothing about which to be disquieted. In itself, it has a peculiarly happy frame of mind, and carries itself with the air of one of the vital virtues.

AN UNWORTHY QUALITY.

And yet complacency is a poor, thin, unworthy quality in anyone. Properly speaking, it is an impossible feeling to a serious mind, which looks at life with open eyes. This is not a world surely in which any man has a right to feel "complacent," whether with things without or within him. Life is full of tragedy, and sorrow, and shame; souls are ruined every day all round us by coarse, animal temptations, or by carefully-woven nets of iniquity: the foolish and the unwary fall by the way, and are caught up by the terrible forces of retribution in the midst of their wayward career. Can any lover of his kind see these things and assume the smile of one who sees nothing but the shallow glitter and sheen of life, and cries "All is well"? Can any man who looks within his own heart, and notes its condition in the light of God's revelation of Himself in the Gospel, be complacent for long?

A DEFINITION SUGGESTED.

The first evil of complacency is thus an oblivion of the undesirable facts of life. The second, is the fact that it considers itself incapable of improvement. It has lost sight of the ideal. It accepts itself as it is, with the air that everything is quite satisfactory and as it should be. This attitude is the death-knell of all true aspiration, all noble endeavour. The self-complacent man has ceased to strive, to run, to struggle, after betterment. Such a soul is either dead or sleeping, and needs to be awaked ere it can truly live. It is a state of mind incapable of producing a saint, a reformer, or even an honest Christian. It has nothing in common with the Master, who said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!"

ILLUSION AND REMEDY.

The conditions of modern life are only too favourable to the fostering of this vice which apes virtue. No great calamity, or revolution, or desolating epidemic has visited our country for long years. All but the very poor are in possession of comforts undreamt of till a few years ago. Shameful crimes are comparatively rare, and are more and more pushed into the background. Suburban life removes out of sight the sordid sights of poverty and squalor. And so men tend to grow smug, and congratulate themselves on the "rate of progress" and the speedy approach of the social millennium.

The remedy for religious complacency is a more serious and open-minded attention to life's realities as distinguished from its appearances; a more reverent study of God's Word and of its holy demands of the soul. Complacency can only exist in minds that look downwards. The upward glance breeds reverence and humility—the beginning of that wisdom which is from above.

"Hid in the House of God."

By Rev. G. P. McKAY, Stoke Newington.

"And he was with them hid in the house of God six years; and Athaliah reigned over the land" (2 Chron. xxii. 12).

GREAT David's Lord was near to watch o'er David's line. "In the time of trouble He shall hide me in his pavilion; in the secret of his tabernacle shall He hide me." So had the royal singer sung, and so did the royal seed experience; for "Jehoshabeath, the daughter of the King, took Joash, the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the King's sons that were slain, and put him and his nurse in a bedchamber. So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of King Jehoram, the wife of Jehoiada the priest (for she was sister of Ahaziah), hid him from Athaliah, so that she slew him not. And he was with them hid in the house of God six years." Truly, God is great! Here was He quietly preparing to undo all that the Evil One supposed he had accomplished. While Athaliah was rearing her high tower, and seating herself so proudly and blasphemously upon it, there was growing near by, within the partially-demolished house of God, a young cedar, of the Lord's own saving and planting, which would bring about her overthrow and death.

A WOMAN'S COURAGE.

The Lord had carefully prepared his instruments; and it is good to note that the first one was a woman. Thus was the sex redeemed. A woman's wrath had wrought the havoc, and it was fitting that a woman's work should save the situation. Indeed, against that woman's wickedness none but a woman's wit was likely to prevail. Jehoshabeath might not, at the beginning, know all that she was accomplishing. Maternal pity for the helpless infant doomed to death, may first have moved her, but she would also feel that she was circumventing wickedness. The deed was vile and most inhuman, which the godless Queen had set her heart upon, and whatever might develop from the rescue of the babe, Jehoshabeath would have the commendation of her conscience when she formed the scheme for its accomplishment.

Patriotic loyalty was in her heart, along with firm devotion to the God of Israel. She felt that it was needful someone should protect the royal seed, and, at whatever risk, she would endeavour to defend it. The risk was great, but her dependence on Jehovah was complete, so, in his name, and for his sake, Jehoshabeath wrought out her plan. Her name is not so widely known as it deserves to be. She is one of the bravest of the Bible heroines, and what she did for Judah and for all the race should never be forgotten. Jehoshabeath preserved the line of David, and so kept the course clear for the coming of great David's greater Son.

THE PART OF A MAN OF GOD.

Another instrument which God employed was the devoted husband of Jehoshabeath. He had absolute trust in her, and joined her in the dangerous plan. He had full confidence in God, and knew that He was strong to save. He trusted also in the faithfulness of God to his own word. The signs of the times might seem to be against Him. Men's hearts all around might be failing them for fear. The popular cry might be, "Baal is the god of gods," and none in Israel or Judah might be ready to confess the God of their great fathers. But brave Jehoiada held on his way. "Though I should die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee," expressed most truthfully his spirit. There was no idle boasting in him. If need be, he would face the world alone.

Among the faithless, faithful only he:
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal.
Nor number, nor example with him wrought,
To swerve from truth, or change his mind,
Though single.

Calmly this man of God held on his way. Year after year went by, but as with Jehoshabeath, so with her spouse, there was no slackening in his devotion to the child, nor withdrawal of his confidence in God. He was assured that all that had been promised unto David's seed would be fulfilled. "Behold," said he, "the King's son shall reign, as the Lord hath said of the sons of David." Lord, give us such a faith as this! We need it at the present time. "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not"; "evil men and seducers wax worse and worse." It is hard to see how the kingdom of this world can become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. Still, given Jehoiada's faith, we shall use his words, and say, "The King's Son shall reign, as the Lord hath said."

Jesus shall reign, where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more.

ATHALIAH DISCOMFITED—JEHOVAH VINDICATED.

In due time Athaliah was discomfited, and God was vindicated. Her evil deeds and rigorous rule prepared the nation for a revolution, and when Jehoiada let some of the leaders of the people, and the Levites, into the secret that the whole of David's sons had not been slain, but that one was there securely hidden in the house of God, their joy was great, and readily they entered into covenant that he should be enthroned. Men of faith have oft been called day-dreamers, and impractical; but Jehoiada showed consummate skill to plan, and decision of character to achieve, the overthrow of the usurper and the enthronement of the rightful heir. The plot was carefully prepared; boldly and calmly was it executed. Joash received his crown, while Athaliah met the fate that she deserved. "And all the people of the land rejoiced; and the city was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the sword."

Let it be Now.

How long halt ye between two opinions?

Let it be now, the choice is before us.
Come, while the Saviour so tenderly yearns;
Let it be now heaven's joybells in chorus
Ring out the tidings—a lost one returns.

Let it be now, if life is beginning,
Now on the threshold of days yet to be;
Losing your life, a new one you're winning,
A life that will last thro' eternity.

Let it be now, tho' years have been squandered,
Living for this world in pleasure or sin;
He will receive you tho' far you have wandered,
Grant you his Spirit—a new life within.

Let it be now, though life is declining,
Feebler the step, fast failing the sight;
Why should you linger, hopeless, repining?
Trust Him. He'll grant you at eventide light.

Let it be now! Come, helpless, believing,
Pleading his merits, in lowliness bow;
Pardon and cleansing, new life receiving,
O let it be now! Yes, let it be now.

Pastor Hugh D. Brown's Work.—Thanksgiving Day at Harcourt Street Baptist Chapel, Dublin, was made the occasion of an effort to extinguish all debt on the "Old Ladies' Home," "Mothers' Meetings," and the "College." This was preceded by a special week of prayer "that God may supply all needs, and grant a winter of spiritual revival." The needs of such Christian work in Dublin may well command the sympathy and prayer of friends in a wider circle. Mr. Brown's address is—"Glengyle," Rathgar, Dublin.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, October 27. Ephesians ii.

THE Bible is full of the divinest optimism as to the destiny to which the believer is to be raised, in union with the Son of God; but it never scruples to depict, with no mincing of words, our desperate condition by nature. Though we be raised with Christ in the Divine purpose, and are seated with Him in the heavenlies, yet must we never forget that we were once dead—dead in law, for we had forfeited our life; and dead in experience, because, though our body, our mind, and, to some extent, our moral nature were alive, our spirit had no faith, or love, or hope towards God. Look to the hole of the pit, whence thou wast digged, and then to the height of privilege whither thou hast been raised, and magnify the grace of God. Again and again the Apostle lays stress on that note of grace. Notice how established and exalted your position is, O Christian soul. In God's purpose you are seated in Christ above the power of the enemy. Keep your position, through faith, and in the power of the Holy Spirit. Live as an heir of the throne, and in the enjoyment of your Father's rich provision.

Note, also, the true position of works (9, 10). We do not work up to salvation, but down from it. We are not saved by works; but, being saved, we work. All our life is a divine plan or poem. "We are his workmanship" might be rendered "We are his poem," as though the Divine Poet had put a distinct thought into each human life, setting it to music. The good works have been prepared, it is for us to walk in them. He will show where the path lies.

Let us cultivate the spirit of love to all who are one with us in that mystical body of which Christ is the Head, and in that building of which He is the chief Corner-stone. Jew and Gentile are one in Christ—how much more the members of the various Christian folds.

MONDAY, October 28. Ephesians iii.

It seems as though this chapter were a long parenthesis, for after the word Gentiles, the Apostle breaks into a glowing description of the stewardship or dispensation, with which he had been entrusted, and it is only when he has reached the doxology and its Amen, that he returns to the note with which he started—the prisoner of Christ Jesus.

What pathos there is in this designation! The Apostle was willing to bear all the sufferings which his trusteeship for the Gentiles involved, if only he might make known to them the meaning of that secret of God which touched them so nearly. He speaks of himself as entrusted with two secrets on behalf of the Gentiles—that Christ was willing to indwell their hearts (Col. i. 25-27), and that they might be fellow-heirs, members, and sharers in all the privileges of the Gospel with the Jews (6). This was not clearly apprehended before his time, and it was a matter of direct and specific revelation to himself; but how it enhanced the glory of Jesus! What a proof it was of his unsearchable riches!

There are two great prayers in this Epistle. The first is in the first chapter. The Gospel was so wonderful that it seemed to Paul impossible for men to realize its glory, unless they were taught of God; so he was continually praying that a spirit of wisdom and revelation might be given to converts (i. 18). But this prayer is for strength (14-19), that they might be strengthened with power, for on this depended their constant sense of the indwelling of Christ, and the habits of faith, hope, and love. There is possible an abiding sense of Christ in the heart, which brings with it a perpetual experience and exhibition of the love of God; and this in turn brings with it, even here, the blessedness of Heaven, which is the Home of Love. But no one saint or set of saints can apprehend it all. We need to apprehend it "with all saints." Lift your expectations to the God who surpasses our highest thoughts.

TUESDAY, October 29. Ephesians iv.

To walk worthy of God, worthy of the high calling wherewith we are called, and worthy of the blood by which we were purchased—this is no ordinary achievement, and it is only possible when we are lowly and humble, and guard against everything that would interfere with, or grieve the spirit of love, which is the Spirit of God. We are one with all believers in the body of Christ, and nothing on our part can make the union more steadfast and abiding; but we must endeavour in thought and speech to keep that unity. Chrysostom, as a young man, kept silent for days together, to break himself of a bad habit of detraction.

What a glorious paragraph this is about gifts! We have equal rights to the divine grace, but we are differently endowed as to gift. It is as Christ, the ascended Lord, determines, whether less or more. The differences in gift are due to the great work of perfecting the saints, which cannot be realized by any single ministry, but requires many differing ones. The one object is to perfect—i.e., adjust or set in joint—the saints, that through them the Saviour, who is the Head of the Church, may be able to continue his work of ministry. Notice what the Apostle says about the joints, which are the hinges of the body. If you are only a joint, on which two other bones rest, and to which they are attached, be sure to supply your expected quota to the well-being of the whole. Rheumatism of the joints will upset the entire body.

Notice the aorists, the decisive acts of verses 22-24. There are decisive moments in our lives, when we definitely, and for ever, slough off our old habits and manners, and put on the character of the Lord Jesus; or, better, the sap of his risen life causes the dead foliage to drop off in the spring.

WEDNESDAY, October 30. Ephesians v.

O my soul, it is a high calling for thee to imitate God (R.V. v. 1), and to walk in love after the measure of Christ's (v. 2). It is too much for thee unless thou didst open thy innermost secret to the Holy Ghost to work in thee the life and love thou longedst to manifest. And how canst thou hope or expect to be free of all the sins that mark the lives of the ungodly, unless thou dost always walk in the light, bathed and saturated by its sacred lustre, till as a diamond thou art able to give out, even in darkness, that which thou hast received? Awake thee, put on thy beautiful garments! Arise and shine, for Christ shall shine on thee, in thee, and through thee, unto the perfect day!

Every heart must have its secret joy and song. Let not thine be in sense and riot, but in the Holy Ghost. Be filled with Him. All He wants of thee is room, emptiness, willingness. Yield to Him more and more, and as thou givest, He will take; and as He takes, the life of God in thee will break forth into music. Thou wilt speak to others in songs of love and hope; thou wilt speak to God in glad thanksgiving (v. 19).

When most full of the Spirit, we are most lovely in our relations to the inmates of our homes. The infilling of the Spirit is not transcendental, but practical; not for the mystic, but for the wear and tear and fret of daily life. Wives, husbands, parents, children are better for it (22-33).

THURSDAY, October 31. Ephesians vi.

It is good to ground the elementary duties of daily life on what is right (v. 1). In training children, always bring them down to this bedrock. Accustom a child to listen to the infallible voice of conscience, speaking in the depths of the heart. If parents are only careful to educate their children aright, they need not doubt about receiving their due honour and respect in after years. The parents who are not honoured are they who have spoilt their children, and have loved them with a selfish love, that has not aroused itself to correct their faults.

How dignified service becomes, when we remember that our Lord took the form of a servant, as being the noblest position that earth could afford, and that He accepts all acts of lowly service as done to Himself. The fact that we receive wages, less or more, that we are called to serve good masters or froward, ought not to affect the earnestness, thoroughness, and good temper of our service.

It is most important to ponder the announcements of the closing paragraph, which lifts the veil from the moral and spiritual darkness of the world, and shows us the evil spirits which are at the back of it. Behind the whole system of the drink traffic and other gigantic idolatries and evils by which men are held in thrall, there are evil spirits (Dan. x.); and to combat them successfully, we must be holy, truthful, pure in heart, and filled with the spirit of faith and prayer. Sisera, you must go forth to the battle, but you need a Deborah to deal with the forces that are unseen by mortal eye. Joshua may fight, but the real victory is being won by Moses on the mount.

FRIDAY, November 1. Philippians i.

It is extremely difficult to compress this Epistle, which is the tenderest and most personal of them all. Every word merits consideration; every paragraph is full of "linked sweetness, long drawn out." Let us notice the personal references:—

"I thank my God" (3). Let us in dark hours enumerate the many mercies we have received from God, especially in the loving fellowship of kindred souls.

"I long after you" (8). Christians are not Stoics. They abide in the will of God, not allowing their affection to dominate their conduct, but they love and long for the absent.

"And this I pray" (9). Nothing relieves the yearning of friendship like asking Christ to do for our dear ones all that we would do, were we at hand—and more.

"I would have you know" (12). When we have good news to tell, how the blessed God has made the Marah waters of life run sweet, let us hasten to relieve the hearts of those we love, that they may rejoice with us.

"I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice" (18). This was a triumph of the grace of God. By nature, the Apostle might have wished that his detractors and enemies would speed ill. But he forgot all personal feeling in his genuine delight that Christ's name was being spoken more widely, and that his love was touching souls, whom he could not have reached. Even if the hands that sowed the seed were moved by impure motives, yet the seed was being scattered.

"I am in a strait, . . . having a desire to depart." Therefore death could not be unconsciousness, else he would be worse off when he died than whilst he lived. No, the "far better" proves that in death he would have more of the Christ he loved—"face to face." Oh, to live Christ, and to die with the light of his face glinting through the open doorway of heaven!

SATURDAY, November 2. Philippians ii.

In all Scripture, indeed in all literature, there is no passage which combines such extraordinary extremes as the opening paragraph of this chapter (1-11). The Apostle opens the golden compasses of his faith, placing one jewelled point on the throne of Divine Glory and the other at the edge of the pit, where the cross stood, and asks us to measure the vast descent of the Son of God, noticing the successive stages of his self-emptying.

It was through the grave that He passed to the Life of Resurrection and Ascension. It is in proportion as we share his death, that we experience his life. The comet that goes furthest away into the abyss stands longest and nearest beside the sun.

But the sublime visions of the Apostle of the glory of the Divine Redeemer are always linked with practical exhortation. Do nothing out of pride and vain glory. Look on the things of others. Count others better than yourself. Let the Lord's mind be your mind. Think over again his thoughts. Be penetrated and inspired by his Spirit. Stoop as He did to self-emptying, for thus you shall arise to rule. Work out what God is ever working in; and your character will shine amid the pitch darkness, as the lighthouse on a rock-bound coast, doing what it may, patiently and silently, to warn or attract, till the sun returns.

Other Lands.

In Russian Prisons.—I.

By THE EDITOR.

FOR thirteen years Dr. Baedeker has been visiting the prisons in Russia and Siberia, speaking to the prisoners individually, or in larger or smaller groups, and giving to each one who can read a New Testament in his own language. The Greek Church (notwithstanding its similarity in some respects to Rome) and the Russian Government, not only allow, but heartily and helpfully encourage, the distribution and reading of the Scriptures, which is in direct contrast to the theory and practice of Romanism. And so scrupulous are they that it shall be without error, that none is allowed to be circulated but the one authorized version, and that must have been printed in Russia. And not only so, but colporteurs and Bible agents have free tickets to travel throughout the empire, and the books are sent carriage free by rail or steamer.

The British and Foreign Bible Society, from its depôts at St. Petersburg, Tiflis, and other cities in Russia, has, in addition to its own manifold operations, supplied Dr. Baedeker, at greatly reduced rates, with many thousands of Russian New Testaments; and from other depôts, large numbers in German, Armenian, Tartar, Turkish, Grusian, Polish, Persian, Yiddish (the Hebrew Jargon translation of Mr. Bergmann), and other dialects. There are over 120 languages or dialects spoken in Russia, many of which have not yet been reduced to writing; but the Bible Society does not rest from its invaluable work in this respect. It can, however, only circulate the Russian New Testament, not the whole Bible, because the Holy Synod regards it as incomplete without the Apocrypha; the Society cannot include those books as Scripture, and is not permitted to issue the Old and New Testaments without them. Some years ago the Old Testament was issued in parts. I. to V. contained Genesis to Malachi, and were put together in a case and sold. But when that edition was exhausted, a new edition was not allowed.

THE VALUE OF BIBLE SOCIETIES.

This unostentatious Society must be regarded as one of the most effective missionary agencies in the world, and as vitally necessary to every society or agency for causing the Word of the Lord to fly swiftly through the earth. This, of course, applies to all Bible Societies, according to the extent of their operations.

Dr. Baedeker has been aided by grants from the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, and occasionally by individual contributions. But I am sure his travelling expenses, and the cost of the Scriptures purchased by himself, must form a large and unique personal contribution to the evangelization of the world in this generation—to say nothing of the labour of walking through a large building, giving several addresses, sometimes in very warm weather, with sympathies at extreme tension, drawn out by the ruined lives and darkened souls of the depressed and often hopeless prisoners, and testing everyone who claimed that he could read. I have been more than once wearied out in accompanying him; but the love he bears them, and the power of the Gospel, and the joy of the Lord, are his strength.

In going to a prison town or city, Dr. Baedeker first communicates with the officer in command, and shows his passport and authorization from the Ministry of Justice, to visit any prison he desires. Then he finds out what nationalities must be provided for, and takes his boxes of books at the time arranged.

While prison order and discipline are substantially alike everywhere, there are considerable variations according to the circumstances of the prison and prisoners, and to the qualifications, dispositions, and idiosyncrasies of those in command. But the visitor, with his interpreter and friend, was always received, not only with the respect due to the authority by which he came, but with courtesy and appreciation of the object of his coming.

THE PRIEST'S WELCOME.

In most cases the first interviews with prisoners were in rooms where a dozen or twenty, more or less, of the less serious cases, were gathered together. They were briefly addressed as sinners every one, whom God loves, and for whom He gave his Son to die. One thing was very clear—that the speaker loved them, and this always gave him an attentive ear. On one occasion, in a prison on the shore of the Caspian Sea, we were met by the priest, who was the chaplain of the prison, and who greeted Dr. Baedeker very warmly, having known him on previous visits. He was evidently deeply interested, and went through the prison with us for two or three hours, listening to the words spoken, and seeing the books given and received, his eyes sparkling, though sometimes dim with the moisture of unshed tears. He told Dr. Baedeker that when he himself gave a book to a prisoner, he remembered the sweet words he had heard from him. The priests of the Greek Church do not preach, nor have they much, if any, opportunity to hear preaching. This may explain the delight with which one who loved the Lord listened to the simple declaration of the Gospel of Christ, the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes.

The officials, from the chief officer to the warders, and the two prisoners who carried the great basket of books from place to place, entered with zest into the distribution, and if a man who could read, of whatever nationality, was overlooked, he was pointed out, and a copy given him.

In this prison, in the first room we entered, we met with a surprise. The priest called the singing master, and the prisoners' choir (an institution usual in Russian prisons) sang some sacred pieces in a way which charmed us. Mr. McGranahan, who is great on male choirs, would have been delighted.

AN INTERNATIONAL GOSPEL.

Then we passed from room to room, Dr. Baedeker speaking in German through his interpreter, Mr. Petvakan Tarayans, who translated the message into Russian, or Armenian, or Tartar. It was always a distinct and pungent declaration of man's fallen and sinful condition; no difference; the love of God; his unspeakable gift of his beloved Son; the only way of salvation through the blood of his Cross; assurance of justification and eternal life to all who come unto God by Him—an international Gospel, as the speaker termed it. This is as certainly a work of faith as it is a labour of love. The issue of these earnest and kindly talks must be looked for in the life to come; though even here there have been enough strange meetings again in unexpected places, to assure the truth of the promise, "My word shall not return unto Me void."

In one prison the first room visited contained about twenty men, all wearing chains, which clanked with a pitiful—I will not say a pitiless—monotony, for I am sure those in charge of the poor fellows truly pitied them.

Some of the men in irons had committed murder, others had escaped from Siberia. Both these classes were destined to be deported thither. There is no capital punishment in Russia, and such as would suffer death in Great Britain are sentenced to long terms of exile in Siberia. One of the men in chains was a fine-looking young fellow, a military officer, who had been tempted to embezzle £250, and was sentenced to two years and a half of hard labour. How many a life is ruined by a single act. And yet it is not really so. The act is the symptom of the disease within.

Several of these heavily-sentenced men were Asiatics, speaking languages in which no address could be given, for lack of an interpreter; but the few of them, and of other Asiatics who could read, were asked to let their comrades hear the good news from "the best of books"—"the most precious book in the world," "God's Book."

The Indian Famine.

LORD CURZON'S TESTIMONY.

THE situation is becoming increasingly grave in certain parts of India. Lord CURZON reports that "in the Central Provinces and North Deccan more rain is needed in order to secure fair crops," while "the Punjab, North-Western Provinces, Rajputana, Indore and Kathiawar, have fallen off in condition, and, over large tracts, kharif crops have totally failed, and rabi will be unsown should no rain fall."

REMEDIAL EFFORTS.

Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE, of Poona, sends encouraging words as to the utility of the supplies of food and clothing sent out through the generosity of readers of THE CHRISTIAN: "The supplies were ardently received. The number of applications has amazed me. In the course of a letter, which may be taken as a sample communication, Rev. SYDNEY NICHOLSON (L.M.S., Gooty, South India) writes to me: 'The sufferings of many will be relieved by the supply. There is still no rain, and prospects are very bad. To make things worse, we have an epidemic of cholera.' Here, in western India, the rains which had been copious so far, have suddenly and prematurely stopped, to the recrudescence of plague."

THE FAMINE WAIFS.

We continue to receive communications from mission workers, descriptive either of present needs or of a continuation of efforts in behalf of sufferers who were sheltered when the famine was at its height. Dr. MARGARET MACKELLAR (Canadian Presbyterian Mission, Neemuch), writes: "Our mission is very grateful for the help it gave us while the famine was so severe eighteen months ago. I write to tell a little of what we are doing for the famine sufferers now. Daily, some famished ones come to us; the boys are sent to Rutlam, where there are some hundreds of others being trained, while the girls are taken into the orphanage here, where between 180 and 200 are being trained. We used to send the women to two of our stations where there are homes, but these are full, and we have opened a third home (for widows), and already it has nearly sixty inmates. We hope soon to commence industrial work for these women; in the meantime they do all their own grinding, cooking, washing, and sewing. Our rainy season is just over, by all appearance, and we in Neemuch have had only a little more than half our normal amount, so that a water famine is inevitable, as there is so little water in the wells. We dread to think what sorrow may again be in store for the poor people."

ORPHANS AT BELGAUM.

Describing, in a report, his efforts in behalf of famine orphans, Mr. VILLIERS F. HUNTER, of Belgaum, says: "We can praise our God and Father for having provided for the destitute little lambs—two comfortable homes, a hospital, store-house, bathing-place, and a very large and substantially built well, with an abundant supply of good spring water; also various 'Chuppers' (temporary erections of grass and bamboo), together with twelve acres of land, which is being cultivated as time and means permit. There are at present only seventy-five children in the homes, but we have ample accommodation for 100. Had we felt it right to go against the wishes of the Government in taking children from other districts, our numbers would have been considerably increased. When we contrast these bright, healthy girls with the pitiable little objects that were received last year, our hearts overflow with praise and thanksgiving. Most of them were then suffering with various diseases caused by the filth they had eaten, but many who were very ill recovered with careful nursing."

Dr. P. B. KESKAR, of Sholapur, writes: "The people of Europe have an impression that the famine is over, but help will be needed here until March next. There are at present under my care 324 famine waifs, and thirty-six widows, besides which I am sheltering seventy-six lepers, for whom we need further accommodation. We also require a small building to use as a church and school."

The Kidnapped Missionary.

THE hearts of Christian people have been deeply stirred by the news of the abduction, by a band of brigands, of Miss Ellen Stone, an esteemed American missionary labouring in Macedonia.

The American Legation in Constantinople is convinced that the crime is not one of ordinary brigandage; but was hatched by the Macedonian Committee in Bulgaria with the object of obtaining funds for revolutionary agitation. The only communication received from the missing lady is that addressed to Mr. W. W. Pete, treasurer of the Turkish Mission at Constantinople, in which Miss Stone, describing her experiences, says:—

"My Honoured Friend,—I write to inform you that on September 3 I was captured by a large number of armed men, some forty, as I was travelling from Bansko to Djumaala with about twelve teachers, students, and others. They took with me, for my companion, Mrs. Catherine Tsilka.

"The reason for which they have captured us is for ransom. The price which they demand for us is £25,000 Turkish, which sum must be paid in gold, and this entirely without the knowledge of the Turkish and Bulgarian Governments, within the term of eighteen days from to-day.

"The men who captured us at first showed courtesy and consideration towards us, but now, since the Turkish troops and Bashi-Bazouks have begun to pursue us, and the ransom is delayed, our condition is altogether changed. I therefore beg you to hasten in sending the ransom demanded, and as energetically as possible.

"I pray you to communicate without delay the contents of this letter to the representative of the United States at the Porte, and request his most serious co-operation. Pray for us. We are kept in the peace of God. With hearty salutations to your family, Your friend, Ellen M. Stone."

Although the time fixed by the brigands for the payment of the ransom for Miss Stone expired on the 8th inst., no representative of the brigands has appeared at Samakov, where the ransom was to be paid, to claim the money or to announce the fate of the lady missionary.

The relatives at Sofia of the Bulgarian lady teacher who was captured with Miss Stone, have received a letter begging them to induce the Turkish authorities to abandon the pursuit of the brigands, as the latter threaten to kill both herself and Miss Stone should they find themselves in any danger. The only way to secure the release of the two captives, says the letter, is to pay a ransom. The writer further states that she and Miss Stone are kept in hiding places under the ground, but that otherwise they are treated with the utmost courtesy.

North Africa Mission.

UNDER the auspices of the North Africa Mission two interesting farewell meetings were held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate Street, on Tuesday of last week. A number of missionaries are about to return to this field, and they are accompanied by several new workers. Since the formation of the North Africa Mission in 1881 its operations have consistently extended, and stations have been established in many places in Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, and Lower Egypt. It no longer confines itself to the Berbers, but seeks to evangelize among all the Moslems, also Europeans and Jews. Before the first missionaries landed in Algiers in 1881, there were no Protestant missionaries or Bible agents to the Mohammedans or heathen from Alexandria to the Atlantic, and from the Mediterranean to the Senegal, Lower Niger and Congo. Now there are over 150 labourers for God where, in 1881, there were none.

MOSLEM FANATICISM.

Notwithstanding the fanaticism of the Moslems generally, but little opposition has been met with, and the missionaries have been cordially welcomed, their message is listened to, and their books are read. Of late years a number of Mohammedans have boldly confessed Christ, and cheered the toilers in their labours. Jews and Europeans also are seeking the light, and many have already become noble witnesses for God. These first-fruits lead the workers to expect, ere long, an abundant harvest.

In the afternoon Sir Matthew Dodsworth presided, and recalled a visit paid by him to North Africa a few years ago. He spoke in warm terms of the devotion of the Mission workers, and of the encouraging signs which were to be observed on every hand. The secretary, Mr. E. H. Glenny, in the course of a brief statement, referred to the extreme difficulties with which work among Moslems is fraught. It was not, he thought, so easy a matter to arouse enthusiasm in the interests of the Mohammedans as in the evangelization of savage tribes.

The valedictory address was given by Rev. Norman Bennet, who spoke some fitting and helpful words to the missionaries on 1 Peter i. 24, 25, "The grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away; but the Word of the Lord endureth for ever." The speaker reminded the missionaries that while results might not be at once seen, God's promise would remain, and the sower would reap if he fainted not.

TIDINGS FROM THE FIELD.

A number of the missionaries going out gave brief addresses. Mr. Venables described the work to which he is returning in the town of Tripoli, with its population of 25,000, one-half of that number being Moslems. One effective way of access to them is the Medical Mission, which has done much to remove prejudice, and dispose the people to listen to the Gospel message. Some have been known to make a four-days' journey to receive medicine and hear the Gospel. Miss A. Bolton, who is also returning after furlough, spoke of the progress made in Tetuan. There are at present four workers there who are receiving encouragement on every hand. Among Moorish girls particularly, the spirit of inquiry is deepening, and it is no unusual occurrence for numbers of them to remain for prayer after school hours. Miss G. R. S. Breeze, M.B., described the efforts which are being made in connection with the Women's Hospital at Tangiers. The dispensary is a centre to which the poor ailing Moslems flock. Two of the new workers for Egypt also spoke—Mr. A. Levack and Miss A. Wenden. The Chairman, on behalf of the friends, wished the missionaries "God-speed," and they were commended to God in prayer by Rev. Norman Bennet.

In the evening, another encouraging meeting was held, when Mr. T. B. Miller presided. A powerful address was given by Pastor James Stephens, M.A., and several returning missionaries told of the work they had been doing.

Seeking for Freedom.

THE present hour in France is one of great opportunity. The legislation which has led to the exile of the religious orders is entirely friendly to law-abiding Protestantism. It is more: it lifts from the Roman Catholicism of France the oppressive hand of the Jesuit Society. Priests of all orders, and bishops with them, have long chafed under what is known as "Italian" government. Now they will have a chance of being themselves, and doing as they wish.

Workers for the enlightenment of such priests as are weary of Popery, are alive to the significance of the situation. From time to time we have called attention to the work of Abbé Bourrier. We are glad to learn that the committee with which he is associated is dealing with pressing duties at the present time. Over a thousand priests still in office are reading the Abbé's paper, Le Chrétien Français, and many of these long to be free from the fetters of Rome. During the past four years, over five hundred priests have "come out" with the assistance of the committee, and some of these are now working as pastors and evangelists. To leave "the Church," is, in many cases, to face beggary; hence the need for help and encouragement such as the committee renders.

A few days ago, M. C. Arnaud, an ex-priest who is undertaking a Protestant pastorate, gave us a call. He is a fine specimen of the polite Christian Frenchman, and told a deeply interesting story of personal experiences, unfolding an inspiring plan of purposes in the Gospel. M. Arnaud served the Roman Church as a missionary in the Southern States of America, and as a parish priest in the Cevennes, France. His eyes having been opened respecting Papal assumptions, he was led into light regarding Evangelical truth, and came out of the Roman communion.

As the Jesuits and other orders are leaving France, the secular clergy are breathing with unwonted freedom, and now is the time for an advance movement towards instructing priests and people alike. That the orders are settling in England, Canada, and elsewhere, is so much the worse for those countries; but, all the same, it is to the relief of the Republic which has so long been priest-ridden to the point of despair.

M. Arnaud has come to England for a few weeks in the hope of interesting British Protestants in Abbé Bourrier's work. He hopes to address meetings, and in other ways to help forward the evangelization of his people. Sincere men leaving the priesthood need the extended hand of such as Abbé Bourrier, and it is hoped that that out-stretched hand will be sustained by the prayers and practical assistance of Christians generally. Letters may be addressed to M. Arnaud, care of Mr. C. Swan, 44, Acre Lane, Brixton, S.W.

Protection of Children in India.

A WELL-ATTENDED and interesting meeting in aid of the Society for the Protection of the Children in India was held at Mildmay Conference Hall a few days ago, Lord Radstock presiding. After prayer by Rev. C. Jordan (Calcutta), a short report was read by Rev. J. P. Ashton, in which it was shown that, though a beginning had been made in Calcutta, the Committee felt the need of a fund to send out and sustain a secretary for three years, by which time the Society might dispense with foreign help. About £400 was still required.

The first speaker was Miss Abrams, who, as a co-worker with Pandita Ramabai, had seen much of the inner working of Indian social life. She showed that, though the majority of Indian parents are kind to their children, cruelty is far more common than in England. Her first experience arose in an attempt to rescue a child from being starved to death. She had been shocked again and again by the cruelty of professional beggars to children whom they exposed as objects of pity. The Commissioner of Police told her that there were 500 such children in Bombay alone. After adverting to some other fearful abuses which prevail, she referred to the moral and physical evils which arise from infant marriage, and from the law that every Hindoo girl must be married before the age of twelve.

Along with Miss Abrams were two Brahmin child-widows, who had been taken in hand by Ramabai, and were returning to India after a course of education in America. The meeting was closed by an earnest appeal from Rev. J. M. Brown, who had taken part in the first efforts of the Society in Calcutta; with solemn words of counsel from the Chairman, who showed from his own experience the value of prayerful trust in God. Rev. J. P. Ashton is acting as secretary in England pro tem., from whom further information can be obtained. His address is 40, De Vere Gardens, Ilford.

Blessing in Uganda.

WRITING from Toro, Uganda, Rev. A. B. Fisher, C.M.S., says:—"Everything in this mission has more than doubled since June last. We have baptized over 900 converts, and churches and centres of work have increased from fifty-two to 196, teachers from fifty-three to 120, and from twenty voluntary workers to fifty. The European staff has also increased by the addition of Mrs. Maddox last March, Rev. Mr. Kitchin this month; and we hope for others about Christmas. . . ."

Mr. Fisher appeals for books to read, cut off as the missionaries are from all intercourse with the outer world. He adds:—"Books sent to me are placed in the Toro library, and read by all the Toro staff." Books sent to Mrs. McCann, Windsor House, West Grove Road, Harrogate, Yorks, will be gladly forwarded, or they may be posted direct to Rev. A. B. Fisher, Toro, Ugannda, via Mombassa, East Africa.

Good Cheer from Brazil.—We have received a letter from Mr. J. D. McEwen (Orobo, Bahia) testifying to tokens of blessing on Gospel work in Brazil. "Protestantism is surely gaining a firm foothold. There is almost on every hand a seeking after the truth, as it is not now found in the Roman Catholic Church here." This, he says, is specially apparent in the seeking of schools which are not dominated by the priests, as well as a readiness to receive and read Evangelical literature. A decided increase is noticeable in the attendance at Gospel meetings, and this not only in the cities, but in country places, some coming many miles on foot and horseback. Invitations come from quarters never visited by the missionary, asking for a visit to have the Bible explained to them.

"Up From Slavery."

THE world has moved so rapidly since the early "sixties," that it is sometimes hard to realize how few years have passed since one great branch of the Anglo-Saxon race held property in human flesh. The opening words of Mr. Booker T. Washington's autobiography, Up From Slavery (6s. Fisher Unwin), "I was born a slave," bring to the throat of the reader a terrible choking feeling, as he seems to catch a breath of the atmosphere of bondage. That a man of forty-two or forty-three (for the exact age of the slave was not considered to be a matter of importance) should be able to make this statement, reminds us how great must be the number of men and women still alive who have suffered the same great wrong in their early days from a nominally Protestant Christian people.

Of the identity of his father, Mr. Washington "heard reports to the effect that he was a white man who lived on one of the near-by plantations;" and from every point of view the story is one of a life begun "in the midst of the most miserable, desolate, and discouraging surroundings." His owners were not especially cruel as compared with many others, but all the hatefulness of the iniquitous system is shown in its true colours. It would be a hard heart indeed that would not be touched by the picture of the mother kneeling over her children in the early hours of the morning, and praying for the success of Lincoln and his army.

MR. BOOKER T. WASHINGTON.

From Photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, 17, Baker Street, London, W.

When the great day of emancipation came there was joy, but it was short-lived. Then the seriousness of the position came home to them. In fact, a feeling of deep gloom settled down on the slave quarters. The long-coveted privilege had necessarily brought responsibilities, and freedom was a more serious matter than they expected to find it. Yet it was the first great step in the progress of the Negro race.

THE STRUGGLE UPWARD.

The narrative of Mr. Washington's own struggle for an education, including his reception and experiences at the Hampton Institute, shows how true manhood, under the dark skin, asserted itself in such a fashion as to overcome almost incredible difficulties. At Hampton he met "the noblest, rarest human being that it has ever been my privilege to meet"—General Samuel C. Armstrong. It was in his second year that this student learned truly how to use and love the Bible, his leader in this respect being Miss Nathalie Lord; and to the same teacher he ascribes in a measure whatever ability he attained as a public speaker. The necessity of self-support never ceased, and many disappointments did the young man encounter in meeting his liabilities.

It was in 1881 that the way opened up for him to begin his life-work. A normal school for coloured people was being opened at Tuskegee, and it seemed to be taken for granted that no coloured man fitted to take charge would be available, when General Armstrong recommended Mr Washington. The result was satisfactory, and a greater force for the elevation of the negro had found its true base of operations than the most sanguine of the promoters dreamed of. But the field was still truly virgin soil:—

> I had expected to find a building and all the necessary apparatus ready for me to begin teaching. To my disappointment, I found nothing of the kind. I did find, though, that which no costly building and apparatus can supply—hundreds of hungry, earnest souls, who wanted to secure knowledge.

A DIFFICULT BEGINNING.

The first helper in the work of teaching was Miss Olivia A. Davidson, who later became Mrs. Washington; and these two faithful pioneers faced a task which would probably have deterred even them if they had appreciated its magnitude from the beginning. About three months after making a beginning in a stable and a henhouse, an old and abandoned plantation came into the market; and, with nothing in hand, was bought for 500dols., one-half of which was advanced by General Marshall, of Hampton, the remainder remaining on mortgage.

Step by step the work grew. The college was also an industrial colony; and no number of failures deterred men and women actuated by this spirit. Lot after lot of bricks failed, but in the end it was recognised that a student who had learned brickmaking at Tuskegee was, for that reason alone, a desirable acquisition in any community. The same is true regarding agriculture, carriage-building, and other industries. The students had to learn to prepare their own food, and many an unpalatable dish appeared on the table during the period of training. Bedsteads had to be made before they could be used, and for some time it was not unusual, when morning came, to find one or two scattered over the floor in pieces.

THE RACE PROBLEM.

The race problem was an ever present one. The relation between whites and negroes might be settled in their own county on lines of mutual respect and regard, but as soon as they travelled abroad all the common antipathy rose up against them.

Of the present position of the work Mr. Washington writes:—

> Twenty years have now passed since I made the first humble effort at Tuskegee, in a broken-down shanty, and an old hen-house, without owning a dollar's worth of property, and with but one teacher and thirty students. At the present time the institution owns 2,300 acres of land, over 700 of which are under cultivation each year, entirely by student labour. While the students work upon the land and in erecting buildings, they are taught by competent instructors the latest methods of agriculture and the trades connected with building.
> There are in constant operation at the school, in connection with thorough academic and religious training, twenty-eight industrial departments. All of these teach industries at which our men and women can find immediate employment as soon as they leave the institution. The only difficulty now is that the demand for our graduates from both white and black people in the South is so great that we cannot supply more than one-half the persons for whom applications come to us.

Concerning the varied requirements of the time, Mr. Washington says:—

> In our industrial teaching we keep three things in mind; first, that the student shall be so educated that he shall be enabled to meet conditions as they exist now, in the part of the South where he lives—in a word, to be able to do the things which the world wants done; second, that every student who graduates from the school shall have enough skill, coupled with intelligence and moral character, to enable him to make a living for himself and others; third, to send every graduate out feeling and knowing that labour is dignified and beautiful—to make each one love labour instead of trying to escape it.

It is pathetic to realize how grateful to such men and women is the privilege of mixing freely and on equal terms with all classes of society during visits to Europe. The hatefulness of "the colour line" forces itself on the attention of the reader, although every attempt is made in the book to minimize it. The struggle is not ended, nor can it be till the colour of his skin ceases to stand in the way of a man attaining to any position in any country in the world.

The Book of Exodus.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART.

THE Bible has suffered from its friends even more, perhaps, than from its foes. It is in a book supposed to be quite orthodox that one meets the statement that Exodus is badly arranged! If it is not a vain superstition, that the Bible is God's work and God's gift, it must be as completely and magnificently arranged as the planetary system. That also was supposed at one time to be badly arranged. The Ptolemaic system, with its cycles and epicycles, and confusion worse confounded, was the portentous outcome of a huge initial blunder. The philosophers laboured to bring the universe into conformity with a plan which was not God's plan. Scholars may miss the Divine view-point in the Bible just as easily as philosophers missed it in nature.

In Genesis the plan is indicated (as has been noted) by conspicuous divisions. These are not quite so marked in Exodus, and students of the book have tried to gather up its contents in some more or less rough fashion. It has been divided into history and laws; the first eighteen, nineteen, or twenty chapters containing the former, and the remainder containing the latter. But even those who propose this division confess that it is not satisfactory; for there are laws in the history, they tell us, and history in the laws.

That is quite enough to show that, whatever the plan of the book may be, it cannot be this. It would have been a very easy matter to have separated the history and the laws, and to have placed the history in one part of the book, and the laws in another; and, since they are not set apart in that way, it is clear that their separation was not intended. Those who wish to understand the Bible may consult books that have been written on it, but there is one thing which they must not neglect to do, and that is to read the Bible itself. If we read Exodus straight through, and so give it the opportunity of telling its own story, our attention will be attracted to two breaks in the narrative.

BREAKS IN THE NARRATIVE.

The first of these occurs in chapter vi. 12. God has commanded Moses to pass once more into Pharaoh's presence, and to demand the liberation of Israel (verse 11). Moses replies: "Behold the children of Israel have not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, who am of uncircumcised lips?" (verse 12). And there, for the moment, the narrative is suspended. Verse 13 apparently commences a new section. It records the fact that "the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh, king of Egypt, to bring the children of Israel out of Egypt." I shall return immediately to these words, for they have something to say of the purport of the second part of the book. Meanwhile, let us note that they break in upon the story, and, for the time, end it. Verses 14-25 give the genealogy of these servants of God. And even here there are gems to be picked up. Reuben, the firstborn, is named, but only to be set aside. Simeon also is named and passed over. Birthrights may be lost by cruelty and lust. Then Levi is taken. Judah was the fourth son of Jacob, and the next in order. His turn will come by and by, but it is not now. First comes the great high priest—the Aaron type—and the great leader of God's host in their wilderness journeying—the Moses type—and then will be manifested the lion of the tribe of Judah, and "the government shall be upon his shoulder."

SUSPENSION OF THE STORY.

What we have to note now is this:—Verses 28-30 bring us back to the point at which the break occurred. God's command and the reply of Moses are repeated—"And it came to pass on the day when the Lord spake unto Moses in the land of Egypt, that the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 'I am the Lord: speak thou unto Pharaoh, King of Egypt, all that I say unto thee.' And Moses said before the Lord, 'Behold, I am of uncircumcised lips, and how shall Pharaoh hearken unto me?'" And from this point on, till we come to the next and only other break, the history proceeds continuously.

Casting a glance back, then, upon these five-and-a-half chapters which begin the book, we ask, what is their mission? What is it that they have had to tell us? The reply is: "The story of the redeemer of God's people." It is the history of Moses. In the first chapter we have a brief account of how it fared with Israel after the death of Joseph. We are told of their increase and the consequent persecution. Two-thirds of the chapter are taken up with a never-to-be-forgotten picture of that bitter Egyptian bondage. Chapter ii. tells of the birth and rescue of Moses, of his early years, his great life-choice, his attempt to deliver his people in his own strength, his failure, and the refuge that he finds in Midian. It ends with a significant reminder that, though Moses had gone, God remained. "And God heard their groaning, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob. And God looked upon the children of Israel, and God had respect unto them" (verses 24, 25). In chapters iii. to vi. we are told how the Lord brings Moses back from exile, how he is manifested to Israel as the bringer of deliverance, and how he appears before Pharaoh. I think we may conclude that we have rightly read the message of this first part.

THE SECOND BREAK.

This is met with in the twelfth chapter. Near the close of the chapter, the second part of the history culminates in the passing out of the Israelites, "about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, besides children. And a mixed multitude went up also with them; and flocks and herds, even very much cattle. And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; because they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victual" (37-39). But just here the story is once more broken. The two next verses run: "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt." The end of the new introductory section is marked, as in the previous instance, with a repetition: "And it came to pass the self-same day, that the Lord did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their armies" (verse 51).

Does this section, then, so distinctly ruled off by the pen of the inspired writer, embrace a distinct part of the history? Let us note again where it begins, and where it leaves off. The latter point is now before us. The second section ends with Israel outside of Egypt.

They have been "thrust out" (verse 39). All their company is there, and all that they possessed. There is not so much as a hoof left behind. When we turn back to chapter vi. 12, we note that Israel is not delivered, and that Moses is in despair. He has done everything that he can do, and neither with Pharaoh nor with Israel has he accomplished anything.

Moses' despair is emphasized by the repetition (verses 12 and 30). But man's extremity is God's opportunity, and the significance of verse 13 will now be marked. Immediately after Moses' confession of despair we read that "the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh King of Egypt, to bring the children of Israel out of Egypt" (verse 13). Then we are told that Moses is sent back to Pharaoh armed with new power.

One plague follows another, till Egypt's pride is in the dust, and God's people come forth with the glory of God upon them. If the first part is the story of the redeemer, then this is quite as clearly the story of the redemptive work. This weak, despairing man is made as "a god to Pharaoh" (literally: "See, I have made thee God to Pharaoh" vii. 1). Pharaoh's fate and Egypt's is in his hands. He smites, and there is none to deliver. And out of judgment comes deliverance. The section begins with the statement of God's purpose "to bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt," and it ends with the children of Israel delivered.

There is no other interruption in the onward flow of the narrative, and we have now to ask whether the third section is also concerned with one thing. A glance at the contents of this last portion of the book from xii. 40 to xl. 38 will suggest a satisfactory, and, I may add, a startling, answer.

THE THIRD SECTION.

Throughout the whole of the third section we see the redeemed with God (xiii). The Israelites are commanded to consecrate the first-born in memory of their deliverance; and then we are told that, as the Israelites passed out from the land, a new marvel appeared. "The Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night. He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people" (xiii. 21, 22). Hitherto Moses, God's messenger, and the preacher of the God-given Gospel, had been everything to them. It was he on whom their eye rested, and of whom their thought was full. But now God's redeemed are to pass from the messenger to the Master.

They are to behold, and to know God. Moses, in this new experience, will not be less, or less esteemed, than formerly. But God will be more; and in the light of God's glory the greatness of Moses will be manifested. And this is only a foretaste. Israel passes into the wilderness; but there God is the Guide of their way, the Bearer of their burden, the Provider of their daily bread, the Giver of streams in the desert. He takes them to Sinai, where He speaks with them, makes his covenant with them, and gives them his Law. The book ends with the story of Israel's rearing a tabernacle, that God the Lord may dwell among them. And the last words of the book tell how God accepted the work of their hands, and made it his dwelling-place: "Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, because the glory of the Lord abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. . . . The cloud of the Lord was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys" (xl. 34, 38).

Helpful Words.

From a Convention Note Book.

Sin is stronger than man at his best, but weaker than God.

We are all inclined to ask, as Abraham did, "Shall I?" "Shall Sarah?" and to forget to say, "Shall God?"

When God says, "Dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed," it is taken for granted that we are in the land of promise. Many are where they ought not to be, as Lot in Sodom, and Jonah in the ship. When Paul is in the storm, he is fed, and he preserves those who are with him.

Take care of the cross, and the crown will take care of itself.

God sometimes crosses his hands in blessing, as Jacob did in blessing the sons of Joseph. We put our requests before God in our order, but He answers in his.

It is written of David: "This man, after he had served his own generation according to the will of God, fell on sleep." It is the sad failing of this age that Christians are falling asleep before they have served their generation—giving up their work while still able to do it.

It is a ship in full sail that needs the most watchful steering.

Our utmost faith only hopes that everyone may take a little. It is Jesus who so prepares that all may eat and be filled.

When we most earnestly seek for one grace, we most plainly see that to have one we must have all.

In the A.V. it is written of Joseph, "The iron entered his soul." But the R.V. has corrected this. "He was laid in chains of iron." God's children in the sorest trial have their souls free. For

> Stone walls do not a prison make,
> Nor iron bars a cage;
> Minds innocent and quiet take
> That for an hermitage.
> If I have freedom in my love,
> And in my soul am free—
> Angels alone that soar above,
> Enjoy such liberty. F. W. A.

A Great Liverpool Mission.

STORY OF REV. JOSEPH JACKSON.

THE religious life of the city of Liverpool has been singularly rich in great characters. God has given to that busy seaport, whose name a few years ago became a byword of reproach among the cities of England because of its drunkenness and crimes of violence, noble leaders in religious and social enterprise who have done much to wipe out that reproach. Among such men, of steadfast nobleness and gracious influence, for many years stood foremost the beloved and revered Charles Garrett. At the last anniversary of the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission, every speaker referred to the well-known form that was missing for the first time on such an occasion since the founding of the Mission, twenty-five years ago.

The beneficent spiritual and philanthropic work of the Liverpool Mission is being faithfully and vigorously maintained under the superintendence of Rev. Joseph Jackson, with devoted colleagues in Rev. Wilbert F. Howard (who succeeded Rev. H. Howard May at the recent Conference), Rev. A. J. French, B.A., and a noble band of helpers in the lay missioners whom Charles Garrett gathered around him, and inspired with so much of his own enthusiasm and devotion.

No minister in Methodism was appointed to a more difficult task last year than was Rev. Joseph Jackson, when he was chosen to succeed the venerable founder of the Liverpool Mission. In no spirit of self-confidence did he enter upon his work, but in reliance upon the grace of God. His gifts and training fit him in no small degree for his present responsibilities. He is in the prime of life, combining youthful enthusiasm with shrewd wisdom, and evangelistic zeal with skill in organization. In the pulpit and on the platform, Mr. Jackson's sturdy loyalty to the truth, urgency of appeal, ready wit, and power of happy illustration, unite to win acceptance for his message.

JOSEPH JACKSON was born in Poplar, London. It was through the influence of a Sunday-school teacher that he was led to Christ, and it was during the observance of the Lord's Supper that he realized by faith that the blood of Jesus Christ cleansed away his sin. He was soon engaged in Christian work, and at nineteen became the secretary of a Sunday-school which in four years grew from forty scholars to 340. He felt a call to preach the Gospel, and the late Rev. James Crabtree gave him his "note to preach." The London St. George's Circuit recommended him as a candidate for the ministry, and being accepted by the Conference, he was sent, first to the Headingley Theological Institution, where he remained for one year, and then to the new college at Handsworth, where he studied for three years more, and developed that love for books which has deepened as the years have passed. The late Rev. Benjamin Hellier, at Headingley, and Rev. F. W. Macdonald, at Handsworth, left their mark upon the young preacher's intellectual life; and amongst his fellow-students were men of such varied gifts as Dinsdale T. Young, Thomas Waugh, John E. Wakerley, R. Bevan Shepherd, and G. Talalun Newton.

Mr. Jackson's first appointment was under Rev. Walford Green, at Blackheath, in 1884. He then spent three years at Worthing, whence he proceeded to the London, South-wark circuit. His next appointment was in the busy Yorkshire seaport of Hull, where his activities found full scope in aggressive and social work. He often preached in the open air.

At the Great Thornton Street Chapel he organized a large Sunday afternoon Bible class, which is still continued. He had much to do with the formation of a Mission Band Union, which held immense meetings of an evangelistic character on Bank holidays. He was one of the leading spirits in a vigorous temperance crusade against low-class music-halls and dancing-saloons. This agitation had a notable result in the closing of no fewer than forty-six places of amusement of a type calculated to deprave and debase the moral life of the young. In connection with this bold and successful effort to combat social evil, the name of the late Rev. H. S. B. Yates was honourably associated.

From Hull Mr. Jackson proceeded, in 1892, to the East End of London, where he joined Rev. Peter Thompson in that branch of the London Wesleyan Mission. Curiously enough,

Mr. Jackson had the honour of being the only Londoner appointed to the London Mission! What was still more remarkable was that he was put down to labour at the old centre where he had been accepted as a candidate for the ministry. It was on the steps of St. George's Chapel, to which he was now attached as the missioner, that he had made his first attempt to speak in the open air. It is needless to say that this sphere was one of peculiar difficulty, but for four years he successfully laboured amidst the scenes of suffering and sin, of poverty and vice, that are all too familiar to Christian workers who face the terrible problems of East End life. He became also the secretary of the Race Course Mission, and with Mr. Josiah Nix and other devoted evangelists, visited Epsom and Doncaster, and rejoiced in the winning of trophies for Christ in these high places of the gambling fraternity.

From the East End of London to historic St. Albans was a complete change of sphere; but in the latter place Mr. Jackson showed his many-sidedness by building a beautiful church and gathering a large congregation. Here Mr. Jackson's zeal in temperance work brought down upon him the persecution of the publicans. False charges were made against him in a court of law. He was triumphantly vindicated, and he was unanimously thanked by the city council for his action in the public interests. While at St. Albans, Mr. Jackson found time to act as examination secretary of the "British Chautauqua," an institution which has done something to fit Sunday-school teachers for their duties. It was after four years' successful work at St. Albans that our friend was unexpectedly appointed to Liverpool on the retirement of Mr. Garrett. Not only the members of his own church, but all interested in spiritual and philanthropic work extended to him their warmest sympathy and heartiest co-operation. For the work of the Liverpool Mission is, on the one hand, intensely spiritual, and on the other broadly philanthropic. As illustrating the true catholicity of the Mission, it may be mentioned that among the speakers at the last anniversary were the Venerable Archdeacon Madden and Rev. John Thomas, M.A., representing the Evangelical churches of the city, established and free. Services are regularly conducted in eight chapels and halls, and three ministers and thirteen lay missionaries and helpers are engaged in the various departments of work. There are three boys' homes, and three for girls, through which nearly 3,000 have already passed. A police-court missionary is employed, to the value of whose services the stipendiary magistrate has borne repeated testimony.

During last winter great congregations gathered on Sunday evenings in Hengler's Circus. There have been remarkable cases of conversion, and ninety persons were led to meet in class in connection with the Mission as the result of these services. The total membership, with those on trial, at the several branches, is over 1,000. The only side of the work on which for the moment there rests a cloud, is the financial one. On the last year's accounts there was a deficit of £850, towards which £400 was raised in connection with the anniversary. Since then considerable alterations and improvements in the Boys' Home at Shaw Street, have necessitated an expenditure of £3,000. The over-draft at the bank now stands at £1,600. Christians who believe in philanthropy, joined with spiritual and aggressive work, ought to see to it that Mr. Jackson is not long hampered with this debt. It is well and fitting that we honour the memory of the sainted workers who have passed to their reward, but such honour is empty and worthless unless we continue their work.

Brecon Soldiers' Home and General Mission.—It may not be generally known that Brecon is the headquarters of the 24th Regimental District, and the Depôt of the South Wales Borderers. Besides the usual strength of a single depôt each year, there are ordinarily encamped here, for about a fortnight, over 400 or 500 militia recruits, and for a month over 900 militiamen for annual training. Since 1897 a useful work has been carried on at the Brecon Soldiers' Home and General Mission, under the superintendence of Miss Wilkinson. The Home is open daily from 3 to 10 p.m., when a hearty welcome is accorded the men. Well-furnished reading and coffee-rooms are provided. Bible readings or Gospel addresses are given every evening with happy results. Through the General Mission the workers are brought into contact with civilians, and in this effort also much blessing has been realized.

Congregationalists at Manchester.

By A MINISTER.

THE autumnal meetings of the Congregational Union were held last week, and being at the centre of a populous district, were attended by a very large number of delegates. The Chairman, Dr. Parker, was also among old friends, Manchester having been his third sphere of service. The engagements were opened, as is usual, with a sermon, which this year was preached by Rev. George Gladstone, of Glasgow. His theme was "The Abidingness of Christ," who is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." Among other things, he remarked that if Christ abides then his Church abides. The conflict, after all, between the Church and the world is not one in which there are so many on the one side, and so many on the other. If that were so, one might well tremble for the ark of the Lord, and fear the removal of any defender of the faith. The Church's safety and triumph lie not in any man nor in any body of men, but in the unchangeableness of its Lord. It is Christ with whom its foes have chiefly to do. Individual preachers may be silenced, but the work goes on. If Christ abides his Gospel must abide. The thoughts of men change with the passing day; but the Gospel never becomes effete, the idea of salvation by the Cross will never be out-grown.

TEMPERANCE.

At the Temperance Meeting, the secretary of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association pointed out how greatly the number of abstaining ministers had increased since the Union last met in Manchester, twenty years ago. In 1881 there were only 886 abstainers out of 2,555 ministers; now there are 2,886 ministers, of whom more than 2,000 are abstainers; the increase during the year had been 335. An address was delivered by Mr. Frank Bullen (author of "With Christ at Sea," &c.), and a resolution was enthusiastically carried in favour of the Twentieth Century Million Pledges Crusade, expressing the hope that every Congregational Church in the country will take its share in the enterprise. It was noticeable that the next morning Dr. Parker said, from the chair of the Union, that he should not object to a United Congregational Church which required every church member to be an abstainer.

DR. PARKER'S ADDRESS.

We give a few quotations from the Chairman's address on the United Congregational Church. The idea itself, and the outlines of a scheme growing out of it, cannot be given here; the less is this necessary, because nothing can be done until the churches and the county unions of churches have expressed an opinion upon them. Dr. Parker remarked, amid great applause:—"For my own part, the older I grow the more Evangelical I become. I do not, however, accept any narrow interpretation of the great word Evangelical—the mother of all Gospel words—the very music of religious eloquence. What the Ark of the Covenant was to the tabernacle in the wilderness, the Bible is to the Christian sanctuary. The United Congregational Church will welcome all true scholarship, all sincere and Evangelical criticism. Congregationalists are afraid of nothing but irreverence, intellectual vanity, and bigoted ignorance. We are all ready to welcome all light, all well-proved knowledge, all devout and honest criticism. Let us beware of any orthodoxy that takes an unholy and wanton delight in making heretics, and of any pedantry that takes the same delight in punishing them. As to the Bible, Congregationalists are thankful to receive the well-considered opinions and judgments of grammarians, scientists, archæologists, and qualified critics of every name, but there is one man to whom they will not give place, no, not for a moment, and that man is the priest! He stands between the flower and the sun; he stands between the soul and God; he stands between the panting thirst of the human heart and the river of God which is full of water.

NO PRIEST; BUT AN OPEN BIBLE.

"I fear infinitely less the stumbling and occasional blundering of devout simple-minded piety, than I fear the craft, the jugglery, and the Popish insidiousness of the purely artificial priest, even if he is an ill-bred Dissenter. We must insist upon an open Bible, an English Bible, a universal Bible. What is the jewel of the Bible we love so well? What is the Personality without which the Bible as we know it is impossible? The answer is on every tongue. Who can pronounce the cumulative name of Jesus, and describe it in a legal trust deed? The Lamb of God, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, a Root out of a dry ground, the Shoot of Jesse, the Plant of renown, the Lily of the valley, the Rose of Sharon, the Opal of the dawn, the Crimson of the sunset. The United Congregational Church must bow down before Jesus of Nazareth as He dies upon the Cross, as He rises from the dead, as He assumes the crown of universal empire. The United Congregational Church must not have two Christs. We are for ever one in our loyalty to Jesus. We believe Him to be God the Son, the Saviour of the world, by whom, and by whom alone, we have received the Atonement. When men come to know the true meaning of the word "blood" they will have no difficulty in speaking of "the precious blood of Christ."

As no vote was taken on Dr. Parker's proposal, there is no saying with certainty how it is generally regarded; but we had ample evidence of disagreement with it. Two prominent men discussing it together after the exciting morning, said to each other that what the Congregational Churches require, for an increase of efficiency, and for the remedy of their troubles, is a baptism of Divine Power. This seems to be admitted on every hand, and has been admitted for many years past, and yet the Union takes no steps to do as their Puritan forefathers used to do—appoint a Day for Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer.

GREETINGS FROM SISTER CHURCHES.

As many as 280 Free Evangelical Churches of the city of Manchester gave a hearty greeting to the Union through their foremost representatives, save Dr. Maclaren, who did not feel well enough to come. In the course of their address, they said—"When we contemplate the grave evils to be confronted, and, in the name of our Lord Jesus, to be successfully combated, such as the terrible results of the drink traffic, of gambling, of impurity, and of the insidious spread of priestcraft, we realize that the combined forces of the Churches are needed, and we know that upon none can a firmer dependence be placed for faithful witness-bearing to the truth of the Gospel, and for strenuous effort towards the enlightening and quickening of the national conscience, than upon the churches of your fellowship."

The Bishop of Manchester and a hundred clergy of the city forwarded an address, in which they said: "We pray that God will bless all your deliberations, and make them fruitful in spirit and in action that will tend to promote peace and goodwill and unity in the Church of Christ, and to advance the cause of truth and righteousness, of freedom and justice, in our country, our empire, and the whole world. We believe it to be too soon to contemplate any organic reunion of the Church of Christ. But it is not too soon to seek and to pray for a spirit of unity and concord which shall efface from the thought and expression of our differences all that is sectarian and unworthy, and shall silence all mutual disparagement and suspicion. It is not, in our judgment, 'the diversities of administration' that mainly hinder the work of Christ in the world—diversities may be overruled to stimulate a noble rivalry in what is good—it is something far deeper, it is our failure in manifesting 'the same spirit.' And this can only be remedied by the growth of our insight into the mind of Christ, and an increased sanctity and Divine charity in the hearts of all his ministers and of all his people."

GOOD MEN NEEDED.

In one of the meetings, Mr. Theodore C. Taylor, M.P., made some timely observations on good men. He said: We want a new spirit in the men who govern, whether they are voters or Cabinet Ministers; he referred to no party, but to the needs of all parties. He knew of no inspiration strong enough to cause men unselfishly to enter public life and to remain in it, whether in parish council or Imperial Parliament, other than the love of Christ constraining them. Every experienced business man knows that lying is very bad business, and the way to success is to speak the truth. It is said that politics are proverbially a dirty business, but all proverbs are not true. Politics are no worse necessarily than any other occupation in life. He firmly believed that national affairs would be managed well or ill just in so far as we seek to do the will of God in national affairs.

Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton, was in a similar strain when speaking on the subject of "Settlements." At the beginning of the century thought was swinging from materialism to the spiritual interpretation of nature and man. But in morals there is no corresponding advance discernible; indeed, we have lost in moral earnestness and weight. There is a vast amount of indifferentism both inside and outside the churches, and we need above all things a revival of the earnestness of our spiritual forefathers.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Peculiar and widespread interest always attaches to the meetings of the London Missionary Society, and it may safely be said that they have a devout and spiritual tone not always present in other gatherings. They evoke lofty feeling and pure devotion, and have no corresponding drawback caused by discussion on debateable themes. It would probably be found that the ministers and delegates are of one mind in describing the missionary meetings as by far the most helpful and refreshing of any they attended. At the meeting of the Watchers' Band, which is a prayer union for missionary work, Miss Marris remarked that although the Society is doing good work in India, she had to confess she had never heard a Hindoo woman pray. A valedictory meeting, to say farewell to twenty-nine missionaries, crowded the Free Trade Hall, and many were unable to obtain admission. The meeting was memorable for numbers, for tender, intense feeling caused by the sight, and the short addresses of the ten young men and women who were going forth for the first time. They spoke with great clearness and simplicity of their call into the Christian life and to missionary service. The note of each one was hopeful and trustful, though there was no avoiding the facts of missionary work—its hardness and dangers.

The story of one who is going to India was peculiarly affecting. The daughter of an officer, who had spent her early years in India, and had, as a mere child, been touched with the dark and sorrowful condition of native women—she used to tell her servant of Jesus. Then, on her return to England, she forgot her Saviour, lived in pleasure, and thought no more of those whom she used to pity. But Christ sought and found her, and now, under the impulse of his love, she is resuming, in a higher form, the work she used to do. Seldom have more searching words been heard on any occasion than fell from the lips of these young soldiers of the Cross; and the need of more pecuniary help for the honoured Society that sends them forth was very impressively shown by the fact that one of the ladies, the granddaughter of an L.M.S. missionary and the daughter of a director, who is going forth at her own charges, cannot, at present, be sent to an L.M.S. station, because there is none vacant, and the cost of a new station cannot be borne. She is a medical graduate, and is lent for twelve months to the Baptist Missionary Society. The older missionaries who are returning to the field, not in every case their former spheres, were represented by Dr. Davenport, of China; Dr. Phillips, of Madras; and Dr. Lawes, of New Guinea, who spoke of work as they have long known it. It is to be regretted that prayer, for which every one of the recruits had pleaded, had so small a place in a meeting so impressive and useful.

LAY PREACHERS AND COLLEGES.

Theology had a place in a paper read on "The Influence of Ritschl and his School on Evangelical Theology in Britain," and in one on "The Higher Criticism as it Affects Our Preaching." A summary of them is impossible. It is to be regretted that the readers of them, both competent men, did not take the trouble to make themselves heard all over the building, which is not a difficult one to be heard in. On the subject of lay preaching, it was urged that it should be encouraged, and that lay preachers should be trained for their work. The question of the number and equipment of the colleges is almost of purely denominational interest, but against any reduction of the number by way of amalgamating two or more, Dr. Mackennal pleaded that in the event of a revival of religion in the next four or five years, every college and every student would be required. The amalgamation of two Yorkshire colleges some years ago has not proved an advantage to the churches.

AN ANTI-WAR MEETING.

was called by some ministers and delegates who disapprove of the war; it was largely attended, and its resolutions were carried without a dissentient. A letter was adopted to be sent to the "British, Dutch, and Native Churches of South Africa," expressing "disapproval of the war as a national sin, and sad indignation at some of the methods of warfare which have been adopted." The promoters of this meeting included Revs. Dr. Mackennal, Principal Scott, Thomas Gasquoine, Hirst Hollowell, W. G. Horder, and J. P. Gledstone. Messrs. Halley Stewart and Stephen Massey took part.

ADDRESS BY REV. DR. HENRY.

Deep interest was aroused in connection with a reception given on Thursday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. Armitage, when the commodious hall connected with Dr. Maclaren's church was crowded to its utmost capacity with members of the Union and their lady friends. By special request, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry—who is at present making a tour of the United Kingdom in connection with the Million New Pledges Crusade—gave a soul-stirring address couched in language specially appropriate to the occasion, and well calculated to stir every minister up to renewed and energetic effort in the direction of total abstinence for himself, his office-bearers, and the members of his congregation generally. Unmistakable tokens of approval showed how truly Dr. Henry had enlisted the sympathy of his hearers.

Rev. F. S. Webster.

REV. F. S. WEBSTER, who, together with Rev. J. D. Moffatt, of Edinburgh, and Rev. John Brash, of Liverpool, has been conducting in Canada a series of conventions for the deepening of spiritual life, left New York on Wednesday last week in the Oceanic, being due in Liverpool on the 23rd inst. He hopes to preach at All Souls', Langham Place, on Sunday next.

The annual Harvest Thanksgiving service will be held in All Souls' to-morrow (Friday, October 25), when the preacher will be the Right Rev. Bishop Tucker, of Uganda.

The tour in Canada has been most successful, the visits to the principal places being carefully timed so as not to coincide with the visit of the Royal party. Conventions have been held in Hamilton, Galt, Brantford, London, Guelph, Stratford, Toronto, Ottawa, and Montreal. The meetings have been very large, and all the Protestant churches have united in them. The attendance of ministers has been specially gratifying, and many have expressed a deep sense of the value of the teaching given.

The Business End of a Sunday School is the title of a booklet setting forth the Hammond system of transacting the business of a Sunday school, which has been adopted with remarkable success in the United States. The methods are time-tried and highly practical. Copies of the booklet will be forwarded to superintendents and teachers, post free, on application to Mr. T. F. Downie, 14, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

REV. DR. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

THE provincial campaign of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers continues to attract vast audiences, and is evidently giving a powerful stimulus to the temperance cause.

The Sheffield demonstrations were continued on October 14 and 15 in the Albert Hall. The final meeting was a most enthusiastic occasion. Sir Charles Skelton presided, and Dr. Henry marshalled a great amount of convincing evidence as to the evils resulting from the drink traffic. An overflow meeting was held in the lower hall, but, notwithstanding this, hundreds of people were unable to obtain admission. A notable feature of the Sheffield campaign was the appeal to women, particularly wives and mothers, for which special meetings were arranged. Large numbers of women attended, and many signed the temperance pledge. In all the arrangements valuable service was rendered by an energetic band of local workers, led by Mr. G. W. Sharman, Rev. E. Carrington, and others.

ENTHUSIASM AT LEEDS.

At Leeds, the next centre to be visited, Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers held two large meetings in the Town Hall on Friday last, at which much interest was aroused. A torchlight procession at night attracted crowds of people, the building was full to overflowing, and Dr. Henry's appeals received earnest attention.

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Wesley North presided, and Dr. Henry gave a powerful address, in the course of which he said that he had no confidence in temperance or any other reform that does not recognize God as the centre of it all. The hopeful feature of the present Crusade is the reliance placed on the Christian part of the community to carry forward the work. Dr. Henry also made an awakening appeal on behalf of children. "If we can keep boys and girls out of the public houses for ten years, then the drink traffic will be 'starved out,' for it cannot exist without the support of the rising generation. It is our duty to put every possible barrier between the public-house and the children."

In the evening another great demonstration was held, when Mr. W. Petty presided. The meetings continued to grow in numbers and power. On Lord's Day evening it is estimated that fully 5,000 people attended the meeting in the Town Hall and the overflow gathering in Oxford Place Chapel, and no fewer than 400 new pledges were secured.

On Monday last Dr. Henry had a record afternoon meeting for attendances, and a profound impression was made. At the closing demonstration in the evening the Town Hall was crowded to suffocation. Mr. William Harvey presided, and Mr. Leicester Harmsworth, M.P., gave a brief but telling address. At the conclusion of Dr. Henry's address, over three hundred new pledges were taken. The members of the churches co-operated splendidly, and temperance workers are fired with new hope. The local committee are planning to follow up the meetings with a house-to-house canvas, and a fortnight of Gospel temperance meetings.

FUTURE ARRANGEMENTS.

Oct. 24, Huddersfield Town Hall; 25, Nottingham (Albert Hall); 26-28, Leicester (Melbourne Hall); C.E. Rally, Oct. 26, at 6 p.m., 29-31, Liverpool (afternoon meetings Oct. 30, Birkenhead, Oct. 31, Bootle); Nov. 2-5, Norwich (2-3, Calvert Street Free Methodist Church; 4-5, St. Andrew's Hall). Meetings will follow at Cambridge, Manchester, Wolverhampton, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Portsmouth, and Brighton; particulars of which will be duly announced.

A week's mission in connection with the crusade has been conducted at Mold by Mr. Tennyson Smith, under the auspices of the local Free Church Council. The Town Hall was crowded each night. The missioner's appeals made a deep impression, and nearly 600 pledges were taken.

About Books.

WILD NATURE DEPICTED.

ALL who, responsive to the charms of animated nature, love birds and their ways, will thank Mr. Oliver G. Pike for his handsome book, Woodland, Field, and Shore: Wild Nature Depicted with Pen and Camera (5s. Religious Tract Society). It is especially by the results of his photographic achievements that Mr. Pike earns our gratitude. His letterpress is good and to the point; but his pictures are beautiful like the objects they portray. The author's endeavour is to make us understand the every-day life of British wild birds around their homes in the country side; and now and then a butterfly, a mole, or some other insect or animal appears in the list of over a hundred illustrations, all of them artistically reproduced from photographs.

Here we find admirable pictures of birds on the wing, and eggs in nests so placed that one would think no lense could ever be focussed upon them. Mr. Pike, however, is dauntless when he takes the field with his camera; he waits hours for his "sitters," hiding himself and his apparatus, and at length exposing his plate in silence, by electrical or other marvellous means. Devotion such as this book evinces, on the part of a lover of the weak and timid denizens of "woodland, field, and shore," deserves ample recognition, and we trust it will be forthcoming, so that Mr. Pike may be encouraged to give us more volumes equally instructive and entertaining.

SPIRITUAL RELIGION.

THE series of Fernley Lectures includes some of the most useful pieces of practical theology that have come from the English press during the past generation. Though associated with the Methodist Church, the Lectureship has uniformly brought forward subjects with which thoughtful Christians of all communions might well concern themselves. The most cultured representatives of Methodism, the most competent teachers of the entire body, have from year to year unfolded topics of immediate interest and pressing importance, and the Christian Church at large is indebted to them for many valued contributions to theological exposition and pastoral divinity.

The lecture for 1901 is worthy of its thirty predecessors in the series. It is the work of Rev. J. G. Tasker, tutor in Biblical literature and exegesis, Handsworth College, and is entitled Spiritual Religion: A Study of the Relation of Facts to Faith (3s. C. H. Kelly). The theme is a great one; the treatment is worthy of the theme. The author's writings on critical questions had led us to expect something substantial; this volume abundantly realizes our expectations—it is rich in facts, keen in analysis, strong in argument, and convincing in application. In the words of the introduction:—

> Spiritual religion implies facts concerning man and concerning God. Christianity is an historical religion as well as a religion of experience, and facts of experience as well as facts of history may be scientifically examined. Faith awaits the results of such investigations without fear, confident that in the future, as in the past, science, by removing intellectual hindrances to belief, will make manifest its true foundations. The experience which is the result of faith is itself a fact, the significance of which science cannot afford to overlook; nor dare faith be blind to any fact which scientific research may bring to light.

From the nature of man and his needs, the author conducts us to studies of God as revealed in nature and history. From the possibility of communion between God and man, he passes to the glorious subject of man's access to God through Christ and in the Holy Spirit. What this means and involves for the individual, the Church, and the world, is admirably developed. Mr. Tasker seems to have read everything good on his theme, and his pages are a rich mine of thought and suggestion, lucid in doctrinal statement, and eminently practical in tendency.

If the great mass of our people would take to heart such statements as are made in Letters From John Chinaman (1s. R. Brimley Johnson), the candid home thrusts could not fail to bring a feeling of utter shame, while the fact would be recognised that there is much to be said on the Chinese side of the dispute with the European Powers.

The well-known devotional text-book, Daily Light on the Daily Path, has been issued in a compact form on thin paper; Morning and Evening Hours interpaged. (4s. 6d. Bagsters.) Nothing needs to be said of the contents; all Scripture, helpfully arranged. The type of the book is bold; but want of opacity in the paper somewhat interferes with the reader's comfort.

Scottish Cripple Children.

THE first rally took place a few days ago of the Glasgow Cripple Children's League of Kindness, Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson presiding. Mr. Alexander MacKeith explained that the League was started two years ago in connection with the Fresh Air Fortnight scheme. Many cripples were among the applicants, and very little was being done to brighten their lives. There are at present 227 friends from the west end and suburbs enrolled as members, each of whom undertakes to write to, visit, and in other ways take an interest in, one of the cripples. There had been difficulty in the past in sending these children for the fresh-air fortnight owing to their requiring so much attention, but during recent years many had been sent to a Home where a nurse was kept for them, and friends had promised a Home to be used solely for this class.

The latest movement on behalf of the cripples was their education, to which reference had been made. An ambulance waggon has been provided, and a nurse has been engaged to go round the homes of the children to take them to and from the school, and to attend to them during the day.

A description of similar efforts in London was given by Mr. Giffen, followed by an account from Miss Kelly of what had already been accomplished locally. When wishing the movement God-speed, Rev. Dr. William Boyd gave an address full of encouragement and stimulus to the workers engaged in it. Full information regarding the League may be obtained on addressing Miss Kelly, 64, Bothwell Street.

Letter to the Editor.

Dr. Barnardo and His Work.

DEAR SIR,—I am distressed at hearing that it is being sedulously reported in certain quarters that "Dr. Barnardo is giving up the directorship of his homes, and that 'so-and-so' has been or is to be appointed to take his place." Although at once authoritatively denied, the report still spreads, and is naturally giving pain to the supporters of the Lord's work in my hands, who rightly consider that if any such step was in contemplation they ought to have been taken before this into my confidence, and a public announcement made of the fact.

Will you give me space to say there is, happily, no foundation for the rumour? For the greater part of this year I have had to withdraw from my duties owing to serious illness, and probably I am not even now so strong or vigorous as before the attack; but I am able to record, with unfeigned thanksgiving, the goodness of the Lord in permitting me to resume my former activities. Moreover, I have no intention to vacate my post while sufficient health is vouchsafed me to perform its duties; but I shall be compelled during this winter to go more quietly than heretofore, and to decline all outside invitations and engagements which can possibly be filled by one or other of my colleagues on my behalf. I am, however, daily at my post, and hope that with care I may be permitted for some years to come, if it be God's will, to continue the work committed to me among, and on behalf of, waif and orphan children.

May I also avail myself of this opportunity to return, through your pages, my grateful acknowledgments to the thousands of kind and sympathetic correspondents who wrote, or sent, messages of goodwill during my illness. How much I really owe to "the prayer of faith" I will probably never know.—I am, yours sincerely, THOS. J. BARNARDO.

National Incorporated Waifs' Association,
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.—The autumn meetings are to take place at Bedford from October 26 to 31. Over fifty gatherings are arranged, and the programme gives promise of a very useful series of meetings. In addition to Sunday services, mothers' meetings, drawing-room meetings, visits to business houses, &c., two public Conferences will be held, when important topics will be discussed. On Tuesday, October 29, scientific addresses will be given in several Board schools. Miss A. W. Richardson, B.A., will address a meeting of teachers on Wednesday, October 30, and on the same evening meetings will be held in many surrounding villages. A public meeting in the Corn Exchange, on Thursday evening, October 31, the Honourable Mrs. Eliot Yorke in the chair.

Obituary.

MR. D. M. WATSON, BULLIONFIELD.

THE sudden death on Monday of last week, in his sixty-sixth year, of Mr. D. M. Watson, of Bullionfield, Forfarshire, removes a prominent figure from the Evangelical Church life of Scotland. He was a man of deep religious conviction, and in the United Free Church especially he was known far and wide as one whose counsel and advice might be deeply trusted, and whose sympathetic help would not be withheld from any good cause. Only a week before his death he took part in a great temperance demonstration, and presided over a gathering of Christian workers to consider the promotion of spiritual life; and such had been the tenor of his life during a long career of usefulness. In the General Assembly, and in the committee work of the Church, he was well known; and was also an ardent supporter of aggressive missionary work at home and abroad by whomsoever carried on. His wide reading endowed him with an amount of theological knowledge rarely found among laymen, at the same time making him a warm advocate of the dissemination of culture and education.

LADY MOUNT-TEMPLE.

The death of Lady Mount-Temple, who passed away at her residence, Babbicombe Cliff, Torquay, on Thursday last, removes a notable figure from religious and philanthropic circles. Her memory will be grateful to many in connection with the Broadlands Conferences. Of those remarkable gatherings a writer in our columns many years ago said: "It was a beautiful thought to open one of the finest of our historical country seats for the reception of a number of Christians who should meet simply for a few days' prayer and conference on the subject of holiness. The rule as to admission was a simple one—that 'No' was to be said to none. The nobleman and the labourer received exactly the same gracious welcome from host and hostess. The voices of High, Low, and Broad Churchmen, and of many shades of Nonconformists, rose to heaven from under the waving branches of the beech-trees. The spirit of love and grace pervaded all. In the intervals of speaking and singing, the flowing river or the wood-pigeons made their voices heard with a new significance. The power of the Holy Spirit was markedly present, and many date a fresh spring from those meetings."

It will be remembered that the late Lord Mount-Temple (who died in 1881) was a pioneer in many important movements that made for the spiritual and moral well-being of the people. He helped to inaugurate Ragged-schools, gave important aid to the Purity cause, and was a prominent Temperance reformer. He also engaged heartily in evangelistic work, and during Mr. D. L. Moody's visits to this country was an earnest helper in the meetings. In these and many other undertakings he enjoyed the cordial co-operation of her ladyship, whose chivalrous spirit and manifold activities endeared her to a wide circle of friends. Lady Mount-Temple was in her eightieth year.

Temperance Notes.

THE enormous appreciation of a liquor licence in the course of years received illustration recently, when an hotel at Crewe, which was acquired by a local mechanic thirty years ago for £500, passed into the hands of a brewery company at the price of upwards of £16,000.

At the Railwaymen's Conference, held recently in London, a resolution was adopted deploring the vast expenditure of the nation on strong drink, and urging railwaymen to abstain from all intoxicants when on duty, and to discourage intemperance generally.

At a recent open-air meeting in Clapton, a crowd of men, mostly possessors of beer cans, took pleasure in making fun of the speakers. As the meeting proceeded and the interruption continued, a young woman suddenly snatched up one of the many children who were standing round destitute of the ordinary comforts of life, and exclaimed, "What publican has got this child's boots? What publican's child is wearing this boy's coat?" This smart and practical reproof instantly stopped the jeering men.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE work of the Association at Stafford Rooms is at present seriously crippled by a debt of nearly £400. Strenuous efforts are being made to raise a sum of £500 to clear off outstanding liabilities, and provide the means for furthering the endeavours made in the interests of young men. Stafford Rooms is a centre around which cluster many hallowed associations, dating back to the revival of 1859. Many who have had a part in this Christian effort of recent years will be glad to sympathize in a practical way with the workers in the present crisis.

The new premises of the Burton-on-Trent Association were opened on October 8 by the Marquis of Northampton, supported by the Mayor of Burton (Mr. J. C. Morris), Sir H. Bemrose, and other friends. Meetings were held afternoon and evening, the large hall being crowded.

The numerous agencies of the Association at Lyons are only carried on with continual difficulty. A heavy financial burden is being nobly faced, but cannot be borne by the committee without the aid of others. The interest of Christians in Britain is earnestly solicited, in order that work among young men in this important city may be continued. The treasurer is Mr. B. Perrier, 5, Cours Lafayette, Lyons.

The Eastern Counties District Conference held at Chelmsford on the 2nd inst. was a record one for the number of associations represented. The President, Rev. Canon Garratt, presided at the business meeting, when the reports were generally of an encouraging nature. Mr. J. H. Putterill's paper on "Our Responsibility to Unsaved Young Men" was much appreciated.

At the half-yearly conference of the Midland District Union, held at Sutton Coldfield on October 3, Mr. A. K. Yapp gave a profitable address upon "Causes of Failure and Conditions of Success in Y.M.C.A. Work." A public meeting followed in the Town Hall, when Dr. A. H. Evans, J.P., presided, and addresses were given by Revs. A. G. Williamson (Holy Trinity, Bordesley) and Frank Cox (Islington Wesleyan Church, Birmingham).

The City of Dublin Association junior branch opened the winter session with an evangelistic mission to boys, two redeemed slave boys from Africa taking part. The meetings were crowded, and from the first gathering the presence of God was realized. Many of the lads were led to the Saviour. The senior branch branch is also prospering; numbers of new men have joined. Mr. S. G. Montgomery, of Bangor, is to conduct a mission for men. An effort is being made to clear the £250 debt.

The Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, Association has held its annual meeting. The President (Rev. W. Fuller Gooch) presided, and Mr. Harold Rodgers (hon. sec,) gave the report of the past year's work which afforded much encouragement. A powerful address was given by Rev. A. W. Evans (Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road) urging "submission to the Divine searchlight," and abandonment of sinful or doubtful things. After a few cheery words from Col. Roberts and others, the meeting assumed a social character, and closed with evening worship conducted by the President.

The Lord Mayor of Birmingham (Alderman Edwards), presiding at the annual meeting of the Association in that city, claimed that the Y.M.C.A. produces worthy citizens, who are the truest guarantee for the progress and stability of the entire community. Dr. Monro Gibson and Canon Sutton followed with excellent addresses. The membership of the Association is now 825, compared with 787 a year ago. About £17,000 has been promised in aid of the large new building which the Association is about to erect.

"Christ for Young Men and Young Men for Christ" continues to be the motto of the Belfast Association. The report recently published covers two years of successful aggressive labour. The motto has been woven into every effort made on behalf of the manhood of the city, and many features of the work call for the deepest thankfulness to God. Among these are the increasing anxiety of the members for the extension of the Kingdom of Christ within and without their immediate circle; their innumerable ministries of love carried on in every neighbourhood of the city; and the deep, fervent missionary spirit which has led not a few to dedicate themselves to service abroad.

Nottingham Association has opened what promises to be its most prosperous season. The membership stands at 727. A feature of this Association's work is the "Young Men's Rally," a mid-week meeting for young men, of a distinctly spiritual character, and which maintained an average attendance of fifty throughout the summer months. At last week's "Rally," at which seventy-nine young men were present, the President unveiled a Roll of Honour, containing the names of eight young men who during the past three years have devoted their lives entirely to Christian work.

University Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

ANOTHER term has commenced, and with it another academic year. The number of freshmen up this year is rather in excess of last year's number. The Freshmen's Sermon —arranged annually by the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union—was preached by Rev. Prebendary Fox. It is encouraging to see the increasing desire there is each year to give freshmen a helping hand to take a definite stand for Christ at the commencement of their University career. Mr. Fox addressed the C.I.C.C.U. also at Ridley Hall, and took the Bible Reading in the Henry Martyn Hall on Sunday, as well as giving one or two other addresses.

Ridley Hall is very full this term; there are thirty-nine students in residence. This number has only once been exceeded. Rev. E. S. Wood has been added to the staff, and has also joined the pastorate for work in the University.

OXFORD.

The new academical year has begun with the advent of some seven hundred freshmen. Dr. Monro, Provost of Oriel, is the new Vice-Chancellor. He is one of many distinguished Scotchmen who have made for themselves a career in England. Born in Edinburgh, and educated at Glasgow, he came to Oxford at the age of seventeen. Brasenose claims him as an undergraduate, Balliol as a scholar, and Oriel as fellow and Provost. The evangelical clergy have just had a week of prayer relative to the work of the Oxford pastorate. The reception of so great a multitude, while welcome to those who feel that it is good to live in Oxford, cannot but impress those who are trying to meet the spiritual need with their responsibility.

The death of Major-General Christopher, a brother of Canon Christopher, which took place suddenly on September 25, removes one who was a warm friend of all evangelical societies, and for many years an active member of the C.P.A.S. Committee. Canon Christopher tells us that perhaps he never did so much in the way of sowing good seed as he did during his annual stay at Southsea, from which he returned a week before his "home-call" came to him. He was thus called away while "on duty." Surely it is so we should all like the home-call to come.

Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt was the elected preacher for the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union, which began its work with a Conference of College Secretaries at Wycliffe Hall two days before term. The sermon was preached in St. Peter-le-Bailey Church on Sunday evening last. "Decision for Christ" was Mr. Hunt's subject, and with intense sympathy he urged the many freshmen to choose between Christ and the world. The popular vicar of Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, has himself a son who goes up to Oxford this term.

The Missionary Union has made its arrangements for the term, and, among other visitors, Bishop Tucker is expected. The work of the Medical Mission on the North-West frontier of India was the subject of Dr. Summerhayes' address on Wednesday. It is encouraging to hear how the fierce tribes are often first influenced by ministering to their material needs. And yet this was our Lord's method. He ever made the lower minister to the higher.

We are sorry to find that an application made by a committee of ministers for the use of the theatre on Sunday evenings for religious services has been refused. The idea arose out of the mission held by the Free Churches last year, and still hope something may be done in this direction. The Cornmarket is crowded on Sunday evening with young people who will not attend the regular services.

The Y.M.C.A. has commenced its winter work. On Thursday a reception was held in the rooms in George Street by Councillor Theodore Dodd. There were about 300 present. Besides the music provided, Rev. F. G. Hazledine gave an address on Samson, calling upon the young men to do battle against sin in the strength of the Lord. At the first debate of the session held on Wednesday the subject of "Christianity and War" was discussed, and by a majority of seven the following resolution was passed:—"That in the opinion of this house war is inconsistent with Christianity."

Mr. Robinson Souttar, so well-known in Oxford as a devoted servant of Christ, occupied the pulpit morning and evening on Sunday at the George Street Congregational Church. It was the Sunday school anniversary. We are very glad to note that progress is reported all round in the Sunday school work. This is especially encouraging when we hear of decadence from all parts of the country. It may be noted that Dr. Murray, famous in connection with the well-known dictionary, read the report. More individuality was asked for in connection with Sunday School work. Men were wanted who would have the courage to devise new methods and then follow them.

Irish Notes.

UNDER the auspices of the Hibernian Band of Hope Union a conference has been held in Dublin, at which Mr. J. B. Moriarty read an interesting paper on "The Children's Act," and in doing so pointed out that no Act of Parliament to remedy the most glaring evil can be obtained unless it has strong public opinion behind it.

The second session has begun of the Bible Training Home, at Coalisland, East Tyrone, under the directorship of Mr. Walter Duff, of the Irish Christian Workers' Union. The object of this Home is to afford students and young evangelists already in the guild of service a free opportunity of a fuller equipment. Valued assistance in tuition has been given by Revs. E. T. Mateer, John Urquhart, and M. V. Dawson, M.A., LL.B.

The Autumn Conference of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union has been held in Belfast during the week, and was largely attended, among the delegates being Mr. C. L. Rothera, B.A., coroner of Nottingham, Canon Barker, and Rev. Peter Thompson, of London. Several delegates preached in Belfast churches on Sunday week, and addressed an aggregate of about fifty thousand persons. The Conference was entertained by the Lord Mayor in the Exhibition Hall, and one of the most interesting of all the papers read at it was that by Dr. Bickerton, of Liverpool, who urged the importance of training the young in temperance principles. Professor Sinclair, of Queen's College, Belfast, and one of the most eminent surgeons in Ireland, also addressed the Conference, and altogether the meetings were very successful. The Conference met once before in Dublin, and once in Belfast, so that it was the third of its kind held in this country. It came to Belfast this time at the invitation of the Irish Temperance League.

Welsh Notes.

THE Million Pledges Crusade seems likely to be taken up with much earnestness in North Wales. Considerable interest is taken in the movement, and strenuous efforts will be put forth to promote the success of the Crusade. It is hoped to secure 50,000 new pledges in North Wales alone.

From October 27 to November 3 will be observed as a week of self-denial by the Calvinistic Methodists of Wales. The proceeds are to be devoted entirely to the work of the Welsh forward movement, which is in urgent need of funds. Some £5,000 are required to meet existing liabilities and to initiate new activities. The latest statistics of the movement show a membership of over 3,000 members and nearly 20,000 adherents.

While Welsh Sunday schools are regarded outside Wales with considerable favour, there is reason to fear that there has been of late years a decline in their efficiency. In a recent paper on the subject by Professor Jenkyn Jones, of Aberystwyth University College, the decline is attributed to the lack of teachers thoroughly acquainted with the Scriptures and eager to instruct their scholars in the great vital truths of the Gospel.

One of the best known Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missionaries, Rev. Robert Evans, who laboured for years on the Khassia Hills, Assam, has severed his connection with the Foreign Missionary Society of the denomination, and is now devoting himself to promoting the interests of missionary work by pen and tongue in his native country. He has just concluded a tour of Pembrokeshire, and it is to be hoped that his visit will be productive of much good.

The Quarterly Association of the Calvinistic Methodists of South Wales and Monmouthshire were held on October 14-17 at Clifton Street Chapel, Cardiff. An excellent paper on Temperance was read on Wednesday morning by Rev. Maurice Griffiths, of Llanelly. The two public meetings in the Park Hall were well attended, and the speaking at each was of a high order. The former was presided over by John Owen, Esq., of Llandinam, and dealt with the subject of foreign and home missions.

The annual conference of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Temperance Association was held on Thursday, October 16, at Barry Dock, Glamorganshire. A resolution was passed declaring the Association to be opposed to the Gothenburg system, also another expressing hearty sympathy with the Million Pledges Scheme of the National Free Church Council. In the afternoon a women's conference was held, under the presidency of Mrs. Nicholas, of Newport. At the public meeting in the evening Mr. Herbert Roberts, M.P., was the principal speaker.

At the St. David's Diocesan Conference on Thursday, October 10, the Bishop, in his opening address, dealt with the subject of national religious education. He declared that an appreciable step would be taken toward the solution of this difficult problem if two misunderstandings could be removed. One was that the zeal of the Church for her schools was due to a desire for unfair proselytism. The second misconception was that Nonconformists cared less than Church people for religious education. The work of Nonconformist Sunday-schools was alone a sufficient refutation of the latter idea.

The programme of the next year's meetings of the Welsh Congregational Union has already been decided upon. It differs in some respects from the order usually followed, in that there will be no meetings for children, nor any for the discussion of educational and Sunday School work. On the last of the four days there will be preaching services, at which the leading ministers of the denomination will officiate. One interesting and pleasing feature of these services will be the presence and participation, by direct invitation of the Union, and for the first time in its history, of an eminent Calvinistic Methodist minister

Scottish Notes.

IN saying farewell to Dundee a few days ago, Rev. A. Alexander called attention to the danger of Christians letting slip many of their most precious opportunities of usefulness, just by declining to concentrate themselves on the life of the Church, and not using the means that the Church had supplied to them for the purpose of promoting the kingdom and glory of God. Why should not that congregation be an organ of God for the salvation of men in a far more wonderful way than it had ever been? He thought there was some feeling like this among the Christian people of Dundee that while churches were all very well to go to perhaps once in the day to enjoy the worship, or to belong to a respectable Christian connection, yet they were not the places where they get the greatest soul good. They went somewhere else for conversion. Christian men were doing themselves and the cause of Christ a wrong when they did not throw themselves heart and soul into the work of their particular church and congregation, and they would be held responsible for disposing of a magnificent opportunity if they did not use it for God.

The annual report of the Glasgow Poor Children's Dinner Table Society shows that the number of meals supplied last year was 190,402, being an increase on the previous year of over 30,000. During the summer months, when the tables were closed, sixpenny and penny food tickets had been distributed; and in special cases of need articles of clothing had also been supplied.

A memorial from a meeting of ministers and elders has been lodged with the College Committee of the United Free Church of Scotland, calling attention to Professor George Adam Smith's recent book, "Modern Criticism and the Preaching of the Old Testament." Attention of the Committee is called, in particular, to affirmations as to the polytheistic character of the religion of Israel until the age of the great prophets; as to "the absence of history" from the first nine chapters of Genesis, and their composition, to a large extent, "from the raw material of Babylonian myth and legend;" and as to the fanciful and parabolic character of the patriarchal narratives. Special attention is also craved, among further particulars which might be noted, to his naturalistic treatment of Messianic prophecies, and to his far-reaching doctrine with respect to the Old Testament sacrificial system, and the nature and virtue of vicarious suffering in relation to the substitutionary sacrifice of Christ.

A pastoral from the primus, read throughout the Scottish Episcopal Church last week, dealt with the desirability of Christian unity. We quote the following sentences: "We thankfully recognise the inner unity which already exists between those who truly believe in our Lord Jesus Christ. We feel, however, that something more than this is necessary if the will of our Divine Master is to be fully accomplished. We are satisfied that it is impossible to grapple with the infidelity, the neglect of God, the self-sufficiency, the pride, the love of money, the impurity, the intemperance, the worldliness, and other evils by which we are confronted unless there is more visible unity than that which now exists among professing Christians. We are painfully aware of the difficulties by which the whole subject is surrounded. It is on account of these difficulties that we wish to cast ourselves unitedly upon our Heavenly Father, to ask Him by the Holy Spirit to inspire us with a real desire for unity, and to show us any steps which He would have us take in promoting it. We have of set purpose avoided the consideration of any of the plans for union which have from time to time been put forward. We are satisfied from the study of Holy Scripture that, before any such consideration is attempted, it is desirable that, after the example of the early Christians, if not in one place, at least on one day and with one accord, we should kneel together before the throne of the Eternal Father."

A Curious Mirror.

"Grace," said a mother to her little girl one day, "shall I tell you a kind of Sunday fairy tale?"

"Yes, yes," said Grace, quite excitedly, "please do, mother. Your stories are always so nice, and I can understand them better than other people's."

"Well, there was once a little girl about nine years old, and her name was Elsie.

"She was bright and merry, and generally tried to be good; but of course she failed sometimes, and found it hard to be always trying. One day she saw a little mirror in a shop ticketed 'The Character Mirror.' 'What a funny name for a mirror,' thought Elsie, and she looked at it very carefully. It was not very large, was oval shaped, had a pretty wreath of silver ivy leaves round it, and a leg behind, so that it stood up like a photograph frame. When Elsie went home, she told her mother what she had seen, and her mother said: 'Elsie, I think I can guess why the mirror is called by that name. Would you like to have it, and find out the reason for yourself?'

"'Yes, please mother, dear,' said Elsie; so in the afternoon they went to the shop together, bought the mirror, and when they reached home her mother stood it in Elsie's bedroom on the chest of drawers facing the light.

"The next morning Elsie got up as soon as her mother called her, dressed quickly, gave a glance at her mirror, which looked quite bright, and ran downstairs.

"'Elsie,' said her mother, while they were having breakfast, 'I want you to sew that button on your shoe; there will be just time before you go to school.' Elsie coloured up, said nothing, but felt very cross. 'How tiresome,' she thought, 'just as I wanted to finish that story book I was reading.'

"After breakfast, she sewed the button on, but loosely and badly, and then hurried off to school. On the way she saw a little friend named May, on the other side of the road, who had just dropped her books and pencil box. Elsie thought, 'Shall I run over and help her pick them up?' 'No,' she said to herself, 'if I do I shall be late.'

"So she hurried on, but when she reached school she had five minutes to spare after all, and would have been in plenty of time if she had stopped to help May. When Elsie came home to dinner that day, she ran upstairs to take off her things, and looked at her mirror, which, alas! was now not nearly so bright as in the morning; she took a handkerchief and rubbed it, but it would not come bright again.

"'Oh, mother!' said Elsie, when she came downstairs, 'my dear little mirror is now quite dull, and it looked so bright this morning when I got up.'

"'Tell me, Elsie, all that has happened to-day, think over what you have done.'

"Then Elsie told her mother how cross she had felt about sewing the button on her shoe in the morning, and how she had let May pick up all her books instead of running over to help her. 'Ah, Elsie,' said her mother, 'that is it, and the little mirror won't be quite bright any more to-day; but you must try and not do anything to make it look more dull by evening.'

"When Elsie was in bed that night she said, 'Mother, I have tried very hard to be good, and my mirror has not got duller, and to-morrow I shall try to be quite good, and see if it won't look bright again.'

"Elsie did try very hard all the next day to be good and kind, and the little mirror grew bright once more, and then Elsie felt very happy. Every day she watched her mirror carefully. Sometimes it kept very bright, sometimes it looked dull, but generally it was bright; and the brighter it was, the happier Elsie felt.

"Now Grace," said her mother, "can you tell me the meaning of my little fairy tale?"

Grace thought a minute, and then she said: "I think the mirror was something like that long word you told us about the other day called con—cons"—"Conscience," said the mother, finishing the word for her.

"Yes," said Grace, "that is it."

"And why do you think it was like conscience?" asked her mother.

"Because," answered Grace, "it always told Elsie when she had tried to be good, and when she had not tried."

"Yes," said her mother, "that is it, and if you think of my little story it will help you to keep your conscience bright, and the brighter you keep it the happier you will be."

It is so common to be wilful. How foolish it would be for a man, when the guide says, "This is the way," to say, "Yes, but I like the other better; it is just as good, and I shall take it." And if he did, the guide would say, "Very well, then you must go alone. I know you are wrong, and you will most likely get into trouble." And perhaps the man goes on, and loses his way, or gets benighted; or he may even lose his life over a precipice, or among the snow.

So it is with us. We are continually getting into trouble, suffering pain and loss, having to retrace our steps, just because we will have our own way, and will not be guided by the loving voice of God within.

A teacher once asked the class, what conscience was? and a little child answered, "It is Jesus whispering in our hearts."

Now it just makes all the difference to your life and character whether you do, or whether you do not, obey "the voice within."

You have all heard this voice many times. If you doubt it, think a moment. Have you ever been alone in a room, or a shop, or a garden, and a thought has come to you: "Now that nobody can see me, I can take something I should like to have, or do something I should like to do"; and have you not seemed to hear a voice, which said: "It is not right; you must not take it; you must not do it?" That voice is conscience. It is the voice of God within you.

So then, to sum up, it comes to this: Conscience is the voice of God. We must listen to this voice, and when we hear it we must obey it. R. H.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, October 27.

"I will make it a Rule of my Life to read the Bible Every Day" (2 Tim. iii. 1-17).

THE Bible is the king of books. If all the books in the world were gathered together and could speak, they would unanimously crown and enthrone the Bible. It is pre-eminently the Book of God. It gives us the history of the world viewed from God's standpoint. It is the story of God's dealings with man. God is the Alpha and Omega. The opening verse in the Bible is "In the beginning God," and at the end we read of the throne of God from which proceeds the river of life, and all between is full of God.

It is also pre-eminently the Book of man. It is all men's Book. High and low, rich and poor, learned and illiterate, to each and all the Bible has some message. It is like the corn which is indigenous to every country. It is the source of the highest and noblest life. Wherever the Bible has come, it has made man strong, pure, and good. When in India I heard of instances of single Bibles being taken to far away villages, and as a result of their presence, though no missionary had visited the people, souls had been saved, churches had been formed, and morals raised.

There is a quality in the Bible which we know as inspiration. It is a difficult thing to explain, just as it is difficult to tell what we mean when we say that there is sweetness in sugar, and bitterness in unripe fruit. The bush of old burned with fire, and every verse in the Bible burns with the fire of God. Hence the Apostle says (and he wrote in his old age, after years of Bible love and Bible study), "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable." Let any thoughtful man read the Bible, and he must admit that it speaks as no other book does, and finds him at depths lower than any other book can reach. He looks into this book, and sees himself as he is in the sight of God. He handles this book, and finds that it is the sword of the Spirit; he bathes his soul, and finds in it waters of cleansing and rest; he drinks of its brook, and his spiritual thirst is gone.

For all these reasons it is a matter of great congratulation that one special point in the Christian Endeavour pledge is the undertaking to read the Bible every day. And, young friend, there is no such time for reading it as the early morning; listening to the voice of God before you hear the voice of man; give your freshest, brightest thought to the thoughts of God; put your ear against this heavenly telephone that the celestial and heavenly words may reach your soul. For my part I find nothing better than to use well the marginal references. I think I owe everything to the habit of looking up passage after passage, and comparing Scripture with Scripture. To group and class passages is an almost invaluable habit, and after a while one begins to make references for oneself.

We find the Bible adapted to every kind of need, whether for teaching, reproof, correction, or instruction. If you do not at once meet the special answer your soul requires, go on reading until presently you will come upon the precise answer to your difficulties, the medicine of your disease, the instructions or reproof for your ignorance, and will go forth to every sort of experience and work to which you are called "furnished completely." We often talk of the well-furnished mind, and sometimes look to the literature of the world with longing eyes, wishing that we were able to garner the precious thoughts of royal intellects, and yet the humblest amongst us may be wiser than the highest scholars if the Bible is made the subject of daily study. Only never take the Bible in hand without lifting your heart to the Spirit who inspired it, that He may open your eyes to behold the wondrous things that are written upon its pages. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The Welsh National Union will hold its next Convention at Barry, in June.

The Irish National Union has decided to hold its conventions once in two years for the future. The next will be held at Londonderry in 1903.

Rev. James Alley, who has been an admirable president of the Irish National Union, has been succeeded by Rev. James Maconachie, B.A., of Belfast.

Death of Joseph (Gen. l. 15-26).

Golden Text, Psa. xc. 12.

Intermediate History.

IN chapter xlvii. we find that all the promises made by Joseph to his brethren were more than fulfilled. The brethren were even employed in the king's service. During the seven years of famine everything was yielded up to Joseph. Money, cattle, land, were all given in exchange for food, and when he had bought all these, he gave seed, and set the people to work. Because he had saved their lives they gave willing service, with fruitful results. In all this we can trace the types of Jesus Christ, the great Saviour. After seventeen years' residence in Goshen Jacob died, aged 147. Chapters xlviii., xlix., l., to v. 14 give us the touching story of his farewell to Joseph, his blessing to Joseph's sons, and his wondrous prophecy concerning his descendants. In accordance with his wish, Jacob was buried in the cave of Machpalah, where lay the remains of Abraham, Isaac, Sarah, Rebecca, and Leah. The funeral procession was conducted with the pomp and splendour due to so great a man as Joseph. It was a state funeral by Pharaoh's command. The journey was more than 200 miles.

Unworthy Fear (15).

The power of conscience is great. Their suspicions of Joseph showed what they were capable of doing themselves. They could not understand the nobility of Joseph's character; he forgave them truly seventeen years before this. (16) The Jewish Talmud says that the brethren invented this message, thinking it would have more weight if it came in the name of their father. Picture these old men kneeling round Joseph's throne, humbly confessing their former sins, and beseeching his continued mercy—such a literal fulfilment of Joseph's early dreams. They even offer to be his slaves—once they had sold him as a slave.

Brotherly Love (19).

Joseph was pained at their doubt; and, with tears, again says, "Fear not;" even so is Jesus grieved when we do not trust Him and believe his promises. Joseph does not exonerate his brethren, but contrasts their actions with God's intentions; we cannot overthrow God's plans. Refer to Rom. xii. 19-21, and note how Joseph fulfilled the Spirit of the Gospel. Then he gave them more assurances (21), took pains to make them feel the truth of his love. An apt illustration of how God forgives all who truly repent. Refer to Isa. xxxviii. 17-22.

Happy Old Age (22, 23).

Joseph was fifty-six when his father died and he lived fifty-four years longer in honour and power; the greatest man in Egypt after the king, yet the loving great-grandfather. The children of his grandsons sat upon his knees, and their grandchildren came out of Egypt with Moses (Num. xxvi. 29-33). A godly youth brings a calm serene old age; Joseph had been an obedient son, a faithful slave, a wise ruler, a forgiving kind brother.

Peaceful Deathbed (24).

Death comes sooner or later to all, but the sting of death is sin, and this Jesus Christ has taken away (1 Cor. xv. 55-57). Faith in the Saviour gives us the victory. Joseph's faith was strong (Heb. xi. 22), his peace was perfect, and he had "leisure from himself" to speak comforting words to others. He was certain God's promises would come true, and he died an Israelite and not an Egyptian. All his grandeur had never changed his religion. We have many more promises than Joseph had. Do we believe them.

The Stone Coffin (26).

Joseph made his relative promise to take his remains with them when they returned to possess Canaan. He might have had a magnificent burial in Egypt. The embalming took forty days to complete, then the body was put in a wooden case with the likeness of the man painted outside. This was enclosed in a huge stone sarcophagus. How this great stone coffin standing somewhere in Goshen would keep the Israelites always in remembrance of God's promise, the great hope of the people! Refer to Ex. xiii. 19; Jos. xxiv. 32.

Reaching Neglected Children.

SOME time ago Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., moved a resolution at the Council Board of the Ragged School Union that a special effort should be made for more effectively reaching those thousands of "drift" children who never see the inside of our Sunday schools. Not in any objectionable sense Mr. Orsman calls these juveniles "ragamuffins," and the Council have taken the new enterprise in hand, which it is hoped will extend throughout all London. In order to reach the class intended the invitation tickets to the meetings are to be distributed outside when the schools are full. Grants of money will be made by the Council to meet expenses.

The first meeting of the kind described was held at Costers' Hall, Hoxton, on Wednesday last, when, as President of the Ragged School Union, the Marquis of Northampton attended and gave a short preliminary address to the children. The latter showed great eagerness to attend, and the Hall was quite filled with between seven and eight hundred of the class sought after. Mr. John Kirk gave a short address, in course of which he told the young people that the meetings were held in hope of helping them. The subject of Mr. Orsman's address was that of the text, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" By means of a powerful lantern, the text itself, hymns, and coloured pictures were displayed. The children repeated the text, joined in the choruses of the hymns, and readily answered questions which were put to them in connection with what was said. Escapes from flood, fire, and other dangers were illustrated and explained, the children throughout showing the greatest interest in what they heard.

The experiment promises to be a success. After all, it is only acting on the principles of the early ragged-school teachers, who followed Lord Shaftesbury's advice, "Keep to the gutter." Not that this class have ever been neglected, but this is a most determined attempt to reach and benefit them.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Sankey at Philadelphia.

DURING a visit paid by Mr. Sankey to Philadelphia, early in October, the great audiences which crowded to hear him taxed the capacity of the largest auditoriums available to its utmost capacity. The evangelist proved once more the power of the Gospel when preached in its simplicity by word and song, the great audiences being held in rapt attention. The singing of some of his favourite hymns touched the hearts of his hearers, his marvellous voice being preserved in its old clearness.

Tent Work in East Suffolk.

For twenty-seven years tent work has been carried on in East Suffolk with much blessing. Miss E. Sadd, hon. secretary, of Willingham, Wrangford, sends an interesting account of the operations from their commencement, telling of good progress, many souls being won for the Master. Of the present year's work Miss Sadd writes: "In all the places visited interest was manifested, and large numbers attended night after night, while on Sunday evenings the tent was packed. Numbers stood around listening attentively to the Gospel message."

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook at Wormley.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook has just concluded a fruitful mission at Wormley, in one of the churches connected with Cheshunt College. Much interest was aroused by this aggressive effort. The children's services were well attended, and a large proportion of the young people were led to decision, while a number of adults also confessed Christ. In addition to these gratifying results, Christian workers have to thank God for increased spiritual power. The tact of the evangelist in dealing with the anxious proved helpful. On several occasions the building was crowded to excess.

Ivy Place U.F. Church, Stranraer.

A mission, conducted by Mr. James Montgomery, formerly secretary to the Kirkcaldy Y.M.C.A., was commenced in St. John Street Mission Hall, Stranraer, on October 6, with interest, which has increased nightly. On Sabbath evening, October 13, the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, when the subject of the address was "God's Settling Day." In the after-meeting testimony was borne by many to deep blessing received during the week, while hands were raised by those anxious to be saved. From the many requests for prayer handed in on behalf of loved ones it is evident that the mission has taken a deep hold upon Christians. The addresses have been stirring, practical, and pointed. The workers have entered heartily into the mission, and we are hoping that a deep and lasting impression may be made. D. S.

Rev. C. H. Yatman in Belfast.

The mission conducted by Rev. C. H. Yatman in the Y.M.C.A. buildings at Belfast, to which reference was made in last week's issue of The Christian, deepened in spiritual power as the days went by.

On Sunday, October 13, no fewer than six meetings were held in all. The day commenced with a "sunshine hour," occupied by praise, prayer and testimony. Next came a "young men's rally," in the great hall. At two o'clock a meeting for women only was held in the minor hall, which was crowded. Mr. Yatman's striking address, on "Lot's Wife," made a deep impression. The three o'clock gathering attracted an audience, which thronged the large hall, half an hour prior to the advertised hour for commencement. The address was brief but powerful, and many remained to the after-meeting. In the evening Mr. Yatman again preached. Miss Lottie Mellor, the gifted blind vocalist, sang at most of the services.

Mr. Josiah Nix at Hornsey Road, N.

In the Wesleyan Chapel, Hornsey Road, N., Mr. Josiah Nix has just concluded a mission which was the means of stirring the whole district. The wise and witty words of the missioner secured ready attention from the first meeting, and there came a deep sense of God's presence, as, with pungency and force, Mr. Nix proclaimed the Gospel. The addresses to Christians, too, were blessed to the spiritual quickening of the Lord's people.

Some notable methods of advertising were adopted, conspicuously the use of a pantechnicon van, one end of which was covered by a sheet on which were thrown, by means of a magic lantern, striking announcements of the meetings and pithy words of warning and appeal. The church members processioned the district, singing and distributing cards of invitation.

The congregations steadily grew until it was impossible to accommodate the crowds. Many of the unconverted passed into the inquiry-room during the services. The midnight meeting on Thursday last was a prominent feature. Late in the evening the district was scoured by willing workers, who sought out the drunkards and frequenters of public-houses, and induced them to attend the service. Remarkable scenes were witnessed as the missioner spoke with characteristic point and pathos, and some "who came to scoff remained to pray." The gathering had a helpful influence, too, in awakening Christians to a new realization of their responsibilities towards the masses outside the churches. The final service, on Monday last, was most impressive, many, both young and old, entering the inquiry room.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson has conducted a mission at Gourock, in several halls. Much interest was aroused, and friends from various churches co-operated in the effort.

We have just closed a fifteen-days' mission at the Brunswick Rooms, Portswood, Southampton. Mr. Noah Taylor has been the evangelist, and his pointed and faithful addresses have been much blessed. J. T Holloway.

On Lord's Day last, Mr. Chas. Cook commenced a week's mission at Cecil Hall, Enfield Town. The building was crowded, and much blessing was given. Miss Angel and Miss L. Tubbs sang the Gospel. The services are being continued throughout the present week.

Mr. John Elliott has conducted services in the Devon villages of Exminster and Countess Weir. The attendances during the mission have been very cheering, both in the Gospel Hall at Exminster, and in the farm-house kitchen at Countess Weir. The power of God was manifested, and some professed conversion.

Open-air services were held during the past summer at villages in the vicinity of Pembroke, conducted by Rev. J. Harrington and Mr. W. C. Thomas. Anyle, Bosterton, Castlemartin, Merrion, and Stackpole were visited, and the services were much appreciated. Of one village it was said that no evangelistic service had been held there for over thirty years.

At the Wesleyan Church, Bletchingley, Mr. Monro Collings commenced a United Mission on Sunday last. Good congregations assembled at the four services which were held. Preliminary arrangements were made by a committee of workers representing the different denominations, and all the homes in the district were visited. There are many signs of blessing. Charles C. Marriage.

A series of evangelistic services has been conducted by Mr. James Dixon in Clooney Hall, Londonderry. Great interest was displayed, and the congregations increased as the mission proceeded. The address on "Daniel," to men only, produced a deep impression. Mrs. Dixon, who contributed solos in the course of the mission with good effect, conducted a meeting for young people, which was crowded.

A temperance mission has been held at Selby under the auspices of the local Temperance Society, in which Mr. Bob Johnson spoke to large numbers of people. Mr. Johnson recounted many of his experiences during his career as a "minstrel," and spoke of his own sufferings through indulgence in strong drink. Noonday meetings were also held in addition to the evening services. The mission proved spiritually profitable, and a number of temperance pledges were taken.

An inspiring ten days' mission has been conducted at Caerphilly (East Glamorgan) by Rev. F. C. Spurr, assisted by Mr. W. H. Kearns. The mission received the hearty support of all the Free Churches, the ministers of which took part in every service. From the commencement, the Market Hall, in which the meetings were held, was crowded. Arrangements were made to continue the mission in Welsh by Revs. Bryn Roberts (Ferndale), and John Williams (Cardiff). R. J. W. Sutherland.

The young men of the Mile End Artisan Y.M.C.A. have concluded a fruitful fourteen-days' mission. There were many cases of blessing. The secretary's office was used as an inquiry room, where willing workers pointed the seeking penitents to Jesus. In the open air, too, evangelistic efforts were vigorously maintained; courts and alleys were visited, and the publicans, behind their bars, heard the Gospel. The young men were reviled, and in some instances pelted with mud, but the neighbourhood was thoroughly aroused.

Requests for Prayer.

For services to be held in connection with Mildmay Mission Hospital, Nov. 3-10.

For a Mission of the United Free Church at Sanquhar, Oct. 27-Nov. 15.

For a mission being held in the U.F. Church, Pitcairn Green, Perthshire, lasting until October 31.

For God's blessing on a week's Gospel Temperance effort, Oct. 26-Nov. 2, at the Field Lane Institutions, Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

In behalf of the Evangelistic Mission to the young men of the City of Dublin, to be conducted by Mr. Samuel Montgomery and Mr. Leafe, Nov. 16-30, in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A., Sackville Street, Dublin.

From Lord Radstock.—I would ask continued prayer with reference to the presentation of Gospels in India. (1) That collections may be made only in the Holy Spirit. (2) That all arrangements by the secretaries of unions and myself may be directed by Him. (3) That those who have any part in the collection and distribution in India may be guided by the Holy Spirit. (4) That a door may be opened for the Scriptures to reach the 4,000,000 children in schools under Mohammedan or heathen management. (5) For a spirit of prayer and expectation when, on December 31, we pray for power from on high to come on the native churches.

Praise.

For wide-spread co-operation in the work of the Gospel in India, both at home and in India.

Personalia.

The Countess Schimmelmann has engagements in Germany every day until December 3. She asks prayer that the Word of God may be preached in power.

The severe chill from which Mr. William Forbes has been suffering has left him very weak. He is daily regaining strength, however, and hopes soon to be in harness again.

Dr. John Robertson, City Temple, Glasgow (at present at East London Tabernacle), has accepted the invitation to be the lecturer, along with Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, at the great Bible School for the Southern States, next March, at Atlanta, Georgia. Rev. F. B. Meyer was the lecturer last year, and his lectures were accompanied by widespread blessing. Dr. Robertson will, between the Bible School at Atlanta and his return to this country, conduct an evangelistic campaign among the churches.

Did It Pay?

By J. W. C. FEGAN.

The First-Offender.

ABOUT twenty-five years ago, long before the First-Offenders' Act was passed, a youth (we will call him Henry Williams) applied one evening for shelter at our Home, which was then at Deptford.

Under the gentle pressure of a brief cross-examination he confessed that he had run away from an uncle, we will say, in Sheffield. His father was on foreign service; his mother was dead; his uncle, a large baker, had employed him in his business. A good deal of money passed through his hands daily. There was no effective check upon his honesty.

HE YIELDED TO TEMPTATION

and embezzled several small amounts. At last his pilfering was brought to light. Fearful of his uncle's anger he levanted. Soon the few shillings he had when he reached London were gone, and he was friendless, pennilness, shelterless, and starving in our great city.

He seemed of a gentle, nervous disposition. Under his arm he carried a small box, carefully packed in brown paper, which contained Sunday-school prizes. As far as I could judge and I promised to see him out of his trouble and secure him a new start in life if I possibly could.

HE WAS SINCERELY PENITENT,

I telegrahped to his uncle, and soon had a reply that he was on his way to London. In the evening he arrived in a towering rage. He stormed at the delinquent, and, in spite of all my arguments and intercessions, vowed with the utmost rigour.

After a while he was weary, looked at his watch, said he was tired, and did not feel up to going back to Sheffield that night—would I take charge of the lad till the morning? I consented to do so with pleasure, hoping that after a night's reflection he might be more leniently disposed.

However, when he called for his nephew the next morning I found him as determined as ever to send him to prison. He asked if I had a yard or so of rope I could lend him, and when I asked him what he wanted it for, he answered, "To tie the rascal's hands together so that he shan't give me the slip." I told him for that purpose. As I found I could not persuade him to leave the boy in my care to give him another chance in life, at last, I announced my determination to accompany them to Sheffield and plead with the magistrate before whom Henry would be charged. He was obdurate and defied me.

I HAD NO ROPE TO LEND

He marched the boy over to Deptford Station and took tickets for Cannon Street. I took another. He hailed a cab for Euston; I followed suit. He booked for Sheffield; I did the same. He got into a compartment with his nephew; I got in too. He bundled his nephew out of that compartment into another. I moved after them. He and his nephew sat at one end. I sat at the other. He looked scowlingly out of the window; when there was a chance I exchanged winks with Henry.

As we got near Sheffield the uncle hummed, and sighed, and coughed, and by and bye sidled over to where I was sitting, and began "You know you're taken by that boy's smooth face and plausible tongue. So was I, but if you have anything to do with him you'll rue the day the same as I have had to. However, that's your lookout. I have been thinking I don't see why I should put myself out. I've lost enough already. I'm not afraid of what people will think or what the magistrate will say about not regularly checking the lad's cash; but the truth is

MY WIFE,

I don't like to upset her, so if she is against his being sent to gaol I think I'll let you try what you can do with him."

The aunt, I found, was a very sympathetic, motherly body. She would not hear of her nephew being charged at the police-court, so in about half an hour Henry and I were on our way back to London.

His conduct with us was most exemplary. After a time he confessed Christ as his personal Saviour, walked in consistent joined in Church membership, and took an active part in Christian work till he emigrated to try his tortune in America.

"NEWNESS OF LIFE,"

. . . . . .

The Sequel.

A few months ago I was told one evening that a gentleman wanted to see me. I was when I found the refined, precise, be-spectacled visitor, who spoke with the deliberateness, directness, and clearness which are characteristic of the American man of business, was my old protégé Henry Williams.

After being a little while in the States, and hearing how one and another were making fortunes by some improvement in the manufacture of articles in common use, he considered one item and another till at last he thought of one to which no one had apparently devoted much attention, but which is indispensable in almost every household.

First of all, he experimented in improving its quality, then in devising a machine to reduce the cost of production, so that he might be able to offer an article than any yet in the market. One of the great Trusts heard of what he was doing, encouraged him, and lent him money to perfect his machine, and finally lay down adequate plant. To-day he supplies 75 per cent. of the article that is used in the States.

He handed me his business card. For obvious

> The Williams . . . Manufacturing Co.
> (Williams' Process),
> 226, Grand Avenue,
> Chicago.

reasons I omit the name of the article and alter the address.

He told me his machine turns out thirty times as much daily as any machine in use in England, and that by a system of standardization, adopted by all manufacturers in the main industry, all the side industries can guarantee an exact fit by this size being called for instead of a shop assistant having to try ever so many kinds and sizes to find a fit.

He was staying at one of our mammoth hotels here with a view to establishing a branch business in this country.

So much for his business success. Better still, he is an office-bearer in a Christian Church, and his two eldest children are already Sunday-school teachers.

"Did it pay?" If you think so, then let me tell you that there are hundreds more of erring lads like Henry Williams needing a helping hand, with lives to be trained in honourable industry, and for the Saviour; that our Homes offer "An Open Door—Day and Night," not to London lads only, but to cases from all parts of the country, and, I may truthfully add, the distant ends of the earth. I wrote, "a helping hand"—"an empty hand," will not meet the exigencies of their plight, but with our and empty store, we must soon have nothing else to offer. Yet often a few pounds—sometimes a few shillings—will save a boy from the gutter and the gaol, and give him or perhaps for the first time "a chance in life." Will you help us to do so?

HEARTS TO BE WON

"ANOTHER CHANCE IN LIFE,"

The Widow's Importunity.

About eleven years ago a widow in delicate health, with four children dependent upon her, sought my advice and help. She was a Christian woman—a church member at Pastor Charles Spurgeon's Baptist Chapel at Greenwich. I need not hesitate to give her name—Mrs. Baker—for all that follows only reflects credit upon her and hers

I saw at once that she could not possibly bring up her four children without some supplemental assistance. To attempt it would inevitably mean on a living tomb in a workhouse.

My proposal was that I should train her elder boy a little, and send him to Canada; then take the younger one and do the same for him, and to comfort the poor mother. Rather than in any expectation that it would happen so, I said, "You don't know, Mrs. Baker, but what some day your two boys may send for you and their sisters, and you may be on the other side of the Atlantic." With the yearnings of a mother's heart she clutched at the straw of hope, and as she knew the value of prayer, she made this her petition day and night, in the faith that is not deterred by improbabilities, but faces even impossibilities in the calm assurance that "the Lord reigneth."

. . . . . .

The Sequel.

The elder boy went to Canada when he was eleven. The younger boy followed a few years later. From the time the elder boy set foot in Canada he had only one aim—to be the means in God's hands of answering his mother's prayers. At first, of course, he earned very little, but he denied himself every boyish indulgence, and saved every cent he could. By-and-bye his wages increased. He took no holidays, was most careful with his clothes,

BANKED EVERY DOLLAR HE COULD, only remitting his mother a pound or two occasionally, sending enough to buy his elder sister a sewing-machine when she was too delicate to go to service, and regularly contributing to the New Year's gift our old boys in Canada send each year to the support of their old Home—£2,480 in twelve years—every cent out of their own savings.

In the spring of 1899, when he was only eighteen years of age, he came into our Distributing Home in Toronto and planked down enough to bring his mother and two sisters out to Canada, and he had a house furnished to receive them on their arrival.

I went down to Liverpool to see Mrs. Baker and her two girls off, with a party of my boys a few weeks later, to Canada. On the way she gave me to read a letter from Walter, received just as she was leaving Greenwich that morning, with a few parting instructions. In it he said he had two pigs the boss was minding till she arrived, and they started housekeeping, and the mistress had promised some poultry. He hoped she would think he had laid out the money all right in the furniture. "All the women in the neighbourhood have advised me in the matter." Poor Walter! I imagine all the women in a Canadian village at a consulting committee on the purchase of furniture!

At Liverpool the officials on the landing-stage, accustomed to strange scenes, tragic and pathetic, heard some of the facts, and warmly and congratulated her on having such a noble son.

A few weeks afterwards I had a letter from Walter, telling me that the first night in their new home as a reunited family was spent in weeping and praising God till daybreak.

Last week I had a letter from Mr. Gunway, our superintendent at Toronto, to tell me that Mrs. Baker had called and left with him 10dols (£2) to send to me with her heart's grateful thanks for what had been done for her and her children.

FOR OUR WAIFS AND STRAYS,

"Did it pay?" If you think so, then let me tell you that there are thousands of poor widows like Mrs. Baker; that, while they are out at work all day, their children are under no supervision, and are liable to be led into all kinds of evil; the poor widowed mother's heart is almost broken by the struggle to earn, not a living, an existence, and the sight of her boys drifting to ruin. Is it not a double duty to "save this lad" and fill the widow's heart with praise and hope in place of anguish and despair?

At the end of a difficult summer, and face to face with the claims of another winter, we have towards the maintenance of our four homes for orphans and waifs and strays, or our comprehensive home-missionary work (Mission Hall, Medical Mission, Factory Girls' Institute, Working Youths' Institute, &c.) in S.E. London.

This great work for God entrusted to our care (built up by increasing toil is in most pressing need of immediate and substantial support.

DURING THE LAST THIRTY YEARS)

Church of England.

The Bishop of London has appointed Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. secretary of the Church Missionary Society, to the prebendal stall at St. Paul's Cathedral, vacant by the appointment of Prebendary Barlow to the deanery of Peterborough.

The annual meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society held at Exeter Hall on October 15, was a largely attended and enthusiastic meeting. Rev. W. F. Jepson spoke on work in Bristol slums, Rev. T. Prichard (vicar of Rhos) told of what is being done "among 10,000 Welsh colliers and bricklayers," and Rev. A. G. Welchman described the work in the London parish of St. Mark's, Victoria Park.

Speaking at Leeds at the Ripon Diocesan Conference, the Bishop of Ripon said that to ignore improvements in social life is to be ungrateful to God, and to ignore existing evils is to be unfaithful to man. "We do not," said the Bishop, "blacken our faces and knock down our fellow-men, but we issue a prospectus and rob the weak of their patrimony." Dealing with the present-day love of idleness, irresoluteness, and lack of reticence, Dr. Boyd Carpenter pointed out that "we whimper to the interviewer and take some solace when we can wipe our eyes before the public." He added that, viewing our declining population, our dwindling trade, our more luxurious lives, and the paltry questions which dissipate our religious zeal, he frankly acknowledged a great and grave apprehension whether, if a supreme moment of need came, we should be vigorous enough to respond to the call.

Congregational.

Rev. J. Chater, after a long and devoted ministry at West-End Church, Southport, has announced his intention to resign the pastorate.

The ninth anniversary of Pastor T. F. Waddell's settlement at Dorking was commemorated on September 29 and October 2. The services were largely attended and enthusiastic.

In connection with the Croft House Settlement scheme at Sheffield, the Garden Street Church is to be transformed. The upper part will form a commodious hall, primarily for religious services, and the ground-floor will be used for various departments of social work.

Baptist.

Mr. C. J. Tinsley, of Pastors' College, has accepted the pastorate of Stanmore Church, Sydney, N.S.W., and expects to sail from Liverpool on November 14.

The first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Percy J. Smart as pastor of Hornsey Road Chapel, N., was held on Thursday, Oct. 17. A large and enthusiastic public meeting was presided over by Rev. James Stephens, M.A., of Highgate Road. Addresses were given by the chairman, Rev. F. B. Monti, of Shepherd's Bush, and others, and were greatly appreciated. The secretary read the annual report, showing marked progress in all the various branches of work.

Anniversary services have been held in connection with the fifth year of Pastor D. H. Moore's work at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross Road, W.C. Rev. F. H. King (Stroud Green) preached on the Sunday morning, Mr. Russell Smith in the afternoon, and the pastor in the evening. On the Monday afternoon Pastor A. G. Brown preached from 1 Kings xix. 12, and Madam Annie Ryall sang two solos. A report of the work shows a healthy condition of spiritual life. The deaconess, Sister Dora, is doing a good work at the mission station.

On Thursday last, a public meeting was held at Belle Isle Chapel, N., to celebrate the completion of twenty-nine years work of the honorary pastor, Mr. Joseph Benson, L.C.C., whose efforts on behalf of religious, social, and philanthropic life are well known. In addition to his excellent record of work at Belle Isle, Mr. Benson was engaged in East London and Clerkenwell for twelve years, bringing up his total term of devoted service in trying to uplift his fellow men to forty-one years. The chapel was crowded. The secretary in his report stated that there are at present 368 members on the roll. The meeting was presided over by Mr. W. M. Dabbs, and was addressed by Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, Mr. J. Williams Benn, L.C.C., Rev. George Hawker, of Camden Road Chapel, and others.

Methodist.

Rev. Thomas Jackson, superintendent of the (Primitive Methodist) Clapton Mission, N.E., is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ministry in London. The quarterly meeting of Home missionaries recently passed a resolution cordially recognising Mr. Jackson's long, self-denying labours. In connection with the occasion an effort is being made to raise £100 for the social agencies of this extensive mission.

The anniversary of the Wesleyan South London Mission has been held with much encouragement. At the chief public meeting, held in the Great Central Hall, Bermondsey, the chief speakers were Revs. J. H. Hopkins, T. H. Meakin, and C. H. Kelly, and Gipsy Smith. The last-mentioned gave a fervent address in advocacy of home mission work. "Can the masses be reached?" is a question often asked. I suggest it would often be fitter for the Churches to ask, "Can the masses reach us?"

The fifth triennial Sunday-school Conference in connection with the Primitive Methodists has just been held at Hull. On Saturday last, the President of the Conference, Rev. H. B. Kendall, B.A., speaking from the chair, said he was glad to see, by the strength of the attendance, that Primitive Methodists fully realize the importance of influencing the young. Rev. Danzy Sheen read a paper on Sunday school work, and an animated discussion followed. In the afternoon temperance work in connection with Sunday schools, and the Christian Endeavour movement, were discussed, and in the evening a Christian Endeavour Rally was held, when earnest addresses were delivered by a number of ministers.

Presbyterian.

At East India Road Church, Poplar, E., the office-bearers and other workers, assisted by the Ladies' Dorcas Society, are doing heroic work. Rev. J. Nairn, pastor, says:—"The magnitude of our mission work may be understood when I mention that, within less than a quarter of a mile of our church, we have huddled together in small rooms over 7,000 families, which means about 40,000 of a population. Three-fourths of these are what we call poor people, while 50 per cent. of them have a desperate struggle to gain a livelihood during the winter months."

In his "Pastor's Notes" in the current issue of the Crouch Hill Chronicle, Rev. Dr. Meharry writes:—"Our Sabbath services give promise of good attendances; morning and evening the 'Meeting House' is well filled. For obvious reasons a large section of worshippers cannot attend both services; religious training of children, possible to many only on Sunday, regard to the rights of dependants or servants, active religious work in mission halls, with the necessary preparation—these are valid and creditable excuses. But carelessness, worldly-mindedness, disregard of the claims and sanctity of the Sabbath, profanation of its blessed opportunities, these are not excuses but glaring sins."

Society of Friends.

A new meeting house has been opened as a branch of the spiritual work at Bournville. The building was opened formally by a meeting for united prayer, attended by the leading Friends from Bournville, Selly Oak, and Northfield meetings, on the evening of October 4. This was followed by a five days' mission, conducted by William Nobie, assisted by a committee of some twenty Friends.

A meeting was recently held at Leeds to take a kindly farewell of Isaac and Esther Louisa Mason, in view of their early return to China. William Harvey, who presided, said it was well to have these links of living love between ourselves and missionaries, and to hear of the needs of the heathen world. Henry E. Clark, recently returned from Madagascar, and Mrs. Clark, also spoke acceptably, and many others likewise addressed the meeting, which was bright and helpful, and well attended.

The Working Men's Mission Hall in Lausdowne Road, Leytonstone, has grown out of a work for some time carried on in Acacia Road by Mr. J. Coles, of the London City Mission. For the purpose of the mission three railway arches have been taken, and while material has been bought, the labour has been given free of cost by workers interested. Contributions to pay for material and furniture may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. J. Matthews, 17, Barclay Road, Leytonstone.

Hanley Christian Mission and Poor Children's Guild is an organization which carries on many departments of evangelistic work with energy and devotion. Not a few in Hanley gratefully recognise that through the instrumentality of the mission they were brought to realize their spiritual needs. When the mission was without a leader Mr. W. J. Taylor, at the unanimous request of the members, and at considerable sacrifice to himself, accepted the superintendency. An effort is now being made to clear a debt which hampers the mission's operations. Mr. Taylor's address is 5, Grafton-street, Hanley.

Fallen Asleep.

Right Rev. Dr. SAMUEL SHONE, formerly Bishop of the United Dioceses of Kilmore, Elphin, and Ardagh, aged eighty-one.—Mr. T. WILKINS, for sixty years a Wesleyan local preacher in Dursley Circuit.—Mr. THOMAS WRIGHT, seventy-one, a Wesleyan class-leader at Northwich.—Mr. JOSEPH SIMPSON, of Mayfield, Ashbourne, an esteemed member of the Society of Friends. His interests and practical help were always on the side of movements for the advancement, social and spiritual, of the people.—On October 9, at Haddiscoe, Norfolk, Rev. ARTHUR WACE, rector of the parish and rural dean, aged fifty-two.

Notes & Comments

The Return of the Duke and Duchess. The young Royal couple who have been making a tour of the Empire in the name of the King have now almost completed the round of the globe in their travels, and will soon be home again. A merciful Providence has preserved their lives and health, and the work which they went out to do, of welding the distant possessions of the Empire, has been performed in a thorough and engaging manner. Some of the most winsome qualities of the late Queen seem to have descended to both our future sovereigns. They have shown invariable tact, graciousness of manner, and a happy insight into the right thing to do and to say. There are many bonds of love and pride attaching our distant colonies to the Motherland. The tour of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York has greatly deepened the sentiment of personal loyalty to the Royal House as a centre and representative of government. Whatever helps to keep the centre and circumference in close affection and goodwill is a guarantee of future stability and progress.

Sunday Concerts and the L.C.C. It is clear from the history of the Sunday concert movement during the past five years that only a stiffening of public opinion in defence of the Lord's Day can alter the easy-going policy of the London County Council. The first step toward this end is to clear the air of the dust of misrepresentation and hypocrisy. The condition against carrying on Sunday entertainments for "private gain or by way of trade" is entirely nullified when, in such places as the Alhambra, as much as £40 a night is paid for rental, while the Guards' bands, the officials, and the performers are all paid for their services. Even the better-class theatrical papers show alarm at the prospect of Sunday labour that is looming ahead of the "profession," while others are claiming that if Sunday concerts are permitted there is no logical reason for the exclusion of the drama. There is no doubt, whatever, that we are face to face with an imminent crisis on this question. Watchfulness and firmness are specially called for just now.

A Call to Vigilance. Especially is this the case in view of the approaching Licensing Sessions for public places of amusement. Every legitimate means should be taken to strengthen the hands of the L.C.C. Committee in dealing with such applicants as make an attempt, under the guise of philanthropy, to secularize the Lord's Day, and use it for purposes of trade and profit. The high-sounding professions of the Sunday Society, and the National Sunday League, with their supporters, have not been borne out by facts in the past. All sorts of abuses of the permit granted to them have been committed and passed by without reprimand or punishment. The pretence that managers of Sunday concerts are actuated by altruistic motives is clearly refuted by the fact that concerts and entertainments which did not result in monetary profit were promptly discontinued.

Morals before Politics. The November elections are close upon us, and the great question is, Who are to be returned as Councillors? In these local elections throughout the country, party spirit runs very high, and men are frequently elected to office solely on political grounds. We commend to our friends everywhere a resolution passed by the Leeds Free Church Council, urging the Christians of that city to return only those men who pledge themselves to put moral questions in the forefront of their programme. We would, with the utmost earnestness, urge that every effort should be made at the elections to send to the Councils gentlemen who will do something practical for the morals of the people. All abettors of drink and gambling should at all costs be kept out of these Councils. Let us use our power at the poll.

Bazaars and Gambling. The Bishop of Hull, in a paper read at the York Diocesan Conference a few days ago, took occasion to appeal to the clergy neither to permit raffles at their sales of work, nor to patronize bazaars where they were allowed. The evil referred to is a growing one, and is illegal. But apart from that, religious bodies should stand entirely aloof from everything connected with gambling, and, at least, protect the young and the thoughtless from its temptations. Much depends upon the formation of a healthy public opinion, and certainly the House of God and the Sunday-school are the places in which we should begin.

A Rival to the Public-House. It is encouraging to find that constructive schemes of temperance reform are spreading so fast. Among the most recent attempts to provide practicable substitutes for the public-house is an experiment which has been made by Rev. Harry Wilson in the East End, involving the erection of a working men's tavern that includes all the attractive social elements provided by the ordinary "public," except intoxicants, with the addition of excellent cooking. Much intemperance is due to badly-cooked food, with its legacy of indigestion, and this last-mentioned addition is a move in the right direction. The provision of rooms for social intercourse, with benefit clubs, entertainments, &c., is essential in any effort to counterbalance the attractiveness of the ordinary tavern and gin-palace. Such schemes deserve to be carried out on a large and bold scale all over the country.

Crime and Drink. The alarming increase of crime in the crowded counties of Glamorgan and Monmouth drew forth some drastic comments from Judge Williams at the recent Quarter Sessions. The chief source of this is clearly the curse of drunkenness; but the Church Times passes this by with the suggestion that School Boards and Dissent are the exciting causes! As a matter of fact, were it not for these two agencies, the one educational, the other religious, matters would be in a bad way indeed in South Wales just now, and it is a pity that, with the statistics on which Judge Williams based his charges, such an irrelevant issue should be raised upon the question. If Churchmen and Dissenters would but lay their ecclesiastical antipathies aside with the strong intention to unite their forces against the common enemy, there would be some chance of dealing with it. Drink is the enemy of all great centres of population, and till this is clearly acknowledged by all reformers their efforts will be nullified by their prejudice.

Drink and Commerce. It is a common observation—not always to our credit—that "men are soonest touched in their pockets." Men often allow their morals and their consciences to be attacked without protesting, but they are quick to guard their pockets. It may be that by this lower means the conscience of the country will be awakened to the folly and vice of its enormous drink traffic; for it is pretty clear that unless our working-men cease to degrade themselves with drinking, the commerce of the land will be seriously injured. The papers are always crying out against foreign competition, but, as Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., told the commercial travellers at Leeds last week, both America and Japan are seriously competing with us in our own wares, and success awaits them, for temperate Japan produces the finest craftsmen in the world, while in America two-thirds of the workpeople are total abstainers. Beer and spirits cannot compete with this sort of thing. Mr. Caine does not go too far when he says, "If we became a nation of total abstainers we could defy the world."

The Case of Miss Stone. There is evidently more than appears upon the surface with regard to the kidnapping of Miss Stone, the American missionary. Two or three significant things have come to light through newspaper correspondents, who apparently have had no communication with each other, but whose united reports point to the fact that this lady's abduction was carried out with the knowledge, if not with the consent, of the authorities. These statements, if justified, mean that America must take steps to protect her citizens from official outrage. Under the shadow of Turkey any act of violence seems to be legitimate.

The Millions of India. The "Gospels for India" movement, which Lord Radstock has already explained in our columns, has at length taken definite shape; and it is the subject of much prayer and devoted effort on the part of many Christian workers. As we have already announced, several societies and agencies are co-operating; and of these full particulars are given in an interesting circular, entitled "The Millions of India," to be had from Messrs. Hunt, Barnard & Co., 20, Blandford Street, Baker Street, London, W. (6d. per dozen, post free). As it is desirable that subscriptions in aid should be received by the secretaries of the various societies and unions by December 1, we would urge intending helpers to procure copies of the descriptive paper without delay.

A Maharajah's Cry. Speaking at a recent meeting of the British Indian Association, the Maharajah of Durbangha referred feelingly to the great masses of the Indian people who were unable to make their voices heard, and he urged the almost self-evident fact that a country which is in itself a continent, cannot be governed by a foreign nation without the goodwill and assistance of its inhabitants. Paying a high tribute to the Viceroy in his anxiety to learn the real wishes of "the children of the soil," and to consider their grievances, the Maharajah added:—

I feel very strongly that one of our most crying needs is the establishment of friendly relations, both social and political, between the Anglo-Indian and Indian communities. . . . Allowing for the differences in religion and its environments, which are undoubtedly great, there is no reason why the Englishman and the Indian, from whatever part of the peninsula you take him, should not work together in the promotion of the happiness of the country in which they both live, and in helping that country to take its proper place in the federation of Great Britain.

There has been a tendency and a habit on the part of the English in India to regard the natives as inferiors rather than fellow-subjects, and consequently the Indian has regarded the Englishman simply as an invader. With a better feeling, the opportunities of successful mission work would be multiplied greatly, and the results correspondingly encouraging.

Concentration Camp Mortality. The mortality of little children in the "concentration camps" in South Africa since the month of June is so appalling that the most urgent representations are being made to the Government to devise some means whereby the death of these little innocents should be stopped. The common instincts of humanity demand that every possible means to lessen the evil conditions which cause this painful result should be adopted. The Bishop of Hereford's words, in appealing to the Government on the question, will find an echo in the hearts of all lovers of children, whatever their views of the root and origin of the war may be:—

It is a dismal and hateful thought to multitudes of English men and women, without any distinction of political party, for we are all one in our pity for these little children; and the more truly patriotic we are, the more hateful is the thought that England should, through the death of these children, be blotting out the whole generation, to say nothing of the root of bitterness which must inevitably grow out of their graves.

Criticism as Affecting Preaching. It was an excellent idea to give the ministers recently assembled in Congress at Manchester an opportunity of fairly facing the question of the effect of modern criticism upon the pulpit message. That question needs facing, and honestly dealing with. There can be no doubt that too many men, in their feverish desire to be "up to date," have inflicted incalculable damage upon congregations in creating a spirit of uneasiness, if not in absolutely pouring contempt upon received truth. Principal Hodgson reminded his brethren that "modern criticism has brought in its train some companions of questionable origin and standing." Extremely questionable, we should say, as for instance the superb dictum that "the supernatural is impossible, therefore wherever recorded it must be rejected." We heartily agree with the conclusion of Principal Hodgson that a preacher "must, by personal, vital experience of the saving power of Christ, know whom he has believed, and be sure that Jesus is the Son of God." That experience will render any man superior to a word-peddling and artificial criticism.

A Barren Fig-Tree. Speaking at the recent Unitarian Conference at Leeds, Rev. W. Bowie took strong exception to the adverse criticism that Unitarians have nothing to offer man "but mere intellectualism, a string of negations, a shibboleth without meaning or inspiration, a religion which did not touch the heart"; and he went on to state that "Unitarians designed to offer men a religion which was the truest, noblest, and purest, and the most effective." To most thoughtful minds, however, the concise summary of Socinianism, with its vapid appeals to the unsanctified intellect, its denials of "the faith as it is in Jesus," its high-flown claims to superior morality, and its chilly atmosphere, will seem a fairly accurate one. No other foundation can any man lay than that which is laid, even Christ Jesus. Whatever Unitarianism may design to offer, it has hitherto tendered husks instead of the Bread of Life; and for three centuries, instead of growing and developing with the nation's growth, it has simply been struggling for bare existence, until to-day it is without any beneficent influence in the national life.

Out and Indoor Preaching. Even Unitarians are beginning to face the fact that empty churches cannot be filled by mere preaching, and a suggestion is made by one of their leading preachers that an attempt should be made at some kind of open-air appeal. Mr. Jacks, in his lecture at Manchester College, Oxford, put the case strongly:—

When I go to one of our empty and languishing churches, when I listen to an able, learned man, whose weekly lot is, as I heard it described the other day, "to preach to six adults, four children, and fifty-seven gaslights," I am bound to say that that state of things, characteristic as it is of whole groups of churches, does not strike me as a triumph of practicality.

How far the prevalence of Unitarian tenets proclaimed in the open air may remedy this sort of thing is a problem; but the suggestion itself is one that would be well for the Evangelical bodies to adopt. If the people will not come to the churches, the Gospel must be taken to the people. So it began at the beginning; so it will be to the end. Aggressive evangelism is the sole guarantee of progress.

The Culture of the Body. The growth of periodical literature dealing with physical culture is an unmistakeable sign of the times. Within a single decade there has come into existence what may almost be described as a cultus of the body, to which several magazines are entirely devoted. So far as this new movement is teaching men the art of resisting weakness and disease and developing themselves into strong physical beings, it is bound to do good. A weak body is a great hindrance to any man. At the same time we miss from the class of literature to which we have referred a note which ought to be found there. Physical strength is an excellent thing to possess; but men need not, therefore, enter into rivalry with horses and elephants on this score. The cultivation of brute power is a poor affair, if there is not added to it both mental and spiritual force, and to the latter things little, if any, reference is made in these magazines. The ideal is presented to us by Paul—body, soul, and spirit preserved blameless, and anything short of this is not perfect strength, if for men it is worthy to be called "strength" at all.

Forgiveness and Penalty. The accusation is very old which pronounces the Gospel of Divine forgiveness to lead men to think lightly of sin. Quite recently it has been revived by one or two leading spirits. But its impeachment arises from misunderstanding of the real nature of Christian forgiveness. "The Gospel of rose-water"—as a great journalist described the teaching which dispenses with mediation, and makes of God simply a good-tempered Being, easy to persuade—may well fall under the charge of being too light, too easy, too unreal. But the forgiveness offered by our Lord and Saviour is no easy, verbal affair. It removes condemnation, and restores the sinner to Divine favour, but it does not dispense with the law, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." David was forgiven for his great sin, but the rod fell heavily upon him, nevertheless. We need to beware of the two extremes—one of which would make sin too great to be forgiven; the other of which would destroy all notion of penalty. Forgiveness, however, changes the character of the penalty from punishment to chastisement—a great difference.

Another Mediator. A Sunday or two ago Cardinal Vaughan "re-dedicated England to the Virgin Mother of God." In his sermon upon the occasion, he informed his hearers that:—

'As in human society persons closely allied to people in power possess great influence with them, so is it in the region of grace. Jesus Christ gave us his Mother to be our Mother, to plead for us as a Mother. We present our petition, but we ask the Mother of Jesus to accompany us, to present it with us, to stand by us, and take us by the hand when we approach the presence of the Eternal Father.

Yet Christ said, "No man cometh to the Father but by Me." Thus to-day, as when our Lord addressed the Pharisees of his time, "The Word of God is made of none effect," through the traditions of men.

A Danger of Week-End Trips. One of the reasons alleged for the widespread decline in attendance at our Sunday schools is the growing irregularity of many of the teachers. For this the fashionable week-end trips are largely responsible. It is becoming a frequent indulgence on the part of Christian people to run out of town to the sea or country side with some of the cheap excursions. This may be a good thing for the physical health, but it is a bad thing for all forms of Christian service. Nothing is more essential to a successful school than the grace of continuity on the part of the teachers. One who is careless in this matter is likely to lose the scholars one by one, until at last he get "discouraged" at a state of things for which he alone is responsible, to the lasting loss both of his scholars and himself.

The Grace of Continuity. Can it be that this quality of "continuity" is being gradually lost out of the list of religious virtues? The influences of the day are greatly against it. Population is constantly shifting. Events move fast. The number of human interests is increasing. There is a general unsettlement of feeling and restlessness in the air. And so men of spirit do not stick so closely to any form of activity as in earlier days. They are too much in love with change. We saw recently a tablet erected to a venerable Bible-class leader in a country town, who was credited with having carried on his class without a Sunday's intermission for forty-eight years, his habit being invariably to return for the Sundays when on his holiday, and to get his class to his own house when indisposed. The result was an incalculable amount of good done, and a number of lives strengthened into Christian manhood. It is most essential that such a quality as continuity in Christian work should not be left out of the list of virtues.

Practical Papers.

On Jerry-Building.

THE present generation has witnessed one development to which its predecessor was a stranger, viz., Jerry-building. We have only to compare the average middle-class dwelling-house of to-day with those which remain of the former period, to notice the difference in stability, if not in elegance. Our ancestors built for use; we build for show.

It is curious that this should be the characteristic of a generation which prides itself upon its advance in contrivance and civilization. That it possesses these qualities in a marked degree none will dispute, but that it has used them to the best advantage is open to question. The jerry-builder's power of contrivance to evade his responsibility is certainly prodigious, but his conception of the requirements of civilized living is crude indeed. He builds to sell, and the luckless buyer pays to suffer.

We, too, are builders, and we, as well as they, will have to suffer for any defective work of ours. We can neither sell, nor let on lease, our lives; we have to live in structures of our own building, so to speak; therefore, it pays best to be thorough, especially in the FOUNDATION.

There are the three departments in our life work—Education, Character, and Religion, and jerry-building in either of these will occasion disappointment to our best and highest ideals. Education affects chiefly those who are at school, and yet we are all learners in the greater school of life. Character building applies chiefly to young people who have left school, but are not yet settled in their final lifework; yet none are too young to say, "I must take care how I build," or too old to feel their character is not yet fully developed. Religion we are tempted to place entirely at the disposal of those of maturer years; yet, while to such it is indeed a priceless blessing, it was the little children to whom Christ said the Kingdom of Heaven belonged, and a young man upon whom when the Lord looked He "loved him." Nature has no fairer offering to lay on the altar of her God than the fresh blossom of budding youth of either sex. We all have a share in each of these departments, and what applies to one applies more or less to all.

Jerry-building, then, means bad work in the outward structure. Internal work is called

DECORATION.

Even a child can understand that no ornamentation, however pretty, will make up for bad foundations, cracking walls, or a leaky roof, as those of us who are householders have learned to our cost. But the jerry-builder relies largely upon this to let or sell his house. People are naturally attracted by what they see; and "what the eye does not see the heart does not grieve over"—until the wet gets in!

By no means do we despise the decoration of a beautiful life. David and Jonathan were "lovely and pleasant in their lives;" and the saints and sages of all time have left a lasting impression upon the world. But that was because the foundations of their life were real and solid.

We have sometimes been humorously asked, "Would you rather be a bigger fool than you look, or look a bigger fool than you are?" Fortunately, that is a question we are not bound to answer. But therein lies an important germ of thought:—Is it preferable to appear better than we really are, or to be better than we appear? In other words—which is the more important—Reputation or Character? The tendency with most is to choose the former; but remember—Reputation will not avail us at the Judgment seat; Character will. Take care of Character, and Reputation will take care of itself. The highest reputation you can have is, "Good and faithful servant." "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."

Another feature of jerry-building has its counterpart in the moral and spiritual sphere—

SPECULATION.

The speculative builder, as he is called, borrows money on the security of the houses he is about to erect; and hopes that a ready sale will enable him to repay the loan. Should his expectations fail, he loses the houses and a good deal besides.

Painful sensations are occasionally caused in City circles by the failure of men who deal in stocks and shares. A gentleman of years and experience said recently:—"I have made some exceptionally good deals in my time, but if I had always been content with four per cent. I should have been a richer man to-day."

There is a good deal of speculative Christianity about. Attempts have been made to replace the old and sure Gospel with a Gospel which is not another. But being too surely founded, it has withstood both storms of criticism and blasts of unbelief. Fifty years ago the advance of Rationalism was so marked that those who taught it asserted boldly that the end of the century would see its heel upon the neck of a dead Christianity. But time has shattered that speculation, and many more.

THE TESTING TIME.

Yet many who profess and call themselves Christians enlist under the banner of the unbeliever, either in creed or conduct. But the new creeds of worldly and sceptical Christianity are doomed to fail. Their walls are gaping wide; the chilly blast of doubt is penetrating their inmost parts; and, in spite of the decoration of fine phrases or of ornate ritual, their inherent rottenness stands revealed.

Already the testing time is come. Men who have taught the broader doctrines have discovered that they do not make for holiness of living, or save the sinner from his sin. There is no greater proof of this than the revived effort in the Churches along the old time-honoured Gospel lines. Men must be saved before they can be taught. They must be born again ere they can live the Christian life.

The world may mock at those who call themselves the children of God, and deny themselves its fleeting pleasures for higher and more lasting joys; but "the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, 'The Lord knoweth them that are his'" (of whom the world is not worthy). The inscription has also its solemn injunction, "Let him that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity."

We may be but lowly folk, not versed in classic lore, but if we have been redeemed by the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, we are built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone (Eph. ii. 20). G.

Stores Prayer Union.—The ninth annual meeting was held recently. The report expressed great thankfulness for continued blessing, and the grace given to witness for God amongst fellow-workmen, also for the fact that God had set his seal to the work. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. J. E. Bignall (chairman), J. H. Putterill, R. Banister, and Dr Stoney, all taking up different aspects of the same subject of testimony for Christ in business life. Communications with reference to the Union should be addressed to the hon. sec., Mr. W. G. Green, 1, Hatfield Street, Stamford Street, S.E.

"The Christian" Almanack, 1902.

AS usual at this season, the present issue includes as a supplement (without extra charge) "THE CHRISTIAN" ALMANACK—for 1902. Those who know the helpfulness of a well-chosen and suggestive daily text, will find here a daily remembrancer of the grace and goodness of the Lord to his children. Beginning on January 1 with "My presence shall go with thee" (Ex. xxxiii. 14), the reader is led on through thoughts suggested by that truth to the care of the Good Shepherd for his poor and needy ones, and other "exceeding great and precious promises" contained in that Word "which liveth and abideth for ever." The notes of praise for manifold mercies, and of intercession for ourselves and others, are interwoven with the counsel and guidance of the Holy Spirit for the life of growth in grace and holiness.

In view of the devastation caused by the famine in India, and of its continuance at the present time, it is fitting that the illustrations introduced should deal with the suffering people of that great country. In the centre is a portrait of the Pandita Ramabai, the woman who, going back some years now, dared to stand forth alone and be the widow's friend and defender in the face of threats, danger, and misrepresentation.

She had the advantage of being the daughter of a Marathi priest whose views were far in advance of the age in which he lived. He had determined to teach his wife first of all; but this was so hotly opposed by his friends that he left civilization and retired to the forest, where he could carry out his views without hindrance. In this forest home Ramabai was born and grew up carefully educated, by her mother chiefly, until she was seven years of age. Until she was sixteen she was allowed to remain unmarried, and to wander about from one sacred place to another with her parents, her education still continuing, so that she came to be looked upon as a prodigy. When her father and mother died, she went along with her brother from place to place delivering lectures and studying the state of the women, but it was not until she was eighteen years of age that she felt it laid on her heart to do something to help them.

Her marriage changed the current of her life, and her purpose became for the time more vague and indefinite; but at nineteen she was herself a widow, and it was gradually brought home to her mind that there was now a double call on her to devote her life to the cause of the girls and women of her country who were in the same sad position. What has been accomplished by her means as a leader among Christian reformers is well known. The headquarters of her operations were established at Khedgaon (re-named "Mukti"—Salvation), where hundreds of young women are now in training for different spheres of usefulness. The pictures given include a group of "Rescued Famine Boys at Poona," and a similar one of girls in "The Barn at Mukti." Widows are shown as teachers and Bible-women ("Saved to Save"), "Gardening at Mukti," "Weaving," and in "The Hospital."

The illustrations on the Almanack are reproduced from PANDITA RAMABAI (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott), in which will be found full particulars of the career and life-work of this devoted and distinguished servant of God.

Church Army.—We have been asked to point out that, for many young fellows leaving school, or undecided as to the choice of a vocation, the Church Army affords a free and valuable training as colporteurs helping in evangelistic work, and that in this way some who may have a special aptitude for classics, and who have the means to enable them to take orders, may be able to test their own suitability before taking the decisive step. The sixty-three vans travelling throughout England continually afford the most varied experience, as each week they go into a new parish; and the young candidate is placed in a different van every three months, that he may be brought into touch with new methods of work. The hon. chief secretary of the Army is Rev. W. Carlile, 130, Edgware Road, W.

"Hid in the House of God."

By Rev. G. P. McKAY, Stoke Newington.

"And he was with them hid in the house of God six years; and Athaliah reigned over the land" (2 Chron. xxii. 12).

[CONCLUDED.*]

As a historical event this incident is of utmost interest and value. The lessons it imparts are many. Chiefly, it teaches us to trust in God for the fulfilment of his word. What He hath promised He is able also to perform. Whatever powers oppose, or foes combine, his purposes can never be defeated. Evil for a time may seem to triumph, but its overthrow is sure. The right and the true must ultimately be victorious. For six long years the lawful king may be in hiding, and a base usurper occupy the throne; but in the seventh year a change is seen. Then is the right arm of the Lord made bare, the humble are uplifted, and the proud and pitiless are cast into the dust.

Then trust in God thro' all thy days;
Fear not! for He doth hold thy hand.
Though dark thy way, still sing and praise,
Some time, some time, we'll understand.

AN ALLEGORY.

But this is a prophetic scene, as well as one historical. "Which things are an allegory," might safely be inscribed over this page in the annals of Israel. Here, as in a glass, the Christian man can see his Lord. When He was born in Bethlehem of Judea, was the attempt not made to take his life? With Mary he was hidden and preserved in Egypt. But that was not the only effort made by Satan to destroy the royal seed. The men of Nazareth were stirred by him to take the Saviour to the brow of the hill whereon their city stood, that they might cast Him down headlong. The waves of Galilee were lashed to fury more than once by him who is "the prince of the power of the air," that they might swallow up the son of David. Finally, roused by the devil, men cried, "Crucify Him! crucify Him!" and to Golgotha was He hurried. There He was crucified. The nails into his feet and hands were driven, and the sword of the pursuer at last reached his heart. Then, surely, to the fierce destroyer was the triumph given. "This is your hour, and the power of darkness." So far as the world's records go, Calvary saw the last of Christ! He was crucified, dead, buried! There's the end; and now a vile usurper occupies the throne. "God of this world" he is called, and men bow down to him. "Athaliah reigned over the land!"

"JESUS IS COMING."

Some of us know, however, that the rightful monarch is not dead. God did not suffer his Holy One to see corruption. In the midst of the strife and confusion around the Cross the Almighty was at work. What though "the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" "The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his anointed. Yet have I set My King upon My holy hill of Zion." Rescued from death, there is He, safe and secure "in the house of the Lord!" No shaft can reach Him there, and He is calmly seated at "the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool."

Jesus is earth's rightful monarch;
Jesus is earth's King and Lord;
Jesus is earth's Prince and Saviour;
Reign He must, by all adored.

The hidden prince had hidden ones around him in the house of the Lord. His nurse was there, and probably also, for a while at least, Jehoshabeath who rescued him. Their case illustrates one aspect of the Christian's life. "Your life is hid with Christ in God" (i.e., "in the house of God"). "Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man; thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues." More and more should the believer seek to dwell apart. His place is in the Holy Sanctuary; "in heavenly places in Christ Jesus"; sharing his Master's banishment and pain; waiting, like his Lord, for better days to dawn. It is not his to curry favour with the world. Athaliah must not be his friend; nor must he seek advancement in her court.

Our life is hid with Christ,
With Christ in God above;
Upward our heart would go to Him,
Whom, seeing not, we love.

"THE CROWNING DAY IS COMING."

But that is only one aspect of the Christian's attitude. With Jehoshabeath he may be inside waiting for the day of his King's crowning; but with Jehoiada, he is also to be outside working, working for that same great, glorious end. Jehoiada went about telling of the hidden heir, of his undoubtable identity with Joash, of his marvellous escape from death, of his youthful comeliness and grace, of his wisdom far beyond his years, and of his claims on all who were of loyal heart and true. Thus did the priest prepare the way of the prince, and it is given to us to hasten, by similar ways, the coming and the kingdom of our Lord. This is an aspect of the Christian life that is not often dwelt upon. Indeed, the common teaching of the day is not in that direction. It is most frequently affirmed that our Lord has already attained his throne; that even now his kingdom is established; and that all we need to do is to strive and to pray for its further extension. Scripture and experience of the world, however, show that the reign of Jesus has not yet begun. Prophet was He when upon the earth as man, priest is He now in heaven above, and He must come in power and great glory before He can be King. Let it be ours to work and wait and watch and pray for that great consummation.

Our Lord is now rejected,
And by the world disowned;
By the many still neglected,
And by the few enthroned;
But soon He'll come in glory,
The hour is drawing nigh;
For the crowning day is coming by and by.

*In the first part, the story was told of Athaliah's wicked design to destroy the seed of David; and the second described the manner in which, by the agency of Jehoiada and Jehoshabeath, the young king Joash was saved, and the Divine purpose vindicated.

Madras.—Rev. K. R. Gopalah Aiyar, M.E. Mission, Kodantbakam, Madras, writes to the effect that evangelistic efforts in the suburbs of Madras have resulted in an awakening among some of the Pariah caste, who forsook heathenism and professed faith in Christ. The Mission Sunday-schools are attended by many heathen children.

Christianity Applied.

As suggested by the days of the week.

SUNDAY.—Spiritual. God is a Spirit. This is the day of spiritual things. Be in the Spirit on this day. Here is the best day of the week. To-day we may climb to the mountain top and speak with God. Be determined and prepared to meet Him; whether at home or in public worship. Forget yourself to-day; think only of God and your fellow men. This day will then be your delight.

MONDAY.—Meditation. Not meditation on yourself or on your worries, but meditation on God. In the midst of your morning's work—as you serve behind the counter, as you are cashing cheques, as you teach the young, as you are toiling through a heavy wash, as you are turning out a room, as you are labouring in a workshop, let the blessed thought flash through your mind—"Thou art at my right hand." Let your thoughts dwell upon the truth that He is close at hand; aye, "nearer than hands or feet."

Be Thou at my right hand,
Then shall I never fail,
Uphold Thou me, and I shall stand,
Fight, and I must prevail.

TUESDAY.—Trust. Yes. Sunday seems a long way off now. The blessings of that day have lost a little of their lustre. We mortals soon droop the wings of the spirit. Your spirit flags. That is precisely why you should trust. Fresh trials have come to you—disappointments, and even sorrows. Do not fret and chafe and fidget. Be still and trust, and you shall know that the Lord, He is God. Your faith is failing; then throw yourself into the arms of God, and they will lift you and set you in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

Simply trusting all this day,
Trusting through a stormy way;
Even when my faith is small,
Trusting Jesus, that is all.

WEDNESDAY.—Work. Work. Work for God. And remember that does not mean the work you do on Sunday, in Sunday-school or classes, only. Let your day be a busy day, of "going about doing good." "Ah, but," you say, "it takes me all day to work for my living." Just so. Do that work for God. Carry on that business for God. Sweep that room for God. And do you not think that somewhere you could get in a smile, a kind word, a courteous act? Perhaps you could even lift a burden, or share a sorrow.

All toil is sanctified that's done for God;
And though the meanest worker in the land
I toil for One who looks upon the heart,
And thus my humble task is lofty, grand!

THURSDAY.—Thanksgiving. My God, I thank Thee! How often do you say that from your heart? His mercies are new every morning. Will you forget to thank Him?

Not for the praising lip alone,
Nor e'en the praising heart;
I ask Thee for a life made up
Of praise, in every part.
Praise in the common things of life,
Its goings out and in;
Praise for each duty and each deed
However small and mean.
Thus shall no part of day or night
From sacredness be free;
But all my life in every part
Be fellowship with Thee.

FRIDAY.—Fruitfulness. Seeing that you are growing in grace, your watchword must be—Forward! Have you vanquished that sin to-day which yesterday vanquished you? Are you more loving than you were? Are you more patient—more forgiving? Make your "to-days" always better than your "yesterdays." Yours should be a light that "shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Godliness is a continual growth in grace.

Up, up, climb up the way
The saints have always trod;
'Tis rough, and steep, and narrow too,
Enough! It leads to God!

SATURDAY.—Selflessness. Here is the secret of a happy life. Look back on the past week. Look back on those days (would there were more!) in which you utterly forgot yourself. They are the best days you ever lived. Perhaps you hardly know which they were, but God does. You forgot yourself, but He was thinking of you all the time. Live for God and for men.

Higher than the highest heaven,
Deeper than the deepest sea;
Lord, thy love at last hath conquered,
Grant me now my soul's petition—
None of self, but all of Thee!

"Missionary Day" at Manchester.

THIS day, so well known now for many years as a season of blessing and refreshment to missionaries and Christian workers, as well as of pecuniary help to many important missions throughout the world, was observed on Friday last in the Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester. The leading societies were well represented: Right Rev. Bishop Ridley, of the C.M.S., fresh from Caledonia, Vancouver; Dr. Baedeker, from Russia; Dr. Ella Mitcheson, of the Church of England Zenana Society; Mr. Walter B. Sloan, of the China Inland Mission; Rev. E. R. Hassé, representing the Moravian Missions; Rev. David Baron, work among Israel; and many others.

After breakfast, the words of the veteran Bishop Ridley were listened to with the close attention which his long, self-sacrificing labours command. Drawing a vivid picture of surroundings at once dark, depressing, and void of spiritual communion, into which the missionary enters at God's call, the Bishop contrasted the results accomplished through ordinary people who put themselves into God's hand, to make them what He wills, and to fulfil his purposes through them.

ON THE NORTH PACIFIC.

He told of a diocese as large as England and France combined, with dense forests, beautiful lakes, great rivers, no roads, one railroad, only three postal deliveries in the year, and of determined opposition from the Pagans, which he admires, as indicative of their manhood.

There now exist, as a result of God's blessing on twenty-seven years of labour, a chain of mission stations, with churches, elementary and high schools, homes for boys, girls, and destitute women, and an industrial mission; whilst five nationalities of Indians, who formerly met only to fight, now kneel side by side to receive the Communion. "What should we say?" he asked, in conclusion, "to men rowing in November from Newhaven to Dieppe and back again, in an open boat, to fetch a doctor to an obscure church worker, and then feeling hurt at the suggestion of payment? Yet this was practically done when converted Pagans for three days faced the storm to bring a doctor to their beloved missionary, Miss West. 'She has given her life to us,' they said, and for her they risked theirs."

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

At the morning general meeting, Rev. David Baron followed in New Testament order, "To the Jew first." Basing his remarks on John i. 10-13, linked with Deut. xxxii. 8, 9, he said that though the Jews as a nation had rejected their Saviour, the line of faith in Israel had never failed—there was still a remnant according to the election of grace. There have been, and always are, Israelites who count it their greatest blessing to bow their knees to the Lord Jesus Christ.

WOMEN'S WORK IN NORTH INDIA.

Dr. Ella Mitcheson, C.E.Z.M.S., followed with a brief outline of women's medical missionary work in North India. She advanced as an earnest plea for this most effective means of making Christ known, his own example, and his commission to his disciples, "to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." In spite of Mohammedan opposition, a tiny hospital of six beds in 1886 had, in 1901, grown into the Duchess of Connaught Hospital, with thirty-nine beds. Prejudices are being overcome, and hearts touched. One official, after signing a stipulation to the Government that their women should not be brought under Christian influence, later on thankfully consented to his own wife entering the hospital for a course of treatment, which resulted in her cure.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

Rev. E. R. Hasse, of the Moravian Missions, said:—"The Moravian Church is the Moravian Missionary Society; they are practically one. Its members believe the Church exists for the purpose of spreading the Gospel." Referring to the small community at Herrnhutt, he told in outline the fruit of faith and prayer, "with no funds behind," that was willing to "become slaves" if needs be, for Christ's sake. In Greenland, China, Abyssinia, Central America, Australia, amongst lepers in Jerusalem, and into the most difficult field of Thibet, the Moravian missionaries have entered, and successfully laboured. Most touching was the account of the work among the lepers, and also among the decaying races of the world, where the Lord seems to have called the Moravian Church to labour.

DR. BAEDEKER ON HIS TRAVELS.

The afternoon meetings were presided over by Mr. L. K. Shaw, and were largely attended. A good company gathered, and Dr. Baedeker gave an account of his recent visit to Russia, where the Lord has given him the privilege of preaching the Gospel in the prisons of that vast empire—even in Siberia—with many tokens of blessing on his work. He asked prayer for a lady who had gone to live on a prison island for the sole purpose of working among the captives.

IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The Doctor was followed by Mrs. Spencer Walton, who pleaded for Africa, and earnestly wished she had two natives to exhibit, one a heathen, and the other a Christian, so great a difference does Christianity make in their lives.

Referring to the ruined churches and mission stations in Swaziland, Mrs. Spencer Walton described how a missionary had taken his life in his hand and returned on foot to his old station to see how the native converts had fared. Arriving at dusk, he found them praying, and when he made himself known there was great joy in that place. The greatest trial in missionary life (said Mrs. Walton), is the lack of workers to enter the many open doors.

EVENTS IN CHINA.

Mr. Walter B. Sloan referred to the departure to China of Miss Cream, who is supported by the Strangeways Institutions, and asked prayer for her voyage and future work. Mr. Sloan described the present attitude of the Chinese to missionaries as friendly, and mentioned the welcome and courtesy accorded to some who have returned to Shan-si. Pleading for a deep personal devotion to the Lord Jesus, in the light of his speedy Return, the speaker urged to a fresh ministry of prayer and effort, and told of God's faithfulness in supplying the needs of the outgoing party of missionaries—seven in all. The "In Memoriam" hymn was afterwards sung with deep feeling.

THE EVENING MEETING.

Before the evening meeting there was a season of earnest prayer. Mr. L. K. Shaw presided, and Mr. Baron spoke on his recent mission journey in Eastern Europe, where he found a great awakening among God's ancient people, and preached the Gospel to Israel with much acceptance and blessing. Dr. Eleanor Dodson stirred all hearts as she described the intense need of qualified lady missionaries in India, and gave instances of cruel native treatment.

For the public meeting, the most important of the day, the Hall was crowded. The chair was taken by Prebendary Macdonald, and Bishop Ridley and Dr. Baedeker were again the speakers. After their most interesting addresses,

The Chairman gave the closing words, pressing home upon the hearts and consciences of those present the great truths which had been reiterated during the day. He urged personal consecration and whole-hearted surrender as the great need and the only preparation for the service to which the Lord is calling his Church to-day. He expressed his increasing love for the Strangeways platform, which seeks to unite all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity, in view of his near Return.

This Missionary Day—long to be remembered—closed with the solemn words, "Seek to be filled with the Spirit," for—"The Holy Ghost makes all the difference."

Need for Ragged Schools.

WHEN the late C. H. Spurgeon first came to London, in 1854, he at once became a prominent leader in ragged-school enterprise, which was then a veritable service of heroism, because real danger attended it. In course of time it became a custom for the working staff of the Ragged School Union, accompanied by a number of teachers, to pay an annual visit to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and this pleasant reunion is still continued, this year's meeting having come off on Monday evening, last week, in the lecture hall of the new building. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon cordially welcomed his friends, and gave an address. Mr. John Kirk, Secretary of the Ragged School Union, as well as other specialists, also took part.

In taking account of the outlook as Mr. Spurgeon found it, when he came to New Park Street Chapel, we can estimate what has been done in over forty years. The young preacher's interest in ragged London had been awakened and stimulated by the intensely graphic descriptions which, from time to time, had appeared in "Household Words." Out of 150 children who were first brought in, when Mr. Spurgeon established his school in Mint Street, two out of three had never been to school before. The large old houses had been tenanted by good families, when their windows overlooked the fields and gardens of Surrey. There was an old-time farmhouse, as it continued to be called, which as a lodging-house, had 200 beds in its forty rooms. There were some veterans at Monday night's meeting who were old enough to remember these pioneer days, and who have lived to see the Metropolitan Tabernacle surrounded by a number of ragged schools of the primitive type.

At the meeting, Miss Coles, who may be regarded as the Ragged School Union's registrar-general of cripples, said that there were now over 6,000 names of cripple children on the roll. These are visited by volunteer visitors; but from their sad houses a cry comes forth to the Church of Christ. The cry of the children of London is quite as strong as that which comes from the children of India, and they need the same sympathy. It was hoped that more than ever would be done during the coming winter.

After the recital of an original poem by Mr. Potter, Mr. Thomas Spurgeon showed how desirable it was for teachers to have an open ear, and preachers an anointed ear to hear what God would speak. He had been thinking of the Prophet Isaiah's words, "A little child shall lead them," and he began to dream about the Golden Age and the thousand years of peace, which would come literally, and which he began to think was being advanced. In some cases a little child had been an instrument of benefiting older people, and that was an encouragement.

While waiting to cross Oxford Street when the traffic was at its height, a little girl had suddenly slipped her hand into his, and with her in charge he got over swimmingly, for drivers who might not hesitate to run over a parson were more careful in regard to a child.

Soldiers' Christian Association. — The Soldiers' Christian Association has already sent to South Africa over eleven tons of Testaments, Gospels, and healthy literature, yet every mail brings letters begging for further supplies. The plentiful gifts of magazines and papers at the beginning of the war have given place to a famine of reading matter, while every facility is afforded by the authorities for distribution. The secretary of the Association is Mr. S. E. Burrow, Room 24, Exeter Hall.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

REV. DR. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

CONTINUING the stirring meetings which are doing so much to arouse the country to a deeper realization of the iniquities and sorrows of the drink traffic, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry spoke at two magnificent demonstrations in St. George's Hall, Bradford, on October 23.

A noteworthy feature—which may well be followed in every city and town yet to be visited—was added to the work at Bradford by the bringing together of many of the children of the public schools, of whom there were no fewer than 2,800 in the great audience of some 4,500 persons. Dr. Henry valued this lovely thought on the part of someone, which gave him the opportunity of sowing the seed of pure Gospel temperance in virgin soil. No doubt impressions were made of an enduring order, which will be found after many days. Juvenile smoking must sooner or later form a subject of foremost importance in connection with the mission—a work in which Mrs. Henry has deep interest, and has also had some experience in America. A more favourable occasion than that of these assemblages of school children at afternoon meetings could not be imagined, and, in the face of the alarming practice now prevailing among mere children, the necessity is an urgent one.

A RECORD IN PLEDGE-SIGNING.

The evening meeting attracted an overflowing audience. Long prior to the time fixed for commencement, the capacious building was densely crowded. So imposing a gathering in the cause of temperance in Bradford has not been seen for many years.

A telling address was given from the chair by Mr. H. B. Priestman, who said they were met to help forward a cause which is fraught with good. It is a painful thought that the nation is spending no less than £3,000,000 sterling a week upon strong drink. Temperance advocates have looked in vain for help from Parliament; if, however, we cannot as yet close the public-houses by legislation, we can, at any rate, endeavour to close the mouths of the people against the drink. Mr. Priestman concluded with a fervent appeal to the churches to unite, in the interests of the Kingdom of God, against the drink traffic.

Dr. Henry followed with a powerful and convincing address. Great Britain, he said, cannot afford to invest £230,000,000 in the manufacture of strong drink; she cannot afford to spend £160,000,000 every year in the support of grog shops; she is doing a mighty injustice to the industrious and labouring population by spending £25,000,000 more annually for the maintenance of these public-houses than the value of the entire output of mineral wealth under the Union Jack. If England were sober nine-tenths of her prisons and seven-eighths of her workhouses would be empty; six out of every seven of the hospital cases in the country would never occur, and insanity, murder, crime, and pauperism would largely be done away with. The voice of great men and the voice of the Christian Church testify that the first and the worst foe of the Kingdom of God is the drink. No fewer than 1,300 new pledges were secured. This is the largest number hitherto recorded at one place during the campaign. Dr. Henry gladly and gratefully speaks of the presence of the Jubilee Singers as a powerful attraction to both young and old.

THREE TEETOTAL MAYORS.

At Huddersfield, on Thursday last, Dr. Henry received a cordial welcome at a reception given by the Mayor (Alderman R. M. Shaw) at the Town Hall. A feature of the proceedings was the presence of the Huddersfield Mayors of the past, present, and coming years, all three being total abstainers. As at Bradford, a large number of ministers were present, and several spoke in support of the crusade.

At night there was an enthusiastic meeting in the Town Hall. The Mayor, who presided, forcibly advocated the claims of total abstinence, and dwelt on the terrible havoc that is wrought by the traffic in strong drink.

Dr. Henry's address was received with enthusiasm. He expressed the belief that if Huddersfield could have an opportunity of answering the question, "Do you want the public-house or not?" Every public-house in the town would have to close. A community that can elect three consecutive total abstaining mayors has the power and ability to destroy the drink traffic in its borders. Adducing a variety of statistics, and giving many telling illustrations, in support of his arguments, Dr. Henry concluded with a strong appeal to those who had not already signed the pledge to do so at once. A large number of people accepted the invitation.

Following Huddersfield came Nottingham, where a large meeting was held in the Albert Hall. Alderman Mellors, who presided, said that he had little faith in the mere diminution of public-houses. One large public-house will do more harm than three little ones. Therefore, if we adopt the principle of getting two licences surrendered in order to get one fresh one granted, there will be no advantage to the temperance cause. The most important remedy is teetotalism.

Dr. Henry, in the course of his address, said that the Million Pledge Crusaders have two thing to do—first, to arouse the public conscience concerning the enormous evils connected with the drink; and, secondly, to secure 1,000,000 total abstinence pledges on the part of men and women who have never seen their way clear to subscribe to the declaration that by God's help they will abstain from alcoholic beverages. Proceeding, he said the time has come when Christian communities should make a stand against public-houses. The public-house stands as an iconoclastic power which is seeking to annul every Christian influence, and to undo every effort put forward by a Christian community.

"A MENACE TO MORALITY."

The demonstrations at Leicester were held in Melbourne Hall, on Sunday and Monday last. Two meetings were arranged for each day, but Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers are so anxious for work that they willingly took advantage of a special opportunity on Saturday evening, when the Christian Endeavourers of Leicestershire were assembled for their annual "rally" in the Temperance Hall. In the afternoon Mr. W. H. Hope, of Liverpool, superintended a junior rally, which quite filled the hall. The evening meeting is annually crowded, but the special attractions this year brought an enormous throng. On Sunday evening, in spite of a large overflow meeting, throngs had to be turned away from the doors, and though Melbourne Hall has had many great audiences, it has seldom been so severely taxed.

Dr. Henry, in his appeals for definite action in relation to temperance, raised the whole subject to a very high level. As he spoke on Sunday afternoon of rolling away the reproach of a bad habit, of a defenceless traffic, of a wicked waste of wealth, and of a menace to morality, decency, and justice, many hearts were stirred to a truer appreciation of the magnitude of the evil to be combated, and of the necessity of earnest and united action in opposing it. On Sunday evening he made an impassioned appeal for decision for Christ.

Alderman Sawday presided on Monday at the closing meeting, which was crowded. In the opinion of those who have travelled with Dr. Henry he has never given a more convincing and illuminating address than he did on this occasion. Rev. W. Y. Fullerton also spoke, and nearly 400 pledges were taken.

THE CHURCHES AND THE CRUSADE.

In pointing out that the crusade is to culminate on "Temperance Sunday," November 24, and during the following weeks, Rev. F. B. Meyer, as president of the movement, writes: "We make one last appeal to any Free Church Councils, groups of churches, or individual churches, to ministers and Sunday-school superintendents, to join us in this great effort to get one million fresh pledges before the close of the year. The nation was never more interested in temperance reform; the allusions made to the question by statesmen in their public speeches show how largely the subject is bulking before the national mind. There is a disposition on the part of our people to favour total abstinence. Now, surely, is the moment for the Church of Christ to take the lead in this great movement, and to institute meetings for the express object of advocating the cause of temperance, and obtaining pledges. It is not too late for these meetings to be arranged, if they are taken in hand at once. We shall be glad, also, if friends will remember the immense expense to which we are put, and will forward help."

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Nov. 2-5, Norwich (2-3, Calvert Street Free Methodist Chapel; 4-5, St. Andrew's Hall); 6-7, Cambridge (6, Guildhall, 7, Zion Chapel); 10-13, Manchester (Free Trade Hall), 14, 15, Wolverhampton (14, Mount Zion Chapel, 15, Agricultural Hall); 17-22, Birmingham (17-19, Town Hall, 18, Central Hall, 20, Carr's Lane Chapel, 21, Friends' Institute, Moseley Road, 22, Town Hall); 23-25, Bristol (Colston Hall); 26, 27, Cardiff (Park Hall); 28, Portsmouth (Town Hall); 30-Dec. 1, 2, Brighton (Dome).

Scottish Sabbath Schools.

THE annual public meeting of the Scottish National Sabbath School Union was held in Glasgow last Thursday. Ex-Bailie Fife (chairman) gave a stimulating address, pointing out to teachers the important part which their work takes in the real progress of the community, as well as of the church. The growth had been very great. From the very small beginnings of 1801 there were now in Scotland over 5,500 schools, 56,000 teachers, and 550,000 scholars. In these they did not reckon the valuable offshoots or developments of the work—Foundry Boys', or other Sabbath forenoon religious agencies, Boys' Brigade, or Christian Endeavour Societies. Of the total there were in the national union 1,200 schools, 21,000 teachers, and 220,000 scholars, and by them £11,000 was collected for missions. If great and lasting results had during the past century accrued to the church and general community by the self-denying labours of such a body of Christian workers, amid surroundings and conditions at times anything but conducive to the help of the workers, what might be expected in the century now before us, when the thought, and culture, and spiritually-minded of the Church were engrossed with the question how best can we train and equip this great army?

In the course of an address pointing out the lessons of the past and present position of the work, Rev. Principal Rainy said that, though a great deal had been done in the way of providing materials for the help of Sabbath-school teachers, he thought a feeling was being awakened in the minds of thoughtful persons that justice would not be done to the teachers unless we contrived somehow to furnish facilities for acquiring a right conception of the best methods of coming into contact with young people. He was profoundly thankful the matter was being taken in hand, and earnestly asked the younger teachers to be forward to avail themselves of any opportunities furnished for getting hints and instruction in method. It was by the study of teaching itself, by instruction in the art of teaching, that the teachers in our ordinary schools had reached so very improved a style in the way of educating young people, and it was of importance that those engaged in Sabbath-school work should be put upon the footing of administering the work with skill and ability. He was quite sure that a good deal of effort failed or was thrown away not from any want of diligence or goodwill, but because while some had a natural art and aptitude that made them largely independent of what he was now speaking of, others could not without consideration and instruction make the contribution to the good cause that they certainly, he had no doubt, desired to make.

Addresses were also given by Rev. R. H. Fisher (Edinburgh), and Rev. John P. Struthers (Greenock).

"What do I Give? And Why?"

The Rev. C. G. HANDLEY MOULE, D.D., Bishop of Durham, writes:—

"I have read 'What do I Give? And Why?' with deep attention, and I have already, within two days of the perusal, made use of its heart-searching message in the pulpit. To myself it has come as a call to fresh and close consideration of the sacred duty of giving to and for the Lord. May it do the like to countless other hearts; then indeed we shall hear less of deficits in our Master's work."

Mr. EUGENE STOCK writes:—

"Mr. Middleton's 'What do I Give? And Why?' are searching ones indeed, and he presses them home with quite extraordinary force. I wish every Christian would read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it. We should soon bid good-bye to deficits!"

SUNDAY, November 3. Philippians iii.

HOW often the Apostle reiterates the opening thoughts of this chapter! He is never weary of saying that the true Israel of God—the veritable children of Abraham—were not those who could trace their descent to the great patriarch, but such as were animated by his spirit, and shared his faith. And this is important, since we could have no right to appropriate God's covenant promises, unless we were included in the Seed, which is Christ. When, for instance, I read the glowing pages of Isaiah, I dare lay claim to them all, since I, too, am a child of Abraham. Note those three symptoms—worship in the Spirit, glorying in Christ Jesus, and the abandoning of all confidence in one's own goodness.

How interesting it is to be admitted to study the heart of a Pharisee! We can see how it could endlessly count up its "gains," as a miser his sovereigns. Supposing one line of defence was invalidated, there was always another to fall back upon. Surely one of these cork-jackets would float him through the stormy seas, into the harbour of salvation and acceptance with God! But when he caught sight of the perfected salvation of Christ, he let them all go. Thus a woman will forget all her sham jewels when she gets a diamond ring to pledge her engagement to one she loves.

All Christ is ours. The moment we believe, the title-deeds of our inheritance are placed in our hands; but we have to gain them by faith, and prayer, and experience. We have been apprehended to know Him and the power of his resurrection, to experience even here his resurrection-life, and much else that it passes human speech to describe; but we must press on to apprehend, to occupy, to possess our possessions. We do this best when we forget past sins, past attainments, past successes, and reach towards the goal. And though it may seem to recede as we advance, yet in the effort to reach it, we enter on the enjoyment of the prize—which is blessedness.

MONDAY, November 4. Philippians iv.

The keynote of this chapter is Joy. I was quite humiliated the other day to see one of my own portraits associated with some words I had penned. I felt that no one would be attracted to read what I had written by the weighty and stolid expression on my countenance. What attracts the world is Christian joy. The children of this age know what gaiety, hilarity, boisterous mirth, and high spirits are; but they have no deep and lasting joy, rising up in this wintry world like a geyser spring in the Arctic Circle. Hence the need of obeying the Apostle's admonition, Rejoice.

The secrets of joy are enumerated for us—that we have beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord; that we have learned moderation—the even balance of the mind; that the Lord is near; that we are called to be anxious about nothing, prayerful in everything, thankful as to anything. Peace is twin-sister to joy. She is one of God's presence-angels, who come to garrison and keep the heart that trusts all its burdens to the Burden-bearer. What a relief it is to hand our burdens completely over, and receive instead his peace! Ah! what a sentinel is this, pacing to and fro before the heart's door. And the peace of God shall be followed by the God of peace; and his advent is Joy.

Whether is it easier, to abound or to be abased, to be full or empty, is a problem. Likely enough, the universal confession would be, that the saddest, darkest days of our life have been, in many respects, our best. Life is a school, whither we are sent to learn many things that will serve us well in our Father's home, and the great life which awaits us. But the only way of mastering these lessons is in union with the strong Son of God, who strengthens the weakest, and supplies the need of the poorest, of his saints.

TUESDAY, November 5. Colossians i.

The Prelude of Joy (3-8). Almost all Paul's letters, says a gracious writer, began with expressions of thankfulness for the good that was in the Church he was addressing. Gentle rain softens the ground, and prepares it to receive the heavier downfall which would else mostly run off the hard surface. Epaphras was a true Christian minister, "who had come all the long way from his quiet valley in the depths of Asia Minor to get guidance about his flock from the great Apostle, and who bore them on his heart day and night, and prayed much for them, while so far from home" (iv. 12).

The Apostle's Prayer (9-12). What a study are the prayers with which the Epistles abound! We might well take one for each day of the week, as a model for our own supplications and intercessions. But our furthest prayers can never outstrip our Father's gifts, through the Son of his love (13, 14), Deliverance, Redemption, and Forgiveness.

The Glory of the Son of God (15-23). He is pre-eminent in his original being, for He who adequately images the infinite must Himself be infinite; pre-eminent as the creator, and maintainer of all things. (Note the frequent repetition of all things.) Pre-eminent as the Head of the Church, as the beginning of the new creation, as the first to rise from the dead, as the repository of all the fulness of God, and as the reconciler who has laid the foundation of a universal peace. Pre-eminent also in the love and homage, which are his from his own redeemed ones.

The Joy of the Christian Ministry (24-29). Great are its anxieties, its sorrows, and its responsibilities; but the joy is greater of being entrusted with such a message as that which engaged the strenuous life of the Apostle. Oh, that we were as assiduous and painstaking.

WEDNESDAY, November 6. Colossians ii.

This chapter is full of solicitude and warning. "I agonize for you" (1); "that no one may delude you" (4); "lest there should be anyone that maketh spoil of you" (8); "let no man therefore judge you" (16); "let no man rob you" (18).

But in juxtaposition to his warnings, the Apostle dwells on the exhaustless fulness of Christ. In Him all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge were hidden (3); why need they go after the errors of the Gnostics (the people who knew)? In Him was all the fulness of God, in a bodily form (9); why did they interpolate angels, principalities, and powers? In Him they had been severed from the old life of selfish indulgence (11); why should they trouble about a Jewish rite? In his death Jesus had cancelled the handwriting, which was contrary, i.e., the ritual and ordinances of the Jewish law, which were abrogated, as the Temple veil was rent (14); why should they endeavour to bind or justify themselves by its requirements? In Him they had died, and his death stood between them and their past (20); why, then, should they yield obedience to the formularies, the restrictions of the Jewish code, or to the prescriptions of an external asceticism?

This is the true way of dealing with the advanced Ritualism and Sacramentarian error of our time. Men will cling to error, till they see how completely all their needs are met in the Son of God. Oh, to unfold the wealth of his provision to the sons of men! The proclamation of positive truth will most surely and speedily undermine and silence error. Preach down the Mass, if you like, but to do so be sure to preach up Christ.

THURSDAY, November 7. Colossians iii.

Risen (1-4).—The Apostle goes back to ii. 12. They were raised in the Divine purpose when the Lord Jesus rose; but their own identification with that resurrection was signalized in their baptism. From this he dates his appeal. The believer dies with Christ to sin, rises with Him to newness of life, and the springs of his new life are hidden with Christ in God. Some day the source, springs, raptures, sorrows, victories of the soul will be manifested, because they shall have become the sockets in which the resplendent lamps of glory shall burn and glow.

Slaying Self (5-9).—It is useless to maim yourselves by hacking your limbs, as the old ascetics used to do (ii. 22, 23), but go deeper than the physical body, which is not essentially sinful, to the passions and desires which lie beneath our bodily constitution. Sin is not in the body, but in the soul; deal with it there.

Newly Vestured (10-14).—"Ye did put off" (9) when you professed to be Christ's—now put away in daily practice (8). "Ye have put on" (10)—"put on, therefore" (12). We profess to be new creatures in Christ, then let the King's sons and daughters array themselves in becoming garments—not a vestige of the old beggar costume should remain. Mark the argument implied in those words: "God's elect, holy, and beloved." May I dare to appropriate them? Is it not too much?

Ruled by the Peace of Christ (15).

Indwelt by the Word of Christ (16).

Moulded in all things by the Name and Nature of Christ (17).

All the Family Relations under law to Christ (18).

FRIDAY, November 8. Colossians iv.

When the Apostles proposed the creation of the office of deacon, they said that they would give themselves to prayer. The Apostle bade the Roman Church continue constant in prayer. The early disciples continued daily in the Temple. Do we continue instantly in prayer, and watch thereunto with thanksgiving? (22).

If we are Christians, we are watched by very unfriendly and critical eyes. It becomes us to be very careful that men shall find no fault with our Lord, no justification for their sins, by what they see in us. Do we walk in wisdom to them that are without? (8). We are libels or Bibles. Our wise walk to others appears, first in the care with which we catch up every opportunity that offers for Christian service; and secondly, because there is the sparkle, the purity, the uncorruptibleness of salt in our speech.

Paul was very loyal to his friends. Notice how he describes them in these closing paragraphs! There were Tychicus, who probably belonged to Ephesus, and was glad to return there; he had possibly been the treasurer of Paul's fund for the Jerusalem saints; Aristarchus, perhaps one of his early converts (Acts xx. 4), now sharing his captivity; Mark, whom we know; Jesus, for our Lord's was a not uncommon name; Epaphras (Phil. iv. 18); Luke and Demas, the types respectively of fidelity and apostasy. Each had his special corner in Paul's heart, as on the page of his Epistle. Life is rich in proportion to its friendships; let us be loyal to them!

SATURDAY, November 9. Thessalonians i.

This was probably the first Epistle that the Apostle wrote. In his first European journey he visited Thessalonica, and stayed there three weeks; but had to escape from it by night with Silas (Acts xvii.). But he had left an indelible impression. To this he makes unmistakable and thankful reference in this chapter. The converts were, however, sorely tried by their persecutors, and Paul yearned to see them, to console them and to fill up the full measure of the Gospel.

This could not be, so Timothy was directed to visit the city, and bring to Paul at Athens a full report of the condition of the new-made converts (Acts xvii. 15). Timothy brought back a very satisfactory report (1 Thess. iii. 6). But the Apostle was still anxious lest the hastily-reared structure might collapse, and therefore sent this letter from Corinth.

It is most interesting to remark how the Apostle Paul designated the Person of Jesus Christ in this his first Epistle, which the critics acknowledge was written within twenty years of the Ascension. He speaks of him twenty-five times as our Lord. "The plummet of dogma can drop no deeper: the wing of adoration can soar no higher." Evidently the belief in the Deity of our Lord was not a growth.

What a blessed thing it would be if the consistent lives of Christians made preaching needless (8). Service and waiting — work and rest—the systole and diastole—the centrifugal and centripetal (9, 10).

"You, Me, or Anybody."

"WHY James, man, I wonder that you fash yourself so over that old Bible; you're no scholard, and you'll make nothing out, with all your studying. For my part, I think there's a deal more satisfaction in a newspaper." And Hannah Simpson, as she spoke, left her work at the other end of the kitchen, and, wiping her hands on her apron, came and stood looking over her husband's shoulder, as he sat at a table near the fire, with an old-fashioned family Bible open before him.

James took no heed either of his wife's words or her presence. His brows were knit over his task, and his horny finger continued, in its slow progress over the paper, to trace out the letters of the words he was striving to read. "W-h-o," he spelled, "s-o-e-v-e-r; ay, but that's a heavy word!" And he breathed a deep sigh of mingled excitement and discouragement.

"I can make out that it's about something rare and good," he exclaimed again, after he had slowly and laboriously spelled his way through the remainder of the verse. "'Let him take the water of life freely,' that's just what the preacher said, and he told us that 'water of life' meant salvation; but who is to take it?—that beats me." Then glancing around him in his perplexity, he became conscious for the first time that his wife was near.

"Ay, Hannah, lass, I wish thee could tell me what that long word is."

Hannah, who scarcely knew one letter from another, bent down and looked closely at the "long word," and then she shook her head.

"Nay, James, I can't help thee; it's all Greek to me. If our little Tim had lived we'd have made him a scholard, for a bit o' larnin's real useful sometimes. But don't take on about it, man. Maybe it don't mean anything particular, after all."

So Hannah returned to her work, casting occasional sympathizing glances at her husband as he still bent over the book, and wishing with an increased soreness of her mother-heart that their little Tim had not been taken; the house had been so awful lonesome ever since, and that was it surely that had set James on studying and saying such strange things about being a sinner.

A SINNER, INDEED!

If there was an honest, kind man in the world it was her James, and trouble must indeed have turned his head before he could call himself such a dreadful name.

Whilst Hannah's thoughts were thus busy, her husband sat still and pondered. For some weeks past he had been bearing on his heart a load that was becoming well-nigh unsupportable. He scarcely knew how it first came there; it was strangely mixed up in his thoughts with the death of his child, and a hymn that had been sung at little Tim's grave by the scholars of the Sunday-school that he used to attend. James had always been a steady man, but he had lived with scarcely a thought of God, and his Sabbaths had been spent in careless, weary lounging, instead of being used for the worship of God, and care for the precious soul God had given him. But when the winsome and dearly-loved child had suddenly stepped from his father's side into a solemn Eternity, speaking to the last of "Lord Jesus," and smiling joyfully as the Good Shepherd took the little lamb in his arms "on the brink of the river of death," James realized what a life of terrible trifling his had been, and ever since, in a dim aimless way, he had been groping after the truth as it is in Jesus.

Only the Sunday before, the words of a street-preacher had fallen on his ear, words that told of the water of life, and of the love of Jesus in obtaining it for poor, perishing sinners; and James had got a glimpse of the truth that made him long painfully for more. He knew now that this burden on his heart was unforgiven sin, and the preacher had said that Jesus would forgive sin.

Then James, in his slow way, had reasoned it out that to take of the water of life, and to get sin pardoned, were perhaps the same thing. There were two things about which he was quite clear. He needed salvation, and he would not rest until he found out how to get it; and he thought if he could but discover who it was that was so freely invited to take of the water of life in the passage he had been reading, it would throw great light on the subject.

Again and again he repeated to himself the letters of the "long word," until they were thoroughly fixed in his memory; and then, with a sudden gleam of hope lighting up his face, he started from his seat, closed the Bible, and taking his hat from the peg, he nodded pleasantly to his wife, saying, "I'm going to take a bit of a turn, Hannah; I'll not be long."

Once outside the door he walked forward with a brisk, determined step, until he came to a large house standing back from the road, and surrounded by extensive grounds. James was in the habit of passing this house every day on his way to and from work, and knew it to be a boarding-school for boys; and out of his wife's mention of making their little Tim a scholar, if he had lived, had sprung the sudden thought that one of these boys might HELP HIM IN HIS PRESENT DIFFICULTY.

It required some determination for the reserved, grave man, rendered graver than usual by the pressure of a great anxiety, to face a troop of merry, rollicking lads, who might, perhaps, turn his inquiries into mockery. But a man thoroughly in earnest does not let the lion in the heavenward path frighten or deter him, and such a man, as he speeds past the enemy, always finds it chained by the order of the King.

Many voices of boys, just out for their evening games, filled the air as James drew near the gate; and he had scarcely taken his station outside when, within, one of them rushed past it to pick up a ball. It was Harvey Reynolds, a bright-faced fellow, on whose character good home training had left unmistakable traces, making him kind hearted and courteous to rich and poor alike; and as the words reached his ear, "I say, young master, can I have a word with you?" he slackened his flying pace, and came up to the gate, pressing his flushed face against the bars, and looking through them with a pleasant smile and with boyish curiosity at the man outside.

"You can have two or three words if you like, and if you'll be quick about it," he said; "but the fellows will want me back in a minute."

"I thought you'd, may be, tell me what these letters make up when they are put together," said James, and, with the air of a great schoolboy repeating his lesson, he slowly spelled out the long word that had so perplexed him.

"That's whosoever," said Harvey, secretly wishing that he could pass every examination as easily.

"And will you be pleased to tell me what whosoever means?" asked James, anxiously.

"Oh, it means," and Harvey paused a moment to put his explanation into the simplest possible shape. "Oh, it means

YOU, ME, OR ANYBODY."

"Thank you kindly, young sir; you've done me a great service."

Harvey, as he rushed back to his companions, wondered at the sudden brightness that lighted up his questioner's face as he turned away; but it was a joy with which no stranger intermeddleth that James Simpson was feeling then. Salvation was for him! He, or anybody might take it! at least, so the young gentleman had said, and coming out of a big school like that he was sure to know.

It would be impossible here to tell fully the further stages of James' spiritual history. The Holy Spirit has various ways of working, but it is a blessed truth that, "where'er we seek Him, He is found," and that when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He shall guide into all truth.

Under this Divine teacher James so "learned Christ" that he became a happy, consistent, and useful Christian; and though he never got farther in his scholarship than to be able to read the Bible to his own and his wife's satisfaction by spelling a few of the very long words, yet he never again needed to spell the word "whosoever;" and his face would light up with joy whenever he came to it, regarding it, as he did, as the key-stone of the arch on which rested his hopes for eternity. Perhaps nothing could better express his feelings, nor more fittingly recommend the same Saviour to my readers, than that sweet verse of Dr. H. Bonar's hymn:—

I came to Jesus as I was,
Weary, and worn, and sad;
I found in Him a resting-place,
And He has made me glad.

Reader, the same message comes to you in this word, "whosoever." The water of life—eternal salvation—is for you, or me, or anybody. It is freely offered, without money and without price. But how few thus come! For any temporal benefits, however hedged in by difficulties, what eager striving—for eternal life and happiness, though offered so freely, how little care! Oh, that the gracious Spirit may remove this fatal indifference from the heart of every unconverted reader, that they may all be included in the grand "whosoever;" and then, however toilsome, or sorrowful, or brief their earthly life may be, they will at the end find themselves included with those who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. M. C. F.

Women's Protestant Union.

WHEN, in the year 1891, the Women's Protestant Union was formed, it was hardly anticipated that within ten years from that time the Union would have gathered together over 16,000 individuals into its ranks or the ranks of its allied organizations. The one aim which the Union keeps in view is the honour of Jesus Christ, as the one Saviour, Intercessor, and Priest, and the maintenance of his revealed truth in all its Scriptural simplicity, and in all its efficacy to meet the needs of a sin-stricken world.

The past year has witnessed much progress and development. In the annual report we read: "The number of our associate-members who have linked themselves with the Union has increased to 525. We greatly value the sympathy and co-operation of the Christian men who attach themselves to the Union in the capacity of associate-members. We know from experience how very much appreciated by the secretaries of our branches is the ready assistance given by these warm-hearted friends."

"READY BANDS."

Three years ago a new department was inaugurated in connection with the Women's Protestant Union, more especially with the object of bringing into touch with it those who might find it difficult to contribute even the minimum subscription required for full membership. Senior and Junior Protestant Ready Bands were brought into existence. Up to the end of last year 549 adults, and 214 juniors had been enrolled. The educational department has accomplished much useful work. A large number of inquiries relative to Protestant schools at home and abroad have been received, and in some cases the information given has resulted in the preventing of girls being sent to convent schools.

STRENGTHENING THE RANKS.

Concerning the organizing and deputation work, it is gratifying to learn that a large number of meetings have been held during the year, and that God's blessing has abundantly rested upon this department. The gatherings for the most part have been public ones, but there have been not a few held in drawing-rooms. Such meetings have resulted in a considerable addition to the ranks of members, and have tended to produce increased and, we trust, abiding interest in the spread of Protestant principles. The present is no time for apathy and falling back in the conflict with error, and the Council are desirous of gaining wider sympathy for the Union and its many-sided work in defence of truth.

The secretary, Mr. G. W. Lonsdale Barraclough, will be pleased to give information to friends interested in this organization and its institutions. He may be addressed, 20, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

The Manchester Mission.

ONE of the wonders of modern Methodism is the remarkable growth of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission. Its history, extending over a period of only fifteen years, is a story of remarkable progress. The colossal work of such an organization affords, to use the words of a friend of the Mission, "an antidote to the despair which creeps over one's soul in face of the vice and irreligion which our cities breed, and in face of the apathy which still besets so large a part of the Church of Christ towards the needs of men and her duty with respect to them."

During the past year the work has been more than maintained throughout the whole Mission, for at each branch, and in every department, a spirit of aggressiveness has prevailed.

THE SPIRITUAL WORK.

There are no less than twenty-one public services, with an average of 15,000 attendances every Sabbath. Each week there are thirty-three prayer-meetings, nine Bible-classes, eighty fellowship meetings, with a membership of 5,212, four theological classes, thirty open-air services, and twenty-one lodging-house gatherings. Consolidation has consistently accompanied aggression, and difficulties which might have arisen in maintaining the membership have been averted. There is, of course, much loss by emigration, and the transfer of those who have been saved from the slums to better neighbourhoods, the inevitable resultant of true conversion, yet the roll shows an increase on the year of 204. A cheering and promising sign is the growing zeal and capacity of the members for Christian work. New efforts are put forward, variants of old methods are adopted, and everything which promises to gain the ear and win the heart of the hopeless and helpless is tried.

AN ARMY OF HELPERS.

When it is remembered that the voluntary workers number over 1,000, some idea may be formed of the numerous channels through which their energies are directed. Almost every form of Christian activity is attempted, and were it not for this trained and ever-willing band of workers, it would be impossible to continue the Mission on so extensive a scale.

An outstanding feature of the organization is the care which is taken of the young. Over 2,500 scholars attend the Sunday-schools, and nearly 1,000 of these meet in Christian fellowship. In the Ragged-Schools and Special Children's Services the poorest and most neglected are reached. Everything is done to cheer the homes of such, and to give them a chance of improving their condition.

Facing the evils of drunkenness, gambling, impurity, special and vigorous efforts are made to lay hold of the working men and women, and every Saturday evening over 4,000 persons attend the temperance gatherings.

TEMPERANCE AND RESCUE WORK.

Not only at these meetings, but daily an earnest pledge-signing crusade is maintained. The Aggressive Leagues have been worked with increased vigour, and are doing effective service, both in rescuing the drunkard and gambler, and in surrounding those saved with helpful influences. The difficult work of midnight missions has also had satisfactory results, which give cause for deep thankfulness. The workers patiently and perseveringly persist in their efforts to save sad lives, and many wonderful trophies of rescue reward them. In these midnight efforts there is equal need, and ample scope, for work among fallen men. These have been gathered to special meetings held at the midnight hour, and the efforts made have borne abundant fruit. The Tuesday midday services have become increasingly popular, and it is impossible to exaggerate the value of such a service at noon on Manchester's busiest day. The fifteen departments of social work are judiciously and successfully maintained, and only one desire is kept in view—to give every man and woman a chance, however destitute and degraded.

Labour is regarded as a test of genuineness, as well as one of the best helps to the men and women themselves. The Men's and Women's Refuges and Labour Homes, the employment and advice bureau, are among the most useful agencies of the movement. The finances are deserving of commendation. Three-fourths of the entire income needed by the work is raised within the Mission, and the amount given to foreign missions is sufficient testimony of the workers to support outside claims, while £2,200 have been subscribed towards the Twentieth Century Fund. The Superintendent is Rev. S. F. Collier, The Central Hall, Manchester.

The Theatrical Mission.

THE opening of new premises by the Theatrical Mission draws attention to a useful branch of Christian work. The buildings, which are situated in Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square, W., are admirably suited to the purposes for which they are designed. Rearrangements and additions, which have been skilfully planned and economically carried out, add greatly to the comfort and convenience of the institution, which is, too, a model of cleanliness and good order.

A number of applications for admission have already been received from intending residents, and it is confidently anticipated that all the available accommodation will speedily be taken up by those who desire to avail themselves of the privileges of a quiet Christian home. While the directors do not say to the girls, "You must forsake your profession," yet each inmate is expected to attend morning prayers and the weekly Gospel service, and it is hopefully believed that these gatherings have the wished-for effect in awakening a desire to know and follow Christ.

A sympathetic audience came together at the opening meeting on Wednesday, October 23. Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., presided, and the first speaker was Colonel Griffin, who has long been associated with the Mission. He pointed out that large salaries are secured only by a comparatively small number of performers, very many earning but a bare pittance. At the same time they experience the greatest difficulty in obtaining employment elsewhere on account of their past associations with the stage. One of the chief aims of the Mission is to shelter those who may thus find themselves in circumstances of distress and moral danger, and to shield them from evil. A deep interest is taken in the work by a band of ladies, who keep in touch with old residents, and exercise a helpful influence over them. Proceeding, Colonel Griffin said that by the proceeds of the sale of the premises in Covent Garden formerly occupied by the Mission, all old debts have been liquidated. The cost of alterations and fittings to the new buildings is £750, of which sum about £330 has still to be raised.

After an address from the Chairman, Mrs. Master formally declared the premises open, and expressed the earnest hope that the Mission will be the means of leading many into right paths.

Archdeacon Sinclair, who followed, adduced statistics to show that some hundreds of thousands of persons are employed in the United Kingdom in connection with theatres, and pointed out that, owing to the peculiar conditions of time and place under which they work, they are less likely to obtain spiritual help through the usual channels. The speaker dwelt, in passing, on the desirability of lessening the number of young people engaged on the stage, and said that the Home will be a place where religious aid and wise counsel will be given.

Revs. George Freeman (the secretary of the Mission) and E. G. C. Parr also took part. At the conclusion of the meeting the premises were thrown open for inspection.

Bethnal Green Free Library.—The income of the Library is unequal to relieving the liabilities which burden the work. During the summer months the contributions have been inadequate to meet expenses, but all the year round the youths of the district find here a shelter from the temptations of the streets; and now, during the long evenings, it is most desirable to provide for those wishing to share its benefits. Communications may be addressed to the Librarian, Mr. G. F. Hilcken.

Friendless and Fallen.

AN interesting and most necessary work is that of the Homes for the Friendless and Fallen, with which the names of Mr. E. W. Thomas, and his successor, Mr. W. J. Taylor, are so intimately associated. The following instances recorded tell their own story:—

A PITEOUS CRY FOR HELP.

A most piteous appeal was received a few months ago, from which the following is extracted:—"I do ask you to help me. I am staying at a registry office. I have been here a week on Friday. I cannot stay any longer as I have not money enough to pay for another week. I have to keep myself in food, and I am starving for the want of it. . . . Do help me for Christ's sake in some way or other. I do not want to tramp the streets, and yet I do not know what I shall do after Friday. It will lead me to suicide or even something worse if some one does not stretch out a helping hand." The helping hand was stretched out immmediately. Since then the young woman has written from a country rectory, where she was in service, and doing well.

WHAT A "GAY" LIFE BROUGHT.

Passing along a busy thoroughfare Mr. Taylor met a woman, thin and haggard, but respectably clad, who repeated his name and stopped. Her face was not unfamiliar, although he could not at the moment call her to mind. "What is your name?" he asked. She replied, "S—— K——. Ah! you have forgotten me, I am so altered. This is what a gay life has brought me to." The mention of her name brought back the facts of her history, and Mr. Taylor called to mind how she had been found more dead than alive by a Christian lady one winter's night in a suburban lane, and the effort made to reclaim her (which, alas, failed). He recalled the way she had been in and out of infirmaries, until she stood before him a wreck of her former self, and so altered that he did not recognise her. Alas, but so it was! "This is what a gay life has brought me to," sounded hopeless and despairing as she uttered the words. Only a few words were addressed to her, but they were of warning and entreaty; and assurance was given that if she would send on her address a lady worker would visit her.

PREVENTION BETTER THAN CURE.

F. M. E., a tall, respectable-looking girl, only fourteen years of age, was brought from one of the roughest districts of suburban London. The circumstances of the case were very sad. Owing to the father's drunken habits, the home was broken up three years ago. About four months before the girl was brought for admission, her father fell from a scaffolding when under the influence of drink, and injured his spine, and it will be a very long time before he is able to leave the infirmary. This accident rendered the girl almost destitute, as the mother could do little more than arrange a shelter for her. During the day, however, the poor girl had no one to care for her, and she soon fell into bad company, and was rapidly drifting into evil ways. She was admitted into a home, and happily rescued.

In one of his concluding "Notes," Mr. Taylor shows that nearly 350 poor creatures have been received and helped this year; and also that about £200 will be required before the end of the month to meet the expenses of maintenance. "Notes by the Way" may be had on application to Mr. Taylor, at 200, Euston Road, N.W.

The Dangers of Indolence.—The old peripatetic principle, that "Nature abhors a vacuum," may be properly applied to the intellect, which will embrace anything, however absurd or criminal, rather than be wholly without an object. Perhaps every man may date the predominance of those desires that disturb his life and contaminate his conscience from some unhappy hour when too much leisure exposed him to their incursions; for he has lived with little observation, either on himself or others, who does not know that to be idle is to be vicious.—Dr. Samuel Johnson.

Sunday-School and Home.

ONE of the recent developments of the work of the Sunday-School Union has been the preparation and promotion of a simple plan for extending the usefulness of the Sunday-school, by bringing the teachers into closer touch and alliance with senior members of the households to which their scholars belong, as well as other friends. The desire is that as wide a circle as possible should be enlisted to spend at least half an hour every Sunday in the reading and study of the portions of Scripture set down as the lessons for the day. It is believed that this would be helpful to mothers with very young families, also invalids, and those who have the care of them, besides proving a means of grace to many who, for various reasons, are prevented from enjoying the regular ministry of the Word of God.

In order to further this movement, a conference of superintendents and teachers of schools was held a few days ago at 56, Old Bailey, Mr. F. F. Belsey (chairman of the Council of the Sunday-School Union) presiding. It had been realised that this link between church, school, and home was finding increasing favour. It was, further, felt that it was capable of adoption in many quarters, where instead of interfering with any existing organizations it would prove to be a means of extending Christian work along lines not already occupied. Speakers who have had practical experience of the work, explained the aims in view, with the methods already found useful in the attainment of these, and added their testimony to the good result experienced. The following is

AN OUTLINE OF THE SCHEME:—

(1) The adoption of a uniform lesson throughout the school with which it is connected; and as papers and helps for study are so generally provided for the "International" Lessons, it seems to be advantageous for that system to be adopted.

(2) There should be one person, in connection with the church or school, specially responsible for it, as "Superintendent of the Home Department." The number of visitors and assistant workers depends on the extent of the district and other local circumstances.

(3) There should be personal visitation of the members (or correspondence) once a quarter, to aid and encourage them in study, and bring them into closer bonds of sympathy and fellowship with Christ and his followers.

(4) A recognition of the Home Department and its members as a part of the school is essential to the success of the scheme. Meetings of visitors, in conjunction with the officers and teachers of the school, should also be held occasionally, for conference together on the plan and prospects of the work, and to unitedly seek the Divine blessing on its operations.

(5) An occasional social gathering, for the purpose of mutual acquaintance and fellowship, would be found very helpful. The pastor, superintendent, teachers, and other workers in the church should be present, with a view to bringing the members into more intimate and cordial relations to both church and school.

(6) On "Home Department Day" in the Sunday-school—probably Review Sunday would be the most appropriate—all the members should be personally invited to be present, and special provision made for their accommodation.

Among the results to be expected as the outcome of this effort are increased study of the Word of God, through regular reading taking the place of much that is desultory, with the bringing of deep joy and comfort to the hearts of aged, infirm, and otherwise isolated Christians.

Ealing Convention.—At the Ealing Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, held recently, the speakers included Revs. H. G. Thwaites, J. Summerhayes, J. G. Train, Colonel Walkey, Revs. S. A. Selwyn, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, C. G. Moore, H. B. Macartney, F. W. Ainley, J. Wilkinson, and A. T. Polhill-Turner. The gatherings were large, and were characterized by deep solemnity and earnestness.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh.

BY his earnest preaching and literary labours, Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has for many years rendered devoted and effective service to the Gospel cause as an evangelist, and an opponent of infidel teaching. While Mr. Charles Bradlaugh succumbed, as a young man, to the specious arguments of a "Freethought" lecturer, and became a kind of "uncrowned king" among Secularists and Christianity haters, his brother developed into a sturdy champion of Evangelical truth, and a winner of souls.

MR. SANKEY AND MR. BRADLAUGH.

From childhood the subject of our sketch was impressed with a sense of the importance of eternal things, but it was not until the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to this country in 1875 that he was brought to decision for Christ. Mr. Bradlaugh thus describes the experiences and circumstances which led to his conversion: "On Thursday, March 25, 1875—memorable day!—I went to the noon prayer-meeting at Exeter Hall. Mr. Sankey was present. He took his seat at the harmonium and commenced to sing that beautiful hymn 'Lord Jesus, I long to be perfectly whole.' The words seemed at once to arrest me; I was seized with a deep sense of my guilt before God, and became so burdened on account of sin that I thought of remaining behind for someone to direct me to the Saviour. But I was robbed of present blessing, for Satan urged that at the Agricultural Hall on the following day I should have a better opportunity. I went to the Agricultural Hall, but it was full, and this thought agonized my soul—'What if you are shut out of heaven?'"

"WHOSOEVER."

Seizing the next opportunity, Mr. Bradlaugh proceeded again to the Hall, and, after listening to the preaching, passed into the inquiry room. There, Mr. Sankey endeavoured, with an open Bible in his hand, and with earnest prayer, to lead the seeking penitent to the Saviour. "Mr. Sankey pointed to John iii. 16, saying, 'While you read that, I will pray.' Three times I read it over, each time stopping at the word 'whosoever.' The light dawned on my soul, for in that one word I saw my own name written."

The young convert at once set vigorously to work for his Master. At this time the Hall of Science—now, happily, closed—was a power in the land, as the headquarters of the more truculent section of atheists, and the working-classes were so familiar with the name of Bradlaugh, that the bare announcement of one who bore it, as a witness for the Lord Jesus Christ, sufficed to raise not only keen interest, but a storm of opposition.

BEGINNING TO PREACH.

The first meeting addressed by Mr. Bradlaugh was held on Clerkenwell Green, E.C., once notorious for scenes of turbulent agitation, and a ready recruiting ground of infidelity. A vast crowd gathered for the occasion from many parts of London, and although the speaker was greeted with derisive cheers, he gained the ear of the people as he proclaimed the Gospel. From this time forward Mr. Bradlaugh came prominently before the public as an evangelist, his utterances on Christian evidence being particularly acceptable. At the same time he found openings in the religious Press for the exercise of his gift of facile and terse writing.

WRITING AND LECTURING.

For many years, up till 1895, the Evangelization Society utilized Mr. Bradlaugh's services, until literary and lecturing work came to engross the whole of his time. In a farewell letter, Captain Smith (at that time secretary of the Society) wrote:—"I shall ever remember your indefatigable efforts and your willingness to deny yourself in the work in which you have been so long engaged in connection with this Society. I hope that by giving undivided attention, as editor, to 'The Anti-Infidel,' much success may attend your efforts to further the Gospel through this channel." It was of the "Anti-Infidel" that the late C. H. Spurgeon wrote: "This is a powerful antagonist of infidelity. There is a mass of solid instruction; and, moreover, no mean supply of sarcastic wit of the kind which atheists are likely to feel. Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh labours to meet the most blatant and blasphemous forms of unbelief, and the task is neither easy, pleasant, nor remunerative."

Proceeding with his labours, Mr. Bradlaugh addressed many meetings throughout the country, organized the Anti-Infidel League, and published a plentiful variety of pungent tracts under the title of "The Christian Armoury" series. A pithy booklet entitled "Conversion—What is It?" likewise met with much acceptance.

By a calamitous fire which occurred last year at his printer's, Mr. Bradlaugh lost all the "plates" of his books and pamphlets, which represented the literary labours of a quarter of a century. The misfortune resulted in the stoppage of the publications in question; but in spite of difficulties and discouragements Mr. Bradlaugh continues, by word and pen, his ardent labours in defence of Gospel truth and for the winning of souls for the Master.

George-Yard Mission.

FRIENDS of the late George Holland will be glad to learn that the work which he founded and carried on for so many years is still being attended with much blessing. The superintendent, Colonel Hayne, writes to us:—"The committee are thankful to the many voluntary workers who so kindly give their time and personal service; but as there is still room for additional ladies and gentlemen to assist in the various branches of the work, I shall be glad to hear from any who are willing to help. Above all other objects, the main one of the mission continues to be: (1) The proclaiming of the 'Everlasting Gospel' to the poor; (2) Visiting, relieving, and helping the sick and necessitous; (3) Feeding, clothing, and teaching the poorest children."

Funds are much needed to carry on and extend the work. A report, giving full details, will be forwarded on application to Colonel Hayne, 87, High Street, Whitechapel, E.

East London Bakers.—The method adopted by the London City Mission of setting apart a worker to minister to the spiritual welfare of people engaged in particular trades has proved helpful in a number of industries, securing the sympathy of both employers and employed. Among other missions is that to bakers in East London, for which Mr. J. C. Rogers is responsible. At a social gathering recently held in recognition of Mr. Rogers' twelfth year among the bakers, and his thirtieth of Christian service, hearty testimonies were given to the earnest character of the work.

Other Lands.

In Southern Russia.

By THE EDITOR.

Dr. Baedeker in the Prisons.

TO-DAY I am looking back upon last year, and remembering the great Missionary Convention opened by that worthy statesman, President McKinley, and addressed by ex-President Harrison and Governor Roosevelt. Harrison has gone to his rest; McKinley has followed him by the rough path of murder. Roosevelt is President of the United States.

Mrs. McKinley showed her faithfulness to her country and her deep love to her husband by the exertions which brought her near to death at his second election; and all the world mourns with her, so cruelly widowed, and with her country, so foully robbed of one of the best of its Presidents and one of the most estimable of rulers. With a peculiar sorrow, all whose hearts are set upon missions and all lovers of missionaries remember him with affection, and the evident interest he felt and expressed in them and their work at that great and historical assembly last May in Carnegie Hall, New York.

In the Russian prisons, the words spoken to the captives by Dr. Baedeker are of the simplest and most direct kind, and his experiences often lend him illustrations. He tells them that one act may ruin a life; that they have no power of amendment in themselves. And he remembers meeting, in 1891, among the prisoners in Siberia, a nobleman of fine presence and cultured manners. He asked him how he came to be there, and he replied that it was one act, the work of a moment; but he would soon be free; he would go and live a new life, and he would take care not to return. Our friend told him that it would take a stronger power than his own to keep him, but he thought he was able to keep himself. "No," said his advisor, "another power is necessary, without which you will have no deliverance from sin."

In 1897 Dr. Baedeker was travelling in Siberia and found, among 2,500 prisoners, the same nobleman, 500 versts from the place where he had previously seen him.

"Why, how is it," he asked, "that you are now here? You told me that when you were free you would begin to lead a new life. How has this happened?" "It was the work of a moment. I was free, but I couldn't walk straight." "If you think you can do without Jesus," said the Doctor to the prisoners he was addressing, "you will fail. Take heed. That man gave way to temptation again. The prison doors were opened to him, but the cords of his sins remained."

In a work covering so large an area, so many prisons, and so many years, there must be many incidents of painful and some of pleasant interest. At one time Dr. Baedeker, travelling by steamboat on the River Ob (or Obi), observed a young couple whose manner of walking attracted his attention. He got into conversation with them, and offered the husband a New Testament. He exclaimed, "Oh, I know that book, every word of it." The tone in which this was said, implying utter dislike, led the Doctor to inquire the reason. Then he heard this story.

They had been students in St. Petersburg at different colleges, became acquainted, and afterwards engaged. The young man fell under suspicion of being a Nihilist, and a centre of agitation among his fellow-students. One day he disappeared, having been seized by the police and sent to the prison-fortress of Peter and Paul at St. Petersburg. There he was put into an underground cell, alone, and not suffered to speak. All was silent as the grave. The warders went about in noiseless shoes, and spoke in whispers. There was a New Testament in his cell, which he read through again and again, to break the monotony of his weary days, until that itself became monotonous.

At the end of six months the intolerable sameness made him ill, and he was removed to Siberia. His father was wealthy and he was permitted to travel alone to Irkutsk, having to report himself on the way and on his arrival there. He obtained employment in a vodki factory. One day he observed a young lady in the street whom he at once recognized as his fiancée. She had also become a suspect, and was deported to Irkutsk. They were married, and now, having been permitted to return, they were again in Russia and were free. The result of Dr. Baedeker's conversation with them remains unknown. We can only hope that it pleased the Lord by it to accomplish their salvation.

It may seem strange that any of the weaker sex should thus be treated; but sometimes young girls have been amongst the most determined and fanatical anarchists. Dr. Baedeker once found one of these in a prison, and expressed his wonder at seeing her there, and his sympathy with her. But though only apparently in her teens, she declared herself a revolutionist of the extremist kind. It will probably occur to every reader that the murderer of President McKinley declared that he was moved to his crime by the harangue of a young woman, who, if this be true, must be regarded as guilty as if she had been an accessory before the fact.

During his visits, Dr. Baedeker not infrequently meets those whom he had previously found in Siberian prisons. Once, at a meeting of students, a man came up to him whom he had thus met before, and in whose favour he had spoken to the Governor, who gave him a passport. He was a Jew, and in the same prison was a young student. The Jew had heard Dr. Baedeker in Odessa, and the student had met him in Dorpat. This common tie brought them together, and they became fast friends. Later on, the Doctor found the student in a prison in the far East. He wept bitterly, and said, "If I had only followed your advice I should not be here. You told me I must have the Lord Jesus as my Saviour and Guide." He had been drawn into crime and his life ruined by not attending to this good counsel.

But it has sometimes happened that the prison has been a valley of Achor, in which a door of hope has opened to a prisoner. There was a man who had committed a crime, to escape the penalty of which he fled, and went from one country to another until his position became unbearable, and he returned and gave himself up to the police, and was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment. When the governor told Dr. Baedeker the circumstance, he asked how they found him now. "Oh," replied the governor, "we have found a missionary. He is the most valuable man in the prison."

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage.

The prisons which we visited were clean, the food was good, and the prisoners, so far as we could see, were kindly treated. To the less serious offenders a considerable degree of liberty was allowed within the prison walls. They carried on various trades, and some of those who had proved trustworthy we saw outside the prison. Dr. Baedeker more than once remarked that if he had to pass the rest of his life in prison, he would rather it were in a Russian than an English one.

I may mention that the idea of preserving the true words of Scripture is so strong that no marking of the Testaments would be allowed. "The Marked Testament" could not be circulated in Russian. That would be of the nature of a comment: and no attention may be drawn to one portion more than to another. For the same reason, if a sermon is preached in the Greek Church it must first have been written, and then approved, by the Censor of the Holy Synod. Similarly, any religious book must be approved before publication.

Romanism in Bolivia.

IN Bolivia religious liberty, or tolerance for foreigners, is unknown. In eighteen months, the archbishop has appealed three times to the courts asking for sentence of death to be passed on my husband for the crime of scattering Bibles, Gospels, and tracts.

The last appeal was made to the Supreme Court, and, the Judges being Liberals, decision was made in our favour, the archbishop being condemned to pay full costs. So we continue to scatter the good seed, and seek to tell men of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

What has Rome done for Bolivia? Thousands of Indians have been completely under priests for more than three hundred years, and we never saw one able to read or write his own language! However, now a ray of light has come for the Quichua-speaking Indian, in the form of portions of the New Testament, translated by the American Bible Society in colloquial Quichua, and the indefatigable agent (in Buenos Ayres), Mr. Milne, has great hopes that something may now be done for them. They are the slaves of the country, and look more like frightened animals than human beings. The parish priest has only to raise his finger, and a thousand Indians are at his disposal.

The next class is the Chola, or half-caste; a more degraded, corrupt race it would be hard to find. Their religious feasts are legion, and of the most revolting kinds. Huge crosses, heading the processions, hide a multitude of sins, the feast ending by dancing and drinking for three days at a time.

The lives of "Devotos," or "Biatas," will not bear investigation; and as they are very untruthful (although extremely polite to us), it is hard to know where the sincere souls may be.

And what can be said of Bolivian priests! They are traders in all kinds of vice, and little respected by the people. Very many are signing a petition for "Liberty of Worship," to be presented at Congress. Christians living in such countries (seeing every day more of Rome's wiles and wickedness) look on with surprise at any concessions made to Roman Catholics, who have not changed their methods in the least.

Sucre, Bolivia. LIZZIE PAYNE.

A Hindu Festival.

By Mr. G. S. EDDY, Indian National Council, Y.M.C.A.

IN a festival, the sluggish undercurrent of daily life surges to the surface, and we see what Hinduism really is. At a shrine some twelve miles from Madura, in South India, upwards of fifty thousand people come annually to worship the god Aligarh and get their sins forgiven. We had taken advantage of the crowds to go there with our twenty students, and some thirty other workers, to preach the Gospel. As we approached the place the evening before the festival, the weird shouts of the worshippers came echoing up the valley, as the people of village after village approached the sacred spot. Here come a hundred people from a distant hamlet. The men are leading a dozen goats in front for sacrifices. The women are laden with grains and fruits and vegetables, for food and offerings to the god. Each has his gift—none comes empty-handed before the idol. As they approach the gate, the dancers or religious fanatics in front burst into mad ecstacies, as the spell of the god is supposed to come upon them. In wild excitement they feign to speak with tongues, yelling like demons, lashing themselves with whips, and burning themselves with torches. I could see the flames lick their oiled bodies, and even play about their faces. We are borne by the crowd through the great gateway into an old fort, and up the avenue of ancient banyan trees we are carried in this seething current of humanity toward the sacred hill with its temples, shrines, and crumbling ruins.

WHO IS ALIGARH?

And what is the idea at the root of all this worship? Why are these people here, and who is this god? This Aligarh seems to have been in his lifetime an ordinary man—a wealthy farmer and landowner of the village. He entered into immoral relations with a Mohammedan woman, and to be reinstated into caste had to make certain payments and offerings, and bathe in the neighbouring spring. After his death, a small statue or image was set up which the people of the next generation began to worship, and lo! another god is added to the three hundred and thirty millions worshipped, most of whom, perhaps, became deified in the same way. The heart grows sick as one sees this throng of souls crowding here for merit, without preachers or teachers, without any semblance of reverence, without any moral uplift.

As we stood there the idol was carried by—to be washed in the fountain, then drawn in the great car and seated again in the dark temple. The approach to the temple was lined with booths and bazaars, religious and secular. Into one enclosure we entered, and found it the place of sacrifice—a great yard reeking with blood as the villagers led up their goats for the priests to kill. The priest threw down the goat and cut its throat, casting the head and skin into one corner as his share. The villager carried off the flesh to eat, and the Mohammedan stood ready to bid for the skin.

DEMONS AND THEIR VICTIMS.

In another enclosure they were exorcising devils. The villagers approached with some poor woman who because of physical infirmity was supposed to be possessed with a demon. The devil dancers demanded their money, and, if the sum was sufficient, began their fiendish incantations. At last they pronounced the devil gone, and took another victim.

Leaving the temple, we made our way up the long hillside towards the sacred spring. The way was lined with beggars, cripples, and fakirs. Here were lepers without hands or feet, and lazy men whose only title to holiness was their matted hair and filthy bodies. Here were men who had buried their heads in the earth, their hands protruding to take alms; men torturing their bodies to extort charity, walking on sandals filled with long spikes, or burning while they cry to the passing crowds, "Give your charity, and get your merit."

At last we drew near the spring where Aligarh had bathed, now called the "Sin-cleansing fountain." It was a spring in the hillside which had been enclosed by a great stone structure in a kind of open pit. This was filled with one mass of seething, struggling humanity, fighting madly for this holy water. They were tearing, striking, cursing, falling, writhing, wedging toward that tiny stream, which could never satisfy the deep need of the human heart. There goes a big fellow crawling over the heads of the swaying mass; he gains the spring, fills his little cup, turns to fight back toward his family. Another drags him down, and steals his merit by pouring the holy water upon his own head! A fight, a few blows and curses, and again he strives to fill his cup, and carry the precious water to his family. Pitiable mass of human beings!

A DEPRESSING SCENE.

Preaching to a large company from one village I asked, "Tell me honestly, when you go back from this festival will you still tell lies and commit impurity like the god?" "Oh, yes," they answered- "There is no difference." "What, then, is the use? Why do you do it?" "Oh, it is custom, our fathers did it." What struck one in the whole festival was the utter worldliness of the people. There was no preaching, no prayer, no love for God, no sense of sin.

No one could preach to those dull souls an hour without feeling the downpull of heathenism and the deadening effect of facing a mass of stolid faces, seared consciences, bleared and stupid minds, hardened hearts of men who are lost now, and who need saving now from the spiritual death. And here before these dead men faith lays hold of the living God, the heart thrills with the fresh message of great glad news, and mind and body throb at the tide of life that flows through one's very being.

We placed our men in groups of four every 100 yds up the avenue, and after a rousing song had drawn a hundred or two, we would leave them there and the rest of us would move on. In front of the great car we got several hundred listeners. We pressed on to the temple, and over the seething crowd we sent one of our men up a ladder—which was being used for decorating the god—to preach Christ. At last we got into the temple yard, climbed up on the high basement of the temple, and stood beside the great swaying body of the sacred elephant. One after another we shouted the Gospel to that listening throng, till each in turn was hoarse. The evening's forces were gathering, however, and soon they brought a Brahmin priest, who told us it was against the law to preach there. Tired but happy, we trudged back to camp in the dark.

Oh, it is a privilege that angels might envy to preach a Gospel charged with power in the very citadels of Hinduism. Yet even here we claim the fruit by faith alone. We look not—we refuse to look—at the things that are seen, for the eye of faith sees a living God who has borne witness to his living Word which shall not, cannot, return to Him void.

Progress in Sumatra.

IN a recent issue we gave some account of the work of the Rhenish Missionary Society in Sumatra. Development is the present note, and among enterprises now being faced are:—(1) The establishment of an Industrial School by the Toba Lake; (2) the commencement of a Medical Mission at Pea Radja (Silindung), where a commodious hospital is now being built. By means of a "Watchers' Band," interest in missionary work has been considerably stimulated, and good pioneer work has been done in the neighbouring villages. The edition of the New Testament, which appeared in 1885, and consisted of 9,000 copies, is exhausted—a fact which proves how genuine is the demand for the Scriptures, for these Testaments were not given away, but sold.

On the island of Nias the work is full of hope just now, especially in the south-west part of the island; among the Irauny Huna hundreds have broken from their superstitions, and have found peace and joy in the Gospel. Means will have to be obtained to establish a station among this tribe, for the movement is too important to be left in charge of a native assistant.

French Free Churches.

THE biennial synod of the Free Church of France (l'Union des Eglise Evangéliques Libres de France), just held at Mazamet, has aroused much interest in the town and district, even among the Roman Catholic population. At the opening service Pastor Sivadon conducted the opening exercises, and Mr. Paul Monnier (Orthez) preached on, "And Jesus seeing their faith . . ." (Matt. ix. 2). "Our faith is in the Christ who reigns in heaven and on earth. 'In heaven': let us not then fear the spiritual powers which seem to usurp a position in the heavenly places. 'On earth': let us not then turn away from the distress which appeals to us, nor send the poor to the relieving office, nor the afflicted to comforters here below."

After early prayer each day, meetings followed in morning, afternoon, and evening. Much time was necessarily taken up receiving the reports of the several committees—general, evangelistic, financial, &c.—and in other business interesting to those concerned; but much also was devoted to discussion of vital matters. The cordial reception given to representatives of other bodies, was warmly reciprocated. Letters were also received from Switzerland, Belgium, and England.

One of the delegates was Mr. Lortsch, who recently left a pastorate at Marseilles to become Agent-General at Paris for the British and Foreign Bible Society. He has, however, retained his connection with the Free Church Union, and was, in fact, elected President of the Synod. He took opportunity to speak of the work done by the Society he now represents in spreading the Scriptures in more than 400 out of the 2,500 languages believed to exist.

One of the most crowded meetings was addressed by Mr. Frank Thomas (Geneva), on SOCIAL CHRISTIANITY.

He counselled three kinds of reform, viz.:—In society, the Church, and the individual.

Let us be just in our social connections, and in relations between employer and workman. Let us not sacrifice the Sunday of the employé, whether pastrycook or tailor, to our pleasures or caprices. Do not let us lose sight of the man in the cab-driver or the railway-porter. Nor should the Church forget her mission in the world. To this end may Jesus Christ become her sole King, and be indeed her source of inspiration. Let the ruler, the head, really govern the body. Finally, for individual regeneration, the cross of Golgotha must be laid hold of anew. Social Christianity may commence with the outside; it should finish by conversion.

NEED FOR REVIVAL.

Deep interest was shown throughout in missionary work in both the home and foreign fields, and one or two missionaries were heard. Saturday evening was devoted to the preaching of the Gospel, the subject being the Prodigal Son. Concerning the love of God, said one of the speakers, if He allows the sinner, who goes astray, to suffer, as the father allowed his rebellious son to leave home, it is in order to awaken him by trial and suffering. Sunday saw an event of great local interest—the consecration to the ministry of the son of M. Barnaud, pastor at Mazamet.

In spite of encouraging news from many quarters, a general impression seems to have prevailed of the need for revival. The president on first taking the chair, urged that an advanced stand should be taken as to Christian life, the application of Christianity to social questions and in evangelization, for he regretted to feel a sense of relaxation. The report on the visiting of churches indicated also a need for quickening.

In his closing address, Mr. Lortsch said that a breath of spirituality, of breadth, of hope, of the spirit of sacrifice and of joint responsibility, had run through the Synod of Mazamet. "Let us separate in the expectation of new mercies. Let our watchword be 'The Church of God.' It is the church that belongs to God, that depends on God, that will receive from God the gifts and the men necessary."

Advance in Persia.

WRITING to friends in England, Mr. J. L. Potter, of the American Presbyterian Mission, Teheran, tells of encouraging progress of mission work in Persia. Early this year a successful effort was made to occupy Kazvin (an out-station of Teheran) by a missionary party. After describing the journey thither, and the warm reception of the inhabitants, Mr. Potter proceeds:—We planned a visitation of villages near Kazvin, going out one day each week, spending the day at a village and returning at sunset. Later on, we each took a quilt, &c., for a bed and spent a night out making the trip cover two days, and in this way reaching several villages each trip.

At a certain Koordish village, when we arrived there was only one man to be seen, and presently he disappeared. Quite a number of women were found who gave us a kindly welcome. Dr. Wilson suggested that I preach to the women, as the Koords are not so strict in the seclusion of women as the Turks. At first I rather hesitated, thinking the ladies could reach the women with the Gospel message better than a man; but finally it was agreed to make the experiment. Notice was accordingly given that after lunch we would hold a Christian service, to which they were invited. This plan was successfully carried out, and an informal service was held under the trees. At the beginning, the congregation consisted mostly of women and children, but before the address was reached, in some mysterious way, the men began to assemble, to the number of a score or more, and quietly seated themselves on the ground at one side.

The congregation listened well, but during the closing prayer most of the women rose up and departed. It was afterwards learned that the time for baking bread had arrived, and so they betook themselves to their household duties. Most of the men, however, tarried, and thus an opportunity was afforded for informal conversation about the Christian religion.

On another occasion we spent the night at a Koordish village, and were made welcome. In the evening after supper, men and women gathered where we were, and we held a service, to which they gave quiet attention.

A TOUR TO KARAGHAN.

Besides visiting a number of the Armenian villages in the Karaghan district, we stopped at several Turkish villages, and in three of them read the Scriptures, and preached Christ publicly in the street or gateway. At the first village on the tour, where we stopped for the night, I had a large crowd of listeners, in the passage-way leading in from the gate, which completely blocked the road. At this village there was so much readiness to hear, that when I went to the room assigned me for the night, and was about to spread my quilt for a bed, a little company gathered in the room, and wished to hear more from the Book. Although my eyes were already tired from reading in the twilight, that request could not be refused, and so we had a half-hour or more of reading and explanation before we retired for the night.

The Karaghan trip extended from April 25 to May 4, and during those days we visited nine villages. It may be mentioned here that in several villages friends secured through the medical work gave us a good introduction and secured a friendly welcome. We met no opposition, and while on the tour to Karaghan and in Koordish, Turkish, and Persian villages were well received.

"Go, Work To-day in My Vineyard."

Matt. xxi. 28.

A work for God! O yes; with heartfelt joy,
I thankfully accept the blest employ!
And with adoring love—as it is meet—
Will lay my humble offering at his feet,
In sure and certain hope that He will say,
My grace—my strength—my Spirit—shall alway
Be with mine own—"according to their day."

Scattered Workers in Spain.

AN interesting account has reached us of a recent visit paid by Mrs. Fenn to Christian assemblies in different parts of Spain. Eleven mission stations were visited in ten weeks. Referring to the scene of her husband's labours of many years in Madrid, she says:—

The very great improvements in the Mission premises at Chamberí, Madrid, since their purchase and alterations, are very marked, and the work continues to solidify and advance. Mr. Faithfull, is constant in labours, assisted by the Spanish evangelist, a former schoolmaster. Mrs. Faithfull, too, gives all her strength to helping her husband in his work. There is now no English sister there, but it is proposed that Dña. Carmen, who has been in charge of a girls' school for twenty-six years, should take up the work that Miss Greser and others have done. The Madrid Christians retain very affectionate remembrances of my dear husband.

Knowing the vicissitudes through which the work at Valladolid had passed, it was pleasing to see the steady advance there under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Gray. We got to know something of Mr. Nisbet's labours among the villages by staying for a few days at his cottage at Fresno, where the work is in its infancy, yet not without acceptance. It was delightful to find a mother in Israel in the person of the wife of Dn. Galo, a godly colporteur at Monforte, where a few believers assemble as they have opportunity.

Three to four days at Corunna with Mr. and Mrs. Chesterman in the midst of their work, reminded me of a happy longer visit some years ago, when I also visited the most interesting work at Arteijo, which I was unable to do now, but learned that they had built themselves a little hall. Miss Fuller's service for the Lord among the sick who come to her for many miles round, is very Christlike, and with the Gospel meetings held frequently, and the words of truth accompanying the healing, is calculated to have a great influence.

A CURIOUS SUSPICION.

Marin mission is always full of interest. B. and S. Tomé, a small fishing town and village respectively, continue to prosper as they did when Mr. and Mrs. Blamire were there. Since Mr. and Mrs. Hoyle's departure, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Turrall, Mr. Conde, Mr. and Mrs. White, Mr. and Mrs. Dodd, also Miss Plummer and Miss Smith, carry on the work in those places, and in villages of easy and difficult access. The simple, substantial building, comprising hall, schoolrooms, and dwelling-house, at Marin, being higher than the surrounding buildings, attracts attention and brings curious visitors to see what the Protestants are doing; the more so as it has been thought sufficient to arouse suspicion that the ultimate object of the English is to conquer Galicia, and turn this building into barracks!

In fashionable Vigo, the work is more difficult than in small fishing places, the people being much more liable to loss of their means of livelihood by attendance at the Protestant place of worship. Still, the labours of Mr. and Mrs. Berkeley, with Miss Greene and Miss Sprague, in this and other places are bearing fruit.

I was thankful for the opportunities offered me in every place speaking for the Master to old and young, as well as of being refreshed in my own spirit by listening to workers on the spot, and observing the developing gift and grace among the Spanish believers whose steadfastness in the midst of continued opposition rejoiced one's heart.

How can the higher classes of society be reached? is a question of importance. There is good reason to believe that many of them read, or have read, the Scriptures without the authorized notes—in other words, the "Protestant Bible"; and were a native or foreign believer raised up and imbued with wisdom for this work, there would doubtless be some reaping ere long. They must be brought to know the truth before they compromise themselves by attending public services. Will your readers join us in prayer on this point?

An Open Door in Syria.

DEAR SIR,—May I trespass upon your valuable space just to acquaint friends at home with a veritable "open door" in beautiful Syria? During my holiday this summer I found myself in one of these lovely spots in Mount Lebanon—Bekfeya—and for a fortnight I had the great joy of telling the good news to those who there are "sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death," and it is darkness, the darkness of Romanism. The Jesuits are in power there, and have several schools.

Bekfeya and neighbourhood is the seat of the Archbishop and Bishop of the Maronite Church, which is simply Roman Catholicism. Any effort made to evangelize the people is bitterly resented by the priesthood. Dr. B. Manesseh for some time has had a dispensary there, and administers healing to the bodies and souls of the people; but he can only give one day in the week, having heavy other calls to attend to. Since starting the dispensary there, he has had several messages from the Maronite bishop to leave the place, who even offered to pay all the expenses he has incurred if he would only go; but he feels that the Lord has set before him an open door, and he dare not shut it.

It is an "open door" as regards the people themselves. They gladly listen. One man said to me, "If you would only stay three months I could gather fifty people to hear. We do not want your money; we want to hear." This very man said to me, "Pray for me, I am a great sinner"—and he was a Maronite. It was a joy to tell him of the "Great Saviour." The dispensary is always packed out, and I found every one only too ready to listen—in many instances asking for Bibles. Owing to the Jesuit schools, French is very largely spoken. Anyone with a good knowledge of French—colloquially—could do much work. Are there not some of the Lord's children at home who are waiting for a "call," who would come to Bekfeya? It is a beautiful climate, glorious views, sea, valley, and mountain, and no "hardship" as regards living—a very fair hotel kept by people in sympathy with the Gospel, where everything can be got for four francs a day. A boy's school in the centre of the village would be a real boon; an ideal one would be on the lines of the Irish Church Missions in Dublin.

Labours in Ecuador.

A RECENT issue of The Gospel in Mexico contains an interesting letter from Mr. J. F. Detweiler, concerning mission work in Spanish America. In reviewing the past year, the writer says:—

The Lord has been giving encouragement in evident signs of the working of the Gospel in some. In the town of Duran, which I have often visited, and where meetings have been held, it appeared as though the testimony given had been heeded by no one, although some professed to be interested. The woman in whose house we held our little gatherings, recently told us she had turned to the Lord, and the Word had evidently taken some effect in her heart. The few who come to my Bible class show continued interest in the study of the Bible, as do others whom I occasionally visit. One mechanic was converted by realizing what 1 John i. 7 meant. He gives evidence of having a genuine faith by his thoughtful reading of the Word, interest in the salvation of his family, and a changed life. Others are thinking about the needs of their souls.

Though one thus sees some whose interest in the Gospel seems real, there are others who once listened but turn a deaf ear. With one such I was talking recently. He said we Protestants were all condemned, because we did not belong to the Catholic Church, which was the true one, because it had the images of Christ and the saints, whilst the Protestants had none of them. I told him I thought that was one of the strongest reasons why the Romish Church was not the Church of God, inasmuch as the Ten Commandments prohibit such things. It is truly said of those who forget God that "their glory is in their shame."

The Tangled Skein.

PERPLEXED, in doubt, and almost in despair—is that your condition? Some knotty problem stares you in the face, demanding a solution which you cannot give. You are at a parting of the ways, and know not which path to take; as a traveller alone in the dark in a pathless desert.

WHAT IS YOUR DIFFICULTY?

You are out of employment, are you? Or are you in some business difficulty, and are at your wits' end to know what to do? Or you are contemplating some new departure in business or home life, yet scarcely know whether the step is wise or otherwise? Or love's sunshine has brightened your pathway, and thoughts of marriage are in your mind; yet you fear lest, in your ignorance, you should take a wrong step? Or perhaps your own haste and folly have brought you into difficulties from which you see no escape?

You probably wish at times that you could pierce the veil that hangs before the future. A peep into the future would make decision so much easier. If you are a Christian, of course your one desire is to know what the will of the Lord is. Perhaps you envy the early disciples, and wish that you, too, might look up into the eyes of Jesus, and ask Him to direct your steps.

A TRUE COMFORTER.

Yet there is One who knows your problem, and holds the key to its solution in his hand. His interest is as great as yours; his wisdom is infinitely greater. And best of all, his willingness is unquestionable. Saints in olden days knew his guidance, and still to-day He guides with his counsel. Read the lives of the saints of this generation, or ask any praying Christian of your acquaintance whether it is not so.

But you have not experienced his guidance? Perhaps that was your own fault. Come now and prove whether or no He gives wisdom and guidance to the seeking soul. Do not hang back because your difficulties have been caused by your own wilfulness or sin. He will not upbraid you with that, nor turn you away because you did not ask him sooner; nor add to your anguish in the cruel manner of the candid friend who says, "I told you so." No, He giveth liberally, and upbraideth not.

CONDITIONS OF GUIDANCE.

Do not expect him to guide you if you let sin lurk in your heart. Put away the evil. You cannot be on familiar terms with God while you harbour his enemies; and if you regard iniquity in your heart, He will not hear you.

Come with an open mind. Do not decide first, and then ask him to confirm your decision. Do not bring Him a sheet ready filled, and ask Him to sign it. Bring Him a blank sheet, and let Him write on it what He will.

Then ask Him to guide. True, He knows your need, but asking implies your own consciousness of it, and your submission to his direction when given. Some have not guidance because they ask not; some ask not lest his guidance should cross their desire; others because they have no faith. Their thoughts of God are hard thoughts; they imagine He has forgotten them; they do not believe He cares about them. Away with such unworthy thoughts! He is your loving Father; He sympathises with you in your difficulty, and longs to unravel the tangled threads of your life. Rest assured that, as certainly as He lives, so certainly He loves, and so certainly will He lead.

God has many ways of making known his will. You need not expect that He will do so in dreams, or by the casting of lots, as in days of old. God does not treat the world in its manhood just as He did in its infancy.

HOW HE GUIDES.

Sometimes He will guide you by your own common-sense. Look your difficulty fairly in the face, and it may be that direction will come by the quickening of your mental powers, and a way will appear where you thought there was none. Or again, conscience may be his minister of guidance. It can never be right to do wrong; do not expect any further revelation while your conscience condemns you. But since conscience itself may become depraved, so that it refuses to condemn the wrong, God has further revealed Himself in Holy Scripture. Here we meet with God as in no other volume. He moves among its pages. His character shines forth, his will is here made known. Read your Bible, and often from its sacred pages light will stream upon your path.

But you answer—"My particular difficulty is not met in any of these ways. I have thought over it till I am tired, yet I cannot tell what to do. Conscience has no word to say; I turn the pages of my Bible in vain; I ask, 'What would Jesus do?' and find that quite as difficult to answer as the original question, 'What ought I to do?' Has God any way to guide me here?" Yes. His resources are not yet exhausted. He speaks his will in the circumstances of your life. Watch the development of events, and see Him working. It may be that you will find your way so hedged about as to leave you no choice. Or a conjunction of circumstances will so unmistakably show the working of the Divine hand, as to leave no doubt as to his will.

Further, his will is made known by the Holy Spirit in the secret depths of the soul. Like a breath of morning air, like the rosy dawn over the darkened earth, noiselessly, imperceptibly, his holy influence comes. No sound breaks upon the ear, no vision bursts upon the raptured sight, but in the innermost shrine of our being we know that God is there. He speaks, He teaches, He causes us to know the way wherein we should walk. How He has taught us we cannot tell—the secret of that communion must remain a mystery. But we know that the darkness has gone, doubt has vanished, the way is clear, God's will is revealed. Live near Him that you may catch his whisper. Often go aside alone with Him, for He does not tell his secrets into ears that are deafened by the clang of earth.

GOD IS NEVER TOO LATE.

In whatever way God gives you his guidance, He will never be too late. Though He may be silent, He has not forgotten. He watches your life with keenest interest. Do not be in a hurry, or act without Him. When his time has come for you to move, He will tell you. Perhaps He will only show you one step in advance. Take it; and when it is time for a second step, He will show you that also.

The experience of divine guidance will fill your life with a heavenly calm. Restlessness and anxiety will vanish before it, and you will face the unknown future without a fear. The glorious certainty that He is leading will rob disappointment and sorrow of their sting, and give a deep peace even in the valley of the shadow of death. It will light up the future with glorious hope, for if He is leading you now, He is surely leading you home. And when from the farther shore you look back to earth, and trace the way his hand has led you, his loving guidance will, for all eternity, furnish you with a theme for reverent wonder and adoring gratitude.

Triumphant in Christ.

(2 Cor. ii. 14.)

Oh, for a place in the triumph of God,
In the train of his victor Son;
To be led by the chain of the love of my Lord,
A token of victory won!

Oh, for a place in the triumph of God,
The place of a captive slave;
To haste me and cast at the feet of my Lord
The freedom He gladly gave!

Oh, for a place in the triumph of God,
A trophy of love and of might;
That tells how the slave was redeemed by the Lord
To the service of beauty and light!

Oh, for a place in the triumph of God,
The triumph of ages untold,
That moves from the Cross to the throne of my Lord,
From the earth to the streets of gold!

Oh, for a place in the triumph of God,
To feel that his gaze is on me;
For the glory of God in the death of my Lord,
Is the thousands of captives set free.

Y.W.C.A. in Ireland.

AT the seventeenth annual Conference of the Irish Y.W.C.A.'s held a fortnight ago in Dublin, the opening members' gathering was addressed by Mrs. S. H. Smith (president) and Mrs. Selwyn, who, with Miss Whitwell, composed the deputation from England. Wednesday saw the opening of Victoria House, the new Central Institute, by Lady Coote, and brief, forcible addresses were given by Rev. J. Mahaffey (Church of Ireland), Pastor H. D. Brown (Baptist), Rev. Mr. Halley (Methodist), and Mr. Prendergast (Presbyterian), who were all agreed in the need for such work as that of the Y.W.C.A., and the duty of the various denominations to support its efforts. Nearly £500 is still urgently needed to clear off the debt incurred by removal from the institute previously used in Harcourt Street.

The speakers and their subjects on Thursday were: Mrs. Loftus Singleton, "The Precious Sons of Zion and their Belongings;" Mrs. FitzJohn Irwin, "Thrift and Temperance;" Miss K. Gregg, "Work among Juniors;" Miss Whitwell, "North of England Notes" and "Ye Belong to Christ;" Mrs. Selwyn, "Ready;" Dr. Elizabeth Beatty, "Our Alcoholic Inheritance." Mrs. Daunt, Miss Barcroft, and others took part.

Friday was a missionary day, very ably presided over by Miss Bradshaw. India, China, Japan, North and South Africa, and Persia were represented; and intensely earnest words spoken by many missionary members of the Association. About twenty-five Irish ladies are going out to foreign fields this year, one mother having given five daughters for the Lord's work abroad. On the whole, this was one of the best conferences which Ireland has ever enjoyed.

Warehousemen and Missions.

THE Warehousemen and Drapers' Foreign Missionary Society—which was formed in 1898, in connection with the City of London Bible Class Union, to foster an interest in world-wide Gospel effort among business men, and to endeavour to support those from among its members who might go forth to the field—is aiming to provide the support of at least one missionary on each of the great continents, doing so after the men have been accepted by any of the large missionary societies. Already Mr. John H. Harris (who went out from Messrs. Cook, Son & Co.'s), of the Congo Balolo Mission, is maintained on this basis, and Mr. Walter P. Hares (formerly with Messrs. I. & R. Morley) is in training at the Islington Home of the Church Missionary Society.

It is hoped in the near future to extend the movement to several provincial cities, many of whose business houses have large Bible classes. At present a deficit in the accounts stands in the way, but it is hoped this may soon be removed. The hon. treasurer is Mr. R. D. Stewart, 61, Mansell Street, Aldgate, E.

London Scavengers.—In summer about 7,000 men, and in winter about 20,000 are engaged in the task of collecting and destroying the dust and rubbish swept up from the streets. It is estimated that not two per cent. of these people attend any place of worship. The London City Mission hopes, therefore, to appoint a "missionary to scavengers," but will need the sum of £150, in addition to £112 already received, in order to inaugurate the work on a satisfactory basis.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.—The annual volume of THE ZENANA (2s. 6d. Partridge.) brings up to date much interesting information regarding woman's work for women in India. An abundance of portraits and other illustrations add materially to the attractions of the volume. The story of the work done among the women of India, under the auspices of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, is graphically told in TOWARD THE SUNRISING. (3s. Marshall Brothers.) The book is fully illustrated, and contains special chapters dealing with the history, religions, and customs of the country, which place the reader in a position to understand the narrative.

Anyone desirous of learning the truth about scientific experimentation on living animals, particularly dogs, should buy this book, which is a dispassionate treatment of the whole question, together with the author's personal experiences of the practice.

This Book should be read by every professing Christian anxious to know the truth about Vivisection.

Published by ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Oriel House, Malvern,

Dear Sir, or Madam, October, 1901.

We trust we shall be excused if we ask your attention to the following appeal on behalf of the humane efforts of the London Anti-Vivisection Society in the cause of the Suppression of Cruelty to Animals.

The Society was founded twenty-five years ago to wage war against Scientific Torture, and in this mission it had the earnest sympathy of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria. There is a growing feeling in the public mind that cruelty to animals, and indeed cruelty to any living creature, degrades the civilization which tolerates it, and is, at least, a moral crime, which ought to be put down by law. The fact that animals are tortured in the supposed interests of science causes an immensity of mental anguish to tens of thousands of people who are powerless to rescue them. We, therefore, respectfully solicit your support for the London Anti-Vivisection Society in its efforts to awaken the conscience of the public at large to the crime of torturing living animals for any purpose whatever, no matter what motive may be advanced in excuse, even in the cause of science.

We also respectfully request your consideration of the literature of the Society, which will be sent to anyone desiring it; and we hope that your heart may be touched and your energies enlisted on behalf of a cause so dear to the late Queen and to so many of her subjects.

Either of the undersigned will be glad to acknowledge any money sent to them for the purposes of the Society, the cause of which they commend most heartily to the charitable public.

We are, truly yours,

THE WINTER'S WORK

OF

THE WATERCRESS & FLOWER GIRLS' CHRISTIAN MISSION

IS OPENING WITH BRIGHT PROMISE.

Its operations comprise:

1. Daily Efforts by Missionaries and Deaconesses to improve the condition, morally and spiritually, of the 5,000 Watercress and Flower Women of London, including an Early Morning Free Breakfast at Covent Garden Market for the needy.
2. The Training of Cripple Girls in the art of Artificial Flower Making, to render them self-reliant and competent to earn their own livelihood.
3. The Care of our Orphan and Destitute Girls at Clacton-on-Sea, which now comprises Twelve Cottages, with accommodation for 250 little ones, exclusive of staff.
4. A far-reaching Gospel Mission, including Bright Services in the Woodbridge Mission Chapel, a Court and Alley Brass Band, with short testimonies, and innumerable other agencies, among both adults and children, for the winning of souls.
5. Constant Visitation of the Homes of the Poor by experienced Missionaries and voluntary helpers.
6. Painstaking Relief in all cases of dire Want and Destitution.

FUNDS ARE MOST EARNESTLY NEEDED.

The Fading Leaf.

By Rev. John Mitchell.

WHY does the leaf fade? Because it has done its work, and is no longer wanted on the tree. But do not think that it is of no more use. It will go to enrich the soil, and make the earth fruitful next year.

Some people think autumn the prettiest of all seasons. They look at the lovely tints on the trees, and say it reminds them of the golden sunsets they saw during holiday time in the country.

Most of us, no doubt, think the fresh green leaves of spring by far the prettier sight. But then we judge merely by appearance. The leaf which has been of great use to the tree and to the world is more worthy of admiration than the leaf which has as yet done nothing to call for praise. So the wrinkled and scarred face of one who has successfully fought and won victories on the battlefield of life is more deserving of honour than he who, in all the freshness of youth, is beginning the warfare. The Bible says, "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." And those whose lives have been given up to Christ, and who have been the greatest blessing to others, are the noblest of all! And while the body may wither, the soul in the freshness and loveliness of an eternal spring shall enjoy a beauty which shall endure for ever.

Men who specially study them tell us that some leaves make an impression on the stem which lasts as long as the tree itself. The preachers say that each life makes an impression for good or evil upon others which can never be blotted out. The dead yet speak by their words and actions. Men die, and are buried; but the grave has never yet been dug which could bury their deeds.

How careful we ought to be how we live! If we commit ourselves to the care of Jesus, He will make and keep us pure and holy, so that when we leave the world, we shall still speak by the good lives we lived and the good things we said.

Leaves decorate the landscape. They are both ornamental and useful. Now that is what God wants us to be. He wants the earth to be a great garden of his planting—the birds to be children who have given their hearts to Him; and the flowers to be the older people who bear his image. And not only does He want us to be flowers, but trees as well. We know Christ is both. He is the Tree of Life, and we also call Him the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley. He, as the Tree of Life, puts forth leaves which are for the healing of the nations. As a Flower, He was the fairest that ever bloomed on earth. We are to be trees bearing fruit. Fruit is something for the good of others. God wants us to be fruitful by dedicating our lives to Him that we may serve and glorify Him. We are to tell others of the Saviour's love, and seek that they may be fruit that will abound to our account. And we are to be flowers living beautiful and fragrant lives. Peace and love make us happy, and the world a place of true beauty.

Leaves fade, but the tree remains. What cheers Christians when they see things fade and pass away is the assurance that Christ remains. Friends have to leave us sometimes to go to another part of the world; sometimes to go out of it altogether. But Christ is always the same loving Saviour. He says: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Is He your Saviour and Friend, my reader? Is He not a Friend worth having? He will keep you safe in his everlasting arms if you will only let Him. Then you will have joy in life, joy in death, and joy through eternity.

Child's Evening Hymn.

God of Grace, my Father,
Hear my simple hymn,
As the day declineth,
And night closes in;
Thou hast led me onward,
Dangers thick among;
Hear me, loving Father,
Hear my evening song.

I am weak and feeble,
Little do I know;
Lead me, walking safely,
In the way I go.
Guard me on my journey,
Bid the light arise,
O'er my pathway onward
Upward to the skies.

Safe am I and happy,
Guarded by thy power,
Dreading not the darkness
Of the midnight hour;
All to Thee committing,
I am safe and free,
Sunshine bright and darkness
Are alike to Thee.

Hear me, loving Saviour,
Hear my feeble lays,
May the eve declining
Bear aloft my praise;
Keep me, hold me, bless me,
Till my race is run,
And the crown of glory
By thy grace be won.

Bible Clock.

Make a circle to represent a clock; mark off the hours from one to twelve, and taking the word LOVE for one o'clock, find texts in which this word occurs, having two, three, four, to twelve words to represent the hours. Chapter and verse must be given.

Children under ten, do any 4; under thirteen, any 7; under seventeen, any 10.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (301).

1. (a) Samuel (1 Sam. iii. 4); Elijah (1 Kings xix. 5 and 9); Saul of Tarsus (Acts ix. 4); Ananias (Acts ix. 10). (b) Samuel is told by God to warn Eli of his destruction. God sends Elijah to anoint Hazael, Jehu, and Elisha. Saul hears the voice and is called to be an apostle. Ananias is sent by God to baptize Saul.

2. (a) As a good conscience (Acts xxiii. 1); A conscience void of offence (Acts xxiv. 16); The conscience being weak is defiled (1 Cor. viii. 7). (b) A good conscience (1 Tim. i. 5); A pure conscience (2 Tim. i. 3); Suffering wrongfully for conscience' sake (1 Pet. ii. 19).

3. A clear conscience gives a sense of security, safety, and patience. Carelessness to the demands of conscience causes weakness.

Miss Mittendorff.—Many of our readers will remember the good work carried on during many years by Miss Mittendorff, among the children of Epsom. We regret to learn, through Surgeon-General Partridge (Bella Vista, Beckenham, Kent) that she has been for long in failing health, suffering much, especially from asthma. Recently she has become seriously ill, and has been obliged to go for treatment to a medical home at Hann, Münden. While a small circle of friends have counted it a privilege to provide for the outlay, Surgeon-General Partridge will be glad to hear from any who remember the good work of former years, and who would like now to minister to the need of this servant of the Lord.

An Indian Boys' School.—In a recent letter Mr. B. K. Mukherji tells with gratitude of the progress which is being made at the Mission High School, Seoni-Chhapara, C.P. India, of which he is headmaster. He writes: "I am happy to find a general awakening among the people here. At first there was a great prejudice against our mission-school, and especially our Bible-teaching. But God has helped us to remove that prejudice, and the most orthodox Hindus are sending their boys to us. In the last three months we have admitted 230 boys. This has made a new school building imperative, towards which the provincial government have granted us a site and £500. We are in urgent need of £800 more. We have now 465 boys, and we expect by the end of the year 200 more. It is a great privilege to be able to teach the Scriptures daily to so many children.'

Reading for Village Boys.—Miss M. W. Hunnybun, Old Court Hall, Godmanchester, Hunts, would be glad to receive disused books, suitable for lending to village boys.

SUNDAY, November 3.

God's Leading in our Lives (Psa. xxiii).

THIS Psalm has been called the Nightingale Psalm. Its inimitable beauty has spoken to all ages. It is a photograph of a shepherd's thoughts on the hills. David realizes that what he is to the sheep, God is to him, and longs that the docility of the sheep to its shepherd may characterize the attitude of his soul towards his Shepherd and Keeper. The Psalm ought always to be read in connection with our Lord's delightful words in John x., which, so to speak, give the Divine answer to this exquisite idyll. The soul cries, "The Lord is my Shepherd," and Christ answers, "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of Mine."

The special point to be brought out is the leading of the Good Shepherd. As we have it in John x. 4, the shepherd always goes first. This is characteristic of the East, where it is beautiful to see the sheep crowding on the shepherd's heels. Someone says that in this Psalm the first verse tells of the Shepherd going before, and the last verse of his watchdogs, Goodness and Mercy, bringing up the rear. What a convoy is ours!

There are times, especially in earlier life, when the Lord allows us to lie down in the pastures of luscious grass, while the quiet waters murmur past us, and speak of rest and peace—the green pastures of home, the still waters of our mother's love, the rest and quiet of our Sundays and holidays, the absence of responsibility, the freedom from anxious care. Most of us have at the present, or can look back upon, days, weeks, and years, in which life moved placidly and quietly, the noise of the battle and the murmur of the world were far away, and the dove of peace brooded over the peaceful landscape. The soft south wind blew, and the sky overarched us with the love of God.

In youth the Shepherd presses us forth into an apprenticeship, or situation, and gives us the first taste of strong and exacting toil. The paths are not so easy as the pastures, but they are "paths of righteousness." It is well and right for us to pass through this stern discipline; right and wise that we should know ourselves, and taste something of the power of temptation—right, though all seems wrong. Young heart, look up and still see the Shepherd is leading you.

From youth we pass into manhood and womanhood. Then we get our first experience of sorrow. The beloved mother or father dies; we meet with disappointment or failure; it seems as though we are descending from the sunny plains of life into the deep and darksome gorge, where the rocks meet overhead, and the heavy foliage darkens the sun, and the shadows lie thick, while the low roar of the beast of prey is heard on every side. This is the valley of the shadow of death; but even there the soul need not fear, for the Shepherd is leading. It may not be able to detect his presence, but He is none the less certainly a few paces in front. The valley of the shadow of death is not death. It may stand for the lingering illness, desolateness and solitude, or disappointment; but, after all, it is only shadow, and shadows vanish, and we pass from out of the sombre darkness, and the sun shines on the other side.

The Shepherd has his rod or crook, his staff or club, so that he is able to extricate us if we fall into the ditch on either side, or to beat down our enemies under our feet. Only do not go in front of Him, but be content to let Him lead.

In later years we come to the strife and conflict. There are enemies to combat, and even then God spreads a table in the wilderness, and while we do the fighting, He sees to the food, to the anointing and to the filling of the cup. You fight God's battles, God will make himself responsible for all else.

Towards the end of life the storm dies down, the darkness passes to eventide. It is light. The soul knows that what God has done, He will do; that He will not fail nor forsake, but goodness and mercy will follow the remainder of the days, and from the heights of the Delectable Mountain it looks across the valley to the house of God, and the many mansions of eternal blessedness, because of constant face to face fellowship. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The latest returns of world-wide Endeavour show that the total number of societies is now 61,605. The total number of Endeavourers is 3,695,280.

* * *

The testimonies to the value and power of Christian Endeavour in India, sent to Dr. Clark on the occasion of his birthday, are full of encouragement. Rev. Wm. Carey, of Dacca, wrote:—"Millions of young lives have been redeemed and quickened to highest service in the name of the King, through the simple but soldierly spirit of Christian Endeavour."

14.c

New Zealand Endeavourers report the holding of a very successful Triennial Convention. It was reported that a sum of £4,000 had been raised for missionary and other purposes, fifteen Endeavourers have entered the ministry, and thirty-nine have gone to the foreign field. Action was taken to induce the Government to prohibit the importation of opium, cigarette smoking by boys, and gambling.

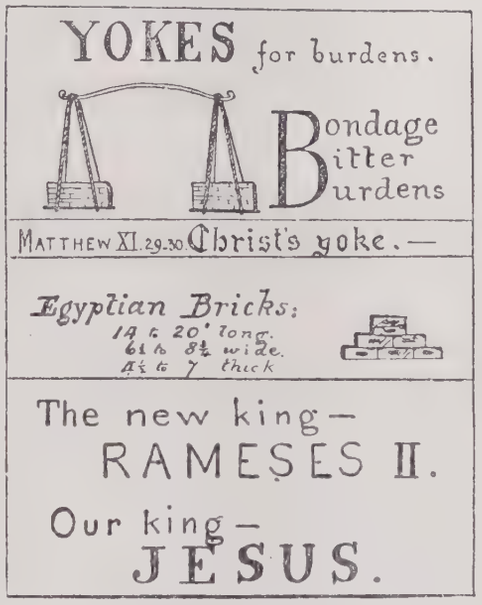
Israel Oppressed in Egypt (Ex. i. 1-14).

Golden Text: Ex. ii. 24.

Exodus.

THE second book in our Bible gives a sketch of the nation of Israel, enlarged, redeemed, consecrated to God's service, and includes a period of about 145 years.



Israelites in Egypt (1-7).

Ex. xii. 40 tells us that they were there 430 years, beginning with seventy people. They had now become a great host, increasing mightily every year. Four distinct and forcible verbs are used in verse 7 to try and make us realize their marvellous multiplication, till the land of Goshen was overflowing. They were more numerous and more prosperous than the Egyptians (Psa. cv. 24; Acts vii. 17). In Stephen's story (Acts vii.) he says the original number was seventy-five, because he quoted from the Septuagint, where the translators included five of Joseph's grandsons. The number seventy was always kept in remembrance by the Jews. They perpetuated it in their seventy elders (Ex. xxiv. 1; Num. xi. 16), and in the Sanhedrim (Matt. xxvi. 59). It is interesting to note that our Lord kept to these familiar numbers in appointing twelve Apostles and seventy disciples (Luke ix. 1, x. 1).

The New King (8).

Soon after Joseph's death the "hyksos," or shepherd kings, were expelled, and a new line of native Egyptians from the Upper Kingdom were the Pharaohs. They would know nothing of their history, and hated the Israelites as foreigners living in so large a part of their country, and especially as "shepherds," like the kings they had overthrown. The Israelites had kept up a separate national organization of their own patriarchal character; they still worshipped Jehovah, and looked forward to the possession of the Promised Land. This King is identified as Rameses II.

The King's Policy (9, 10).

He made a good resolve "to deal wisely," but showed no wisdom in carrying it out. He did not wish to lose them, for they were more than half the population; most likely he had been told that some day they were going back to their own land. He could not make slaves of them, but obliged them to pay exorbitant tribute, and worked them unmercifully.

The Work (11).

All the public and royal buildings in ancient Egypt were built by captives; some bear an inscription stating that no free man was employed in their construction. The taskmasters were men of rank, having overseers under them; the pictures on the monuments show men with Jewish countenances being driven on to work by their cruel masters. Pithom means the house, or temple of "Tim," the sun-god; the site of this city has lately been discovered, twelve miles west of Ismalia. On examination the bricks of the buildings were found to be unbaked; those in the lower parts of the walls are well made with chopped straw, and those on the highest parts are made with sedges and rushes mixed in with the mud, thus showing the truth of the Bible account in Ex. v. 7. Raamses has not yet been excavated; the native villages in Goshen seem built on mounds and ruins.

The Result (12-14).

The Egyptians were filled with "chagrin and abhorrence" to find the people increased in spite of all. God's blessing is mightier than man's wickedness. He allowed his people to be thus tried partly as punishment for idolatry (Josh. xxiv. 14; Ezek. xx. 5-8), also to wean them from Egypt, and make them long for Canaan, and cry to their God to strengthen their characters and prepare them for their great deliverance (Psa. lxxvi. 10).

Lessons.

I. There is one King who never dies, one Friend who never changes, one Almighty Power who will never oppress. Is He our King and Friend?

II. God's children are now often misunderstood and misrepresented a persecuted yet protected people, for He is with them.

III. Continued prosperity is not good. God's blessing gives the victory.

IV. Let us not only resolve, but also do wisely.

Temperance Notes.

LORD AND LADY CARLISLE continue to pursue the policy initiated by them some years ago of purchasing public-houses in the county of Carlisle and turning them into temperance houses. Their latest purchase has been that of the Howard Arms, Brampton, for £3,750.

In an application for the transfer of a licence at Wellingborough, the outgoing tenant—a woman—said she received notice to quit because the brewers thought a man would sell more beer. The chairman said brewers are often getting rid of tenants because they do not sell enough beer, and where this is found to be the case in the future, the Bench will refuse to grant a transfer.

The Bishop of Durham, in his greeting to the Durham branch of the C.E.T.S., referred to the "gigantic evil" of intemperance. He was, he said, the son of one of the earlier clerical pioneers of definite temperance work, who began his testimony in that direction when it was still a strange and oft-ridiculed thing to appear as a decided temperance reformer. He lived to see matters greatly changed in his active old age, and to pass on his principles and purposes to his sons. But he knew too well to the last how immensely much remained to be done, not only in actual reform of habits and in protective legislation, but in the education of general opinion.

The forty-ninth annual report of the United Kingdom Alliance states that gratifying progress has been made during the year, in spite of many obstacles and adverse influences. A section of the report is devoted to the consideration of the relation of alcoholism to tuberculosis. The proceedings of the Congress held in London in July last, at which Professor Brouardel made the statement that "alcoholism is the most potent factor in propagating tuberculosis," are dealt with; and the opinions of other medical experts are quoted in support of the view.

The Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission records continued progress in its many operations. The workers connected with the women's meetings have special cause for thankfulness. At these gatherings there is an average weekly attendance of 1,173. Numbers of pledges have been taken, and many have decided for Christ, and have been received into Church fellowship. Tent missions, ballet and factory girls' socials, coffee suppers, &c., have been regularly conducted, and have accomplished untold good. One of the most important branches of the Mission is the Police-court department. Over two thousand cases were dealt with by the missionary during the past year, and eight hundred pledges were taken in the lock-up.

Free Distribution of Literature.—The Homerton Book Distribution Society circulates 2,000 books per week. Every book is given away, and is not returnable. The work is carried on by twenty-seven distributors in one of the poorest neighbourhoods in North-East London. Parcels of literature and other help may be sent to Mr. W. A. Smith, 21, Chippendale Street, Lower Clapton, N.E.

Dolls for India.—With a view to stimulating the interest of young people in the work of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, a dolls' exhibition and competition is being arranged for the Christmas holidays. This is a simple way in which many can help their Indian sisters. Every station needs fresh workers, while numbers of Indian villages remain untouched, and many open doors face the workers. Particulars of the exhibition may be had from the secretary of the Jubilee Dolls' Competition, Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, 2, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, W.C.

CONGO BALOLO MISSION.

Autumn Party.

Four Missionaries are leaving this Autumn, two for the first time, and two returning to their respective spheres of labour in the heart of Bolololand. One has just sailed. The others leave in December, providing the necessary funds for passages and outfits are sent in through the liberality of the Lord's stewards.

£200 is required immediately to meet this need, and the Acting Honorary Director will be glad to receive contributions towards the sending out of these workers, and acknowledge same if sent direct to him, at Harley House, Bow; or gifts may be sent through the Office of The Christian.

£27,000 are absolutely necessary for the work this year; last year's receipts were £7,000 below requirements.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be made payable to WILLIAM BOOTH, crossed "Bank of England, Law Courts Branch," and addressed to Mrs. BOOTH, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C. Balance Sheets, Reports, and Pamphlets, giving the opinions of many eminent people concerning the work, will be sent upon application. Clothing much needed.

WELCOME MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.

TRUSTEES:

THOMAS HOGBEN (Director), G. H. FISON (Treasurer), Brigade-Surgeon WHITE, M.D. (Chairman), C. M. BAKER, J.P., JOHN PITT, R.N., Captain RILEY, K.R.R., and Major C. de WINTON.

THIS MISSION EXISTS TO BENEFIT:—

(1) SAILORS, (2) EX-SERVICE MEN, and (3) THE POOR AND SUFFERING, together with the families of each class.

ITS WORK is, first, Spiritual, on clearly-defined Evangelical and Protestant lines; second, Social, to help the poor to help themselves.

ITS VALUE IS PROVED by the fact that the Spirit of the Lord, during the 13 years of its existence, has week by week revealed Christ to sinners, and over 3,000 have professed conversion.

ITS NEED is apparent from the fact that hundreds of young men are constantly received from all parts of England, Ireland and Scotland, for training in the Naval Depot, and over 20,000 men annually leave H.M. Services, and many of them drift into the population of Portsmouth.

IT IS SUPPORTED entirely by voluntary contributions IT NEEDS TO-DAY help for current expenses, also £1,600 balance to purchase the freehold (the last £300 of which is promised), and a further sum of £2,000 to build a hall, a home for Christian sailors, and class-rooms for the young.

IT APPEALS to the country because lads come from all parts as birds of passage to Portsmouth, needing both spiritual and social help.

READER, YOUR PRAYERFUL INTEREST in the Work and Workers is earnestly requested. We believe this is God's work, and we confidently look to His Stewards to provide the money to effect the purchase by Christmas.

Cheques and P.O. Orders should be crossed "National Provincial Bank," and sent to Mr. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, or to the Office of The Christian.

Office:—7, Adam Street, Strand, W.C. Rev. W. A. ESSERY, Hon. Sec.

From great national causes our income was so reduced last year, that many of the works we usually help were only partially assisted, and some not at all. The Lord's impoverished workers pathetically press us to send them our Aids this year. We need a generous increase of £750 to do so. The Readers of "The Christian" have ever been our most generous contributors, and to you we once more appeal in our present need.

NEW PAPER.
NEW SIZE.
NEW STYLE.

ELIJAH,

And the Secret of his Power.

ISRAEL,

A Prince with God.

The above are now ready, each in Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. Other volumes will follow at intervals.

The volumes comprised in this re-issue will be large crown 8vo in size; printed on specially prepared Antique Wove "Zephyr" Paper, producing a book which is large and handsome, and at the same time light to the hand. The binding will be in cloth boards, with gold lettering on back and side; and the general "get up" will be found to be decidedly attractive and "up-to-date." The price of each will be 2s. 6d. per volume.

The appreciation by Christian readers of the works of this well-known Author has already resulted in the sale of a very large number, and it is hoped that the new form will quicken the interest in the series, and secure for it a still wider circulation.

The Ordinary Editions are still on sale.

Being "The Herald of Mercy and The Revival" Annual.

Handsomely bound in Illustrated Covers, crown quarto, 96 pages, 1s. (Post free, 1s. 1d.) With 12 full-page and numerous other Illustrations.

The Volume contains contributions from Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., and other Well-known Writers; Poetry; Striking Narratives; Telling Anecdotes; Special Pages for the Young, and other interesting Features.

The profuseness of the Illustrations and the general attractiveness of the Volume render it

An Acceptable Gift Book for Old and Young, while its pages will be found to contain a large selection of Readings suitable for Mothers' Meetings, District Visiting, &c.

The late Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote respecting a former volume:

"A delightful magazine, as full of the Gospel as the pages will hold; and withal so interestingly and plainly written that the poorest will like it. The shilling volume ought to be given away by thousands. It has done us great good to read it. Ministers would find lots of good anecdotes in it fresh and bright."

About Books.

"MY COUNSELLOR."

It is the Lord who is "wonderful in counsel," and his Word which, like Himself, is immutable and sure. Happy is the man who can say from the heart, "Thy word is true from the beginning. . . My heart standeth in awe of thy word. . . . I rejoice at thy word as one that findeth great spoil."

Holy Scripture is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Some Christians realize one or two of these fruits of study; some find more, indeed all. If we would be "perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works," we must receive into our hearts as well as accept with our minds "all Scripture" as it has been "given by inspiration of God."

How may we do it? Many read the daily chapter, and if there is time for this, a little arrangement will provide opportunity for the study of a spiritual homily on the section read. Others are not able to read an entire chapter, or perhaps are not so manifestly helped by consecutive perusal of entire books of Scripture. They cannot concentrate thought in a set and regular manner upon every part and portion of the Word. Such ask for the essence, so set forth as to represent the whole.

Just here we find the place of such a compilation as My Counsellor: Holy Scripture Arranged as Daily Meditations for Edification, Guidance, and Comfort. From time to time we have heard of great blessing following the use of this beautiful book, which may be had with Morning or Evening readings, or with the two combined in one volume. The plan is simple: A Scripture text gives the keynote, and the page of selections—clauses, sentences, verses—develops the Divine teaching in varying phases, in the language of the familiar Authorized Version. In the margin the references are given.

Whether or not we read the stated chapter day by day, we may, by the help of "My Counsellor," be greatly comforted and edified, as we ponder the words of grace and truth drawn from the well of Scripture undefiled. By arrangement with the Oxford University Press, Messrs. Morgan & Scott have issued special editions on ordinary or thin (India) paper, and in various sizes and styles of binding. Our readers are invited to apply for the prospectus, giving prices and other particulars.

Hymns and Hymn Writers. By Henry M. Nicholson. A readable sketch, multum in parvo. The fascination of the subject is fully appreciated by the writer of these pages. (3d. Plymouth: Hayter & Cole, 17, Russell Street.)

A worthy and helpful addition has been made to the series of "Little Books for Life's Guidance" in The Kingship of Self-Control, by William George Jordan (1s. Oliphant), which is calculated to touch a true chord in many a life as it deals with "individual problems and responsibilities."

Rev. W. Lyon Riach has published a series of nine sermons on Naaman, the Syrian Soldier. (2s. 6d. Oliphant.) Looking back to the beginning of a long ministry, he finds the consecutive method of preaching common at that time now largely a thing of the past. These are thoughtful, instructive discourses.

The collection of searching Evangelistic addresses by the late Brownlow North, given in Ourselves, comprises the well-known series, described as "a picture sketched from the history of the Children of Israel." Refreshing in their directness and simplicity, these pointed utterances should still prove welcome, both for their influence over the unconverted, and as a mine of suggestive thought for workers. A twelfth edition has been called for. (1s. net. C. J. Thynne.)

Goodness and Mercy is the title of a little volume, expository and experimental, by the late Mr. William Yapp. Miss M. M. Davis, of Leominster, supplies an introduction, in which a few details are given of the life and service of the author. Those who knew Mr. Yapp and his work in Hereford, London, and Leominster will know what to expect in the book; to others it is recommended as a casket of precious things, new and old, from the treasury of God's Holy Word. (1s. Ritchie, Kilmarnock.)

In 1864 a work, written by the late Mr. Charles Buxton, M.P., was published under the title of How to Stop Drunkenness. Being written by a brewer, the book attracted a considerable amount of attention, Mr. T. B. Smithies, the editor of the British Workman, writing a preface to it. The work has been out of print for some years, but it is full of suggestions which, it is felt, would be peculiarly useful at the present time. It has, therefore, been reprinted by the Church of England Temperance Society, under arrangement with the family of the author. (1s.)

Those who are faced with frequent questions in individual Christian dealing will find useful "They Searched the Scriptures" (3d. G. D. Shipley, Marcham, Abingdon-on-Thames), a booklet in which the author has gathered up much of the results of his reading and observation during many years.

The Missionary Calendar for 1902 (1s. E. Kaufmann) is a publication which will be highly valued in many quarters. Compiled by Clara Benham, this is a tear-off block calendar; it gives a portion for every day, with facts about missionary work all over the world, testimonies to the value of missions by well-known authorities, and helpful thoughts and quotations. Workers who are interested in the spread of Christ's Kingdom will find this a useful means of imparting information and keeping the subject before their minds.

The first volume of the "Free Church Pulpit" series (2s. 6d. each. A. H. Stockwell) is a very striking unfolding of the practical messages of the last book of the New Testament—Apocalyptic Sketches: By Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D. The expositor is true to himself as well as to his subject; he considers the visions in their immediate significance, although at times he follows the seer into more distant scenes. Those who are familiar with the ordinary prophetic interpretations will find additional suggestion in this thoughtful volume.

Lovers of Cowper's poems will read with interest Cowper and Mary Unwin, a centenary memento, edited by Caroline Gearey. (6s. H. J. Drane, Salisbury Square, E.C.) In the words of the preface, the book "traces the vague and melancholy episode of the poet's love story—the sweet, yet sad record of his attachment to Mary Unwin, and the sudden harsh affliction which put an end to all their hopes of happiness in this world." Many poetical morceaux are introduced as throwing light upon the very readable story.

The problems and difficulties of every-day men and women are fairly faced and the solutions expressed in simple language in Meanings and Methods of the Spiritual Life, by Rev Henry W. Clark. (6s. Allenson.) The depths of many a Christian heart are here sounded and its secrets laid bare. The causes of partial failure are pointed out skilfully, and through all with hopefulness and cheer for those who yearn for a closer walk. Here the inquirer will learn the full meaning of the salvation which only began at the Cross, as well as of the sense in which he is called to overcome the world.

Newman Hall: An Autobiography. We welcome a cheap edition of this readable book. (6s. Cassell.) A goodly volume it is, rich in recollections of great events, and in allusions to men of note in the religious and political world. Though eighty-five years of age, Dr. Newman Hall is still in vigorous health and young of heart. His mind surveys the occurrences of a busy career, and he presents the record with vivacity and evident satisfaction. To read such reminiscences is very refreshing. In many respects the volume will assist young people to appreciate the conditions of life and thought during the most active period of the past century.

A Key to Unlock the Bible. By Joseph Agar Beet, D.D., is the first of a series of "Bible Keys." (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The aim has been to put the reader in a position to understand the chief results of the latest and most careful study of the Word of God. Dr. Beet's view is that only by close and repeated study of Scripture itself can we reach the deeper meanings, and appropriate the promises and blessings of revelation. This book will promote the intelligent study of Holy Writ, and assist in "stablishing" men and women in the faith. We commend it as specially suited to help persons of inquiring mind.

Of Mr. Ferrar Fenton's "New Testament in Modern English" we spoke with decided qualification; of his new work, The Five Books of Moses: Being Volume the First of the Bible in Modern English, we must write in terms of emphatic disapproval. (2s. 6d. nett. Partridge.) Though he may mean well, Mr. Fenton has performed very indifferently. His book is not a translation at all, but rather a paraphrase, and that by no means helpful in expository study. The book is replete with clumsy variations from familiar versions, and many of the author's statements regarding Hebrew words and phrases are utterly unsupported by sound scholarship.

A memento of the late Rev. Frederick Baldey, vicar of St. Simon's, Southsea (4d. post free. W. E. Stride, Southsea) contains special sermons preached by Revs. J. C. Martin and H. Lindsay Young.

The Churchman's "Acrostic" Bible-Searching Calendar gives daily texts taken from the portions of Scripture appointed for each Sunday's service in the Ecclesiastical year. Copies may be had (three for 3½d. post free) from Miss Monck-Mason, Ollavintone, Folkestone.

Among the small annual publications of the Religious Tract Society are: The Scripture Pocket Book for 1902 (1s. 6d.); The Illustrated Sheet Almanack; The People's Almanack; and The Penny Almanack (all 1d. each). The "Pocket Book" is a model of compactness, and has various useful features. The "Pocket Book Almanack" (2d.) is an interleaved edition of "The Penny Almanack,"

Some Parcels of Books.

With the near return of the Christmas season, the question arises, what books shall I buy for children's presents? An answer may be found in the special parcel which Messrs. Morgan & Scott offer for 10s., carriage paid. It contains eight volumes of Rev. E. Payson Hammond's works; a book by A.L.O.E., entitled Percival's Picture Gallery; a tale by Mrs. Hunter, entitled Joe Witless; and the six volumes of "Nettie's Mission" Library; in all sixteen volumes for 10s., as stated above (or 11s. 9d. if for abroad).

Another special offer, which will appeal to preachers, teachers, and all students of the Scriptures, is the 6s. parcel of Biblical works. This includes a copy of Cruden's Concordance (3s. 6d.); a handbook to the Old and New Testament, entitled The Bible Remembrancer (2s. 6d.); The Bible Interpreter, an illustrated dictionary of the Scriptures (1s. 6d.); and two other valuable works: Searching the Scriptues (2s. 6d.), by Dr. J. Anderson, and Christ Lifted Up (2s. 6d.), by Rev. R. Gilchrist. These five books, it will be noted, total up to 12s. 6d.; but the publishers offer the parcel, carriage free, for 6s. (or if for abroad, 8s.). This would make a most useful present for an evangelist, Sunday school teacher, or any other Christian worker.

Yet another special offer, which is of great value at this time, when so many are being turned aside to the errors of Romanism, is the parcel of Protestant books for 9s., carriage paid, including a splendid edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, with twelve full-page illustrations, and a steel-plate frontispiece. This book alone is published at 10s. 6d. Then there is a copy of The Catacombs at Rome, by Mr. Benjamin Scott, F.R.A.S.; three of Miss Richardson's books, giving practical experience of Romanism; and forty-two copies of a pamphlet on The Confessional, by Miss Richardson. This latter will be found very useful for distribution. The whole parcel is offered for 9s. (or 11s. 3d. if for abroad).

The publishers, however, make one condition with all these "special offers"—it is that those ordering the same will undertake to carefully place the copies of The Christian (which will be enclosed in each parcel) with some friends not as yet acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may be induced to become regular subscribers. All orders for these special parcels of books should be sent, with remittance, to Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

Another special offer which has met with a wide acceptance is that of a copy of the "Two-Version" Edition of the Bible. It contains the Authorised Version, with the differences of the Revised Version printed in the margin, so that both texts can be read from the same page. A beautifully-bound copy of this Edition of the Holy Scriptures (price £1) is offered to anyone who secures twelve new subscribers to The Christian. In a number of cases Christian workers, at once concerned for the extended influence of The Christian, and desirous of possessing a valuable book, have set to work with very encouraging results. There is also a Wide Margin Edition, published at 27s.; and, whereas for twelve new subscribers a 20s. copy of the ordinary edition is given, for sixteen new subscribers a copy of the 27s. "Wide Margin" edition, printed on writing paper, an ideal "worker's" Bible, will be presented. Full particulars of this scheme can be obtained on application to Morgan & Scott, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. [Advt.

Baptist Deaconesses.—The work of the Baptist deaconesses in West Central London continues to make satisfactory progress. A report which has just been issued says:—"We have six Sisters in the Home and Hospital training, who are daily visiting the homes of darkness and dirt, carrying not only the 'Bread of Life,' but the 'bread that perisheth.' There are hundreds of men and women and little children crowded together in squalid cellars and dingy garrets, who, but for our Sisters, could say 'no one careth for my soul.' The Sisters watch by the sick and care for the dying. Quite recently a poor woman left the hospital, incurable, to die in her miserable underground kitchen home. Her husband had to be at work all day, and there was no one to minister to her but three tiny children. Our Sisters cared for her day and night till the end, and then sought a temporary home for the little ones." The address of the Mission is now 98, Guilford Street, London, W.C. Dr. Percy Lush is the medical officer and Rev. A. B. Middleditch the secretary.

Death of Mr. Joseph Clarke.

The sudden death of Mr. Joseph Clarke removes a devoted worker, who was associated for many years with Mr. Charrington at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., and who was also well known as an evangelist, having for a long time been connected with the Evangelization Society. Mr. Clarke was well on Friday, and, in fact, to most of his friends seemed in better health than usual. He conducted the Testimony meeting in the Assembly Hall on Friday evening, and seemed exceptionally happy in the service. He retired to rest, and lay in bed reading till about half-past one. At a quarter to two he called to his wife and said he was suffering pain in his chest. In a few minutes he said "I am dying; I am dying. O Lord, receive my spirit, and take care of my dear wife and children," and expired. At the Saturday-night prayer-meeting, and the Sunday services in the Great Assembly Hall, the announcement of his death cast a gloom over the audience, and the meetings were greatly interrupted by the sobs of the people. The East End poor have lost a friend whose place it will be hard to fill.

Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

WE have just had a special fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. F. Rayner, of the Mumbles, Swansea.

Where constant and regular evangelistic work is being carried on, and that for many years (twenty-seven), as at the Soldiers' Home, it is difficult to speak of what is special, because all is special; still, we do find that a mission occasionally amongst the same people is productive of blessing to some who have not been reached by anything they have heard before.

Having returned home from the camp on Salisbury Plain, we felt it would be wise to get into shape at once for winter work. Nothing effects this so happily, and so surely, as a series of Gospel services. This we have had and much enjoyed. Every night the truth of God has been earnestly and faithfully preached. The Christians, both old and young, have been much refreshed; the work of grace has been deepened in many hearts, and we look for a harvest from the seed sown.

The weather at times was particularly inclement; yet notwithstanding winds and wet, the people gathered, and thus manifested the interest they feel in God's Word and work. The closing meetings on the last Sunday were times of solemn heart-searching before the Lord. The word spoken by Mr. Rayner was felt to be from God, and came with power, and we were not surprised when a large number gathered for the thanksgiving tea on Monday night. A valuable farewell word was spoken, and the mission as a mission was over. We trust now to see results that will reach into eternity, bringing honour and glory to our King.

Personalia.

We are sorry to learn that Rev. John Urquhart has been laid aside with influenza, and is making only a slow recovery.

Many will hear with regret of the great loss which Mr. J. Wooldridge has sustained in the death of his wife, especially after the recent sudden death of his eldest son, who, with Mrs. Wooldridge, was so helpful in the tent mission, for twenty-five years. Those who have come under the blessing of Mr. Wooldridge's ministry will especially be disposed to show prayerful sympathy with him in this hour of trial.

Two daughters of Lord Radstock are about to proceed to India as missionaries. At St. Michael's Church, Burleigh Street, W., they received the rite of confirmation at the hands of the Bishop of Sierra Leone. The congregation included many relations and friends, Prebendary H. E. Fox and other clergy.

Rev. Dr. J. G. Cunningham (Edinburgh), who with Dr. Robertson (St. Ninians) formed a Scottish deputation to inquire into the "Los von Rom" movement, when ready to return home, met with a painful accident to one of his legs, and is compelled to remain as the guest of Rev. Dr. Andrew Moody, Budapest. We are glad to say, however, that there is cause for praise to God in the good progress made towards recovery.

A Heartrending Case.

A Blind Lady and her Husband, and their two daughters, who are Governesses.

Mrs. C. writes: "The mother of my late Governess, aged 68 (and husband, aged 78), entirely dependent on their two daughters, who are governesses. There is no hope of Mrs. ——— recovering her sight, and she suffers great pain. The daughters are unable to earn sufficient to support themselves and parents. The mother used to earn a little by needlework before she went blind. It is very hard on them all, as they have seen better days. Excellent references from doctor and clergy."

The Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

1,566 of the Lord's aged poor, of both sexes, and members of various branches of the Church of Christ, are now on the books: and upwards of £12,000 per annum are distributed in life pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas. To meet this amount the income is inadequate. The pensioners live in all parts of the country, and most of them are upwards of seventy years of age.

In the four homes—Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill—180 of the pensioners have peaceful and happy abodes. A visit to these buildings is invited.

Fresh Contributions to the Society and Asylums are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received at the Office of the Society or of The Christian.

Notes & Comments

Mrs. Anna Shipton. As we go to press, we learn with deep sorrow of the death of our old and beloved friend, Anna Shipton, known to multitudes of our readers all over the world by her helpful and spiritual writings. Mrs. Shipton had been a great invalid for many years, but the home-call, which brought her eternal relief from much suffering, was itself somewhat sudden.

The Bible and Modern Thought. We hope our readers, and especially young men and women, will read the important utterance of Dr. Wace, of King's College, on this subject (see p. 12). So persistent are the endeavours of some ministers and other critical teachers to force upon the younger generation their untried and unproved theories, that, in view of the grave issues at stake, it is well, as Dr. Wace says, to "think once, twice, and thrice, before allowing ourselves to be persuaded that the uniform belief of the Christian and Jewish Churches for nearly three thousand years has been proved to be entirely wrong." We are glad to call attention, also, to Rev. John Urquhart's offer to Sunday-school teachers (see page 11). The evidence of modern research is strongly on the side of the old beliefs.

The Limit of Christian Concession. All who have carefully followed the controversies between Christians and non-Christians during late years must have been struck with the number of concessions which Christian men have made to the other side, with the hope, doubtless, of conciliating them. It may be wise to offer some concessions upon non-vital points; but there is a necessary and rigid limit to this kind of thing. There is a too great willingness to surrender miracles as a concession to "scientific theologians." They who do this tell us emphatically that "a Christ without miracle is still the Christ." As emphatically we reply that a Christ without miracle is simple inconceivable. It is possible to multiply concessions until the enemy has gained all, and remains an enemy still. A true faith does not survive by its accommodations, but by its insistance upon its specialité.

A Worthy Testimony. Amid all the discussion in regard to the alleged failure of the Sunday-school as "the nursery of the Church," and the numerous suggestions for improvements in teaching and management, it is pleasant to come upon a plain and unmistakable statement from one who is entitled, by long years of experience in the Sabbath class, to speak with authority. Mr. George Cadbury says:—

> I fully agree that the literary as well as the theological needs of the scholar should not be overlooked, but my forty years' experience in Sunday-school work convinces me that the most important matter is that the teachers' main longing shall be that the boys and girls under their care shall be brought to Christ.

No teaching from which the living, loving Saviour is absent, or in which He is given a subsidiary place, can end in anything but failure. If Christ be lifted up He will, in the class-room as elsewhere, fulfil his Divine promise, and draw souls to Him.

Sabbath Reading. There is need of greater care in the selection of suitable reading for the Sabbath. In many Christian homes no clear distinction is made in that respect. Some years ago the task was far more difficult than it need be to-day. Then The Pilgrim's Progress, Pollok's Tales of the Covenanters, the story of The John Williams Missionary Ship, Foxe's Book of Martyrs, and a few other volumes almost exhausted the list, whereas there is now a wealth of literature helpful in the spiritual life. The sanctified half-hour on the Sabbath will carry its influence into the week. It is not Puritanism, it is true wisdom, to make the Sabbath a day of mental peace, and to confine its literature to the Word of God, and to books which illustrate it or breathe its spirit.

Membership in the Established Church. The question of "What Constitutes a Member of the Established Church?" is being hotly debated among Churchmen, with little hope of coming to a general agreement. One school demands the inclusion of all ratepayers, a position consistent with the claim of many Episcopalians that the "Church" is the nation in its religious aspect. The diocesan conferences are, however, showing signs of receding from this purely mechanical test. The York diocese will "have nothing to do" with this view. That of Manchester accepts it plus a declaration of baptism and membership. That of Hereford asks for confirmation plus a declaration of membership, while Llandaff asks for the communicant test. The Church Times pleads for the status conferred by confirmation, which in its opinion "is the minimum requirement desirable, and in the circumstances, perhaps, the possible maximum." Episcopalians seem with one accord still to fight shy of the Evangelical and New Testament test, that what makes a member of a Church of Christ is a hearty, loyal, personal, saving faith in Jesus Christ Himself.

The Minimum of Christian Belief. In an article published a few months ago a great theologian expressed the conviction that it had become necessary, by reason of the extraordinary elasticity at present attached to the word "Christian," to define once more what is the irreducible minimum of Christian belief. Recent events amply justify this conviction. The later phases of heresy and moral craziness place themselves under the shelter of our Lord's name, albeit his Deity and his doctrine are entirely ignored. Surely it is self-evident that the very least demanded of a Christian is a true heart belief in our Lord's Deity, with all that that involves. To us it is incomprehensible that men who boast of their "freedom," in breaking away from historic and Scriptural Christianity, should fight so tenaciously for the Christian name. It is not honest. If people are determined to be singular, then let them pay the full price of their courage, and cease to snatch support from a cause which they have abandoned.

London's Coronation Gift. It is a good suggestion that London should, at the King's Coronation, cause its thanksgiving present to take the form of freeing the London hospitals from the terrible incubus of debt and financial difficulty which ever presses upon them. The Sovereign, of course, cannot accept a gift in the common meaning of the term from loyal Londoners, but we all know how deeply interested both the King and Queen are in the London hospitals, and we are certain that if a sum of money could be raised sufficiently large to keep the hospitals going, without the necessity for continuous appeals for help, their Majesties would be delighted. It is a noble idea, and with London's wealth, it should be easily carried out.

The Educational Peril. The note of warning sent out by Lord Edward Fitzmaurice as to the divided state of opinion on the part of those who are unsectarian in education, is one that may well be attended to in view of the avowed purpose of the Government to renew the education controversy in an acute form during the next Parliamentary session. If such divisions show themselves, when the time comes, the clerical party, which is thoroughly united, and has the sympathetic ear of the Government, will cause next year to be a black-letter day in the history of education, and the yoke of priest-craft will be tied round the necks of the rising generation to a certainty. Nothing but a clear sense of the serious issues involved, and of the difficulty of reversing a policy that has once received the sanction of the people's representatives in Parliament, can avert the peril. Differences on ways and means, and on secondary points, should not be allowed to interfere with a strong determination to maintain the Cowper-Temple clause, and the status quo as regards the question of religious teaching.

A Naive Confession. It is surprising to read the naïve confession of the Duke of Devonshire, head of the Education Department, that he "does not really understand the question of the Education Bill any more than the man in the street." If the Duke can thus speak, what are we to think of the attitude of the ordinary person towards the proposed Bill? We are afraid that the common people are in total ignorance regarding the revolutionary proposals of the Government with regard to Education, and that if we are not careful a Bill will pass through Parliament which will most seriously put back the clock.

A Romanist on Priestcraft in Ireland. As the effect of a predominant priestism on the well-being of a nation, the following remarks from the pen of Mr. M. J. F. M'Carthy, who speaks as a Roman Catholic, are significant. Discussing the question why Ireland is so poor, he says that in the first place the people have "to live in hovels, while their priests live in luxury and officiate in temples of a magnificence which is altogether out of place in a poor country like ours." Secondly, he points out that Irish education is passing gradually more and more into the hands of the priests; and thirdly, he boldly affirms that there is no more reason for a Roman Catholic University than for a Salvationist University. He sums up his reading of the situation in these words:—

My position as a lay Irish Catholic is this. I want my children to receive such a training as will fit them to compete successfully in after life with Protestants. All the great industrial nations are Protestant. In fact, the world is a Protestant world, wherever it is a wide-awake world. Isolation from Protestants, distrust and hatred of Protestants, have not enabled ourselves and our fathers to compete successfully with Protestants.

This bold statement should be widely known in view of the determined attempt of the priestly party to "capture" the school-boards of England.

Is Protestantism in Danger? The current number of the Temple Magazine contains a symposium upon the above subject. The writers—all representative men—give good reasons for the belief that Romanism has no real hold upon the masses of the people in this country, while abroad its power everywhere is menaced. But as for the subversion of Protestantism in the Anglican Communion, two leading Evangelicals—Prebendary Webb-Peploe and Canon Hay Aitken—say:

There is great danger that Protestantism may be crushed out of the Established Church by the cruel, if not criminal neglect of our rulers both in Church and State. . . . It is necessary that the Church speedily acquire such a measure of autonomy as shall enable her to deal summarily with distinctly Roman innovations, and, if necessary, with Roman innovators.

Protestantism in America. A great Protestant revival movement is to be carried on in all the States of North America during the coming winter. This has been for some time desirable owing not only to the development of Romish propaganda, but to the growth of Ritualism among the Episcopal clergy. The unprecedented material progress of the States during the last generation has not been favourable to the maintenance of the grand old Puritan ideals which went to the making of America as a nation; and the chief bulwark of Protestantism is the Puritan faith and temper. The National Committee of the "Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign" is at present assembled in New York, and is arranging for stirring "revival" services in every town in the U.S.A., as far as California. Circulars have been sent to 12,000 ministers, and the answers received from all parts of the country are most reassuring. This plan of endeavouring to strengthen Protestantism by a campaign of Evangelism is in keeping with its noblest traditions. Personal faith is at the root of Puritan Protestantism.

Political Pandering. A persistent rumour is abroad that there will be a dissolution of Parliament in the early autumn, and already in some quarters preparations are being made for it. In view of this probability, it is not difficult to understand Mr. Chamberlain's warmly-expressed defence of the objectionable proposal to compensate publicans upon any interference with their licences. It certainly was noteworthy that, in referring to the arrangement recently come to between the magistrates of Birmingham and the brewers, that a number of licences should be suppressed, Mr. Chamberlain should not have said anything about the fact that those brewers and publicans who are not interfered with under the plan will themselves have to compensate those who are. The granting of a licence does not confer any vested interest, and the proposal to compensate out of the rates a man whose licence is found to be unnecessary throws the burden upon the industrious and temperate taxpayer.

"The sight of means to do ill deeds—" The statistics of Licensing Reform in Liverpool from 1889 clearly disposes of the strange assertion in The Times, that the lessening of the number of public-houses tends to increase rather than stem the current of drunkenness. Since that year, the licences of the city (which, be it remembered is a great seaport) have been reduced by 345, and in the same time the number of police cases of drunkenness has fallen from 16,042 to 4,180 per annum; while in 1900 it was felt possible to reduce the police force by 100 men, thus saving the city £8,000 a year. The larger the number of public-houses, the greater the competition between them for customers, and the more questionable the means they will employ for this end. The fewer they are, the more respectable they become, and the less temptation do the street corners present to the weak and unwary to go in and drink.

The Colour Problem. A fortnight ago we expressed our admiration of the action of President Roosevelt in inviting Mr. Booker Washington to dine with him. According to Reuter, that simple, Christian act has resulted in a race riot in certain parts of the South. It is deplorable that men can so far dehumanize themselves as to almost hate a man because the colour of his skin differs from theirs. Yet, unfortunately, in America this feeling runs very high. To this day negroes are refused entertainment in certain Northern hotels. Granted that the ways of some negroes are not as pleasant as they might be, is this a reason for hatred and boycotting? This spirit only reveals how far short men are of the Gospel temper which recognises that in Christ there is neither Greek nor barbarian, bond nor free, white nor black. Outbursts of race hatred show how pagan at heart many men remain, despite a vaunted civilization.

A Terrible Total. Unhappily the public mind appears to have become accustoned to the continuance of the unhappy war, and except when special attention is drawn to it by some striking event comparatively little regard is paid to it. Yet week by week the sad figures are being increased by the addition of the numbers of killed and wounded and of the deaths from disease. During last month alone we lost 17 officers and 170 men, 42 officers and 441 men were wounded, 4 officers and 162 died of disease, and 60 officers and 1,926 men were invalided home. It is almost incredible that since the commencement of the conflict no fewer than 824 of our officers and 16,648 of our men have died in South Africa, 6 officers and 417 men have died after having returned home, and 7 officers and 615 men are reported as "missing." In the face of this terrible total, even the immense financial cost fades into nothingness. Behind it all, however, there looms a world of bereavement and misery the extent of which cannot be overestimated.

The Making of a New Race. The world cannot complain of any paucity of suggestions for improving its life. The air is full of proffered panaceas for the ills which afflict society. In the course of a lecture in connection with the Huxley Memorial last week, a philosopher revived the old project of "special selection" in marriage, with a view to producing a perfect race. Given physically perfect parents the race would come out all right, &c. It is an ancient dream, this, but a dream only at the best. The facts of life contradict it. Sparta produced the hardiest men this world has seen, yet that country decayed through its sin. The element of sin—of perverted human wills—never enters into the calculations of our pseudo-philosophers, consequently there is no room for real redemption. The last truth that some clever men learn is that life can only be regenerated from the heart outwards.

Alms or Assistance. A writer in our contemporary, The Spectator, in dealing with the subject of Christianity and Charity Organization, has some wise words to say in regard to indiscriminate giving, and the duty on the part of the charitable to bestow something more than money There must, of course, always be many cases in which the help must necessarily precede the inquiry, or even ignore it; but, as a rule, the true charity includes co-operation, and the recognition of the obligation of neighbourliness. In, perhaps, the highest illustration of this universal relationship, the Parable of the Good Samaritan, there was not personal help to the extent of the need, there was also a visit of inquiry as to the result, a visit which possibly opened the door to further opportunities of usefulness. The writer remarks:—

If charity is nothing but a meritorious sacrifice on the part of the charitable, its administration need, of course, have nothing to do with reason. In this case, however, it is nothing more than a kind of pious selfishness, and no selfishness can surely be part of the two great commandments on which Christianity hangs. . . . If these two ideals—the service of God, and the service of man—are alike they must be pursued in like manner; that is, with all the strength of the pursuer's mind, as well as of his heart and his soul.

The Unrest in Spain. Ever since the unhappy war between America and Spain things in the latter country have been in a state of perpetual flux. The people know, at last, their real weakness, and they also know its cause. For some time a determined set has been made against the clerics, and it is evident that widespread revolt is in the air. The priests are said to be for the most part heart and soul with the Carlist movement, as against the present monarchy, because Carlism spells Ultramontanism. It is a case of people versus priests; liberty versus bondage. Meanwhile, religious indifference is on the increase — among men especially. They want a Gospel which is not offered to them. Spain presents a fine field for increased evangelization.

The Inner Light. The mystical doctrine of the "inner light," which is being revived by certain peculiar sects just now, needs to be most carefully guarded. It seems to be assumed that any sort of impression made upon the mind comes of necessity from the Holy Spirit of God; hence, under the sanction of the "inner light," the door is open to any and every vagary. We need to be reminded that impressions come to us from other than Divine sources, and it is a Christian's business to "try the spirits, whether they be of God." Of one thing we may be absolutely certain—that the Holy Spirit never teaches a human spirit anything contrary to his great mission, which is to "take of the things of Christ and show them" unto us. If any "inner light" therefore tends to diminish the unique glory of the Saviour, we may summarily, and without discussion, banish it as an ignis fatuus whose goal is a bog of bewilderment and error. This is a canon of judgment for all.

Practical Papers.

On "Short Cuts."

THERE is no short cut to either character or holiness; but the desire to find one lies at the root of all temptation. Adam and Eve were like children, in growth of intellect and mind, who saw "the tree was to be desired to make one wise." Wisdom is an excellent thing, but it cannot be obtained in a moment. It is a beautiful decoration built upon the solid foundation of study and hard work. But in their desire to obtain it by a short cut, Adam and Eve fell.

So, too, the temptations of our Lord. He was hungry. His hunger would be appeased in his Father's good time; but Satan says, "Command that these stones be made bread," to satisfy this hunger there and then—by a short cut.

Here was Impatience. But God does not deliver until He has put faith to the test. True, He will not capriciously mock us with stones for bread to please Himself; but He certainly will not give us bread for stones to please the tempter. Therefore, "let patience have her perfect work," and "cast not away your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward."

Again, Christ had a ministry to fulfil. It was important to arrest the attention of the people. Therefore, said Satan, as he stood by Him on the pinnacle of the Temple, "Cast Thyself down hence." God would keep Him from injury, and all men would instantly believe on Him—by a short cut.

Here was Presumption. God does not pervert the order of nature, nor commission angels, without a cause. He can do the impossible when required, but not until we have exhausted the means that lie within our reach. Angels were there in reserve, ready to do his bidding, but the time for them to act was not yet. "O that I had wings!" may be a fitting prayer when all else has failed, but not until we have tried the staircase. Rather, let us pray, "Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins," remembering that "He will, with the temptation, provide a way of escape, that we may be able to bear it." God helps those that help themselves. There is one thing better than deliverance—that is, victory.

Once more; from an exceeding high mountain, Satan "showed Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," and said, "All these things will I give Thee if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." Thus should all the world at once accept His sway—by a short cut.

Here was misdirected Ambition. Satan ever promises more than he is able to perform, and dresses temptation in its most attractive garb. Thus he is doubly a deceiver. We see the "glory," but the stress, the turmoil, and the pain are hidden from our view. We may well suspect the angry talon, when most in evidence is the velvet paw. Christ must needs be the Man of Sorrows ere He could become the King of Glory; and we, too, must "through much tribulation" inherit the kingdom.

No subtle reasoning, no apparent triumph, can make wrong right, though the wish be father to the thought. No supposed influence, bought by compromise of what is true, will win genuine or lasting respect. No power dishonourably gained can advance the kingdom of God. We dare not do evil that good may come. The highest ambition is to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; to do his will; to acknowledge Him in all our ways. Then shall all else be added unto us; then shall we know of the doctrine; then shall He direct our paths; then shall the devil leave us; then shall angels come and minister unto us.

"But what a grand thing," says the human heart, "to achieve such glorious results in a day, instead of in a lifetime!" Yet consider the real results. Adam and Eve, seeking after wisdom, won for themselves a reputation of egregious folly. Christ, by withstanding temptation, won for Himself the eternal glory of a blameless life.

The essence of all temptation is the "short cut." A boy or man desires to gain some advantage over others in school or in business. The short cut lies by way of stealing, cheating, or lying, while the honest path is a long and weary road. But often "the longest way round is the shortest way home." Keep to the turnpike, and you will have none of the hedges or ditches to leap with which the cross-country path abounds, for these are not found in the highway of holiness. Reality is a straight path that leads upward through the fair gardens of Reputation to the Beulah Hills of eternal Reward.

Yield not to temptation,
For yielding is sin.
Each victory will help you
Some other to win.
Be praverful and earnest,
Kind-hearted and true,
Look ever to Jesus,
He will carry you through.

The Attacks on Holy Writ.

DEAR SIR,—The time, which many of us have long foreseen, is now upon us, and the faith of the people, and specially of the teachers in our Sabbath schools, is being brought into peril. An attempt is being made to break down popular resistance to the new views. A minister of one of our important City churches lately told his Bible class that there was no truth in a large part of Genesis, Judges, and Ruth. Professors are lecturing with the avowed object of allaying alarm, and nevertheless are telling their audiences that, whatever the early chapters of Genesis may be, they are not history, and that if it be asked whether the patriarchal history is true, the question can be answered "yes" and "no." The evident purpose of this is to impress the people with the conviction that the early Scripture history at least must be surrendered, and when that is gone confidence in the Bible as a unique and complete revelation will necessarily follow.

While opportunity still lasts, the overwhelming evidence of the absolutely historical character of the early Scriptures, which has been so marvellously furnished by recent research, should be placed without delay in the hands of the teachers in our Sabbath schools. To aid in this effort I have now in the press a cheap edition for Sunday school teachers of the first four volumes of "The New Biblical Guide" (Popular Edition). This covers the entire Pentateuch period, and shows how the history has been confirmed and illustrated by the progress of natural science, and the recent discoveries in Egypt, Sinai, and Palestine. I may say that the value of this record has been very fully acknowledged by the Press, and that the first two volumes have been translated and published in Germany, the first of them being now in a second edition.

The volumes will be sold at 2s. 6d. To get them into the hands of the teachers, I purpose communicating with the secretary of each school, and offering to present him with a volume on the condition that, if he approves of the work, he will bring it before the teachers. To meet the cost of these presentation volumes, one friend has given me £25. I shall be pleased to receive further contributions for this purpose. The sum of 2s. will send one volume; £1 will send ten.—I am, yours sincerely,

John Urquhart.

The Secretaries' Prayer Union, the members of which are officers of metropolitan religious and philanthropic societies, held an open meeting for social intercourse and prayer at Exeter Hall on Wednesday afternoon last. The chair was occupied by Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, president of the Union for the year, when a most helpful and inspiring address was given by Rev. E. J. Kennedy, vicar of St. John's, Boscombe. A former president followed by earnest prayers for God's blessing to rest upon the efforts of his servants engaged in mission and rescue work in this Empire City.

The Daily Cross.

(Luke ix. 23.)

By Rev. E. Griffith Jones, B.A., Balham.

WHAT is meant by the "daily cross"? And when can we claim that we are carrying that cross, and so proving ourselves to be the Lord's true disciples? There is much confusion of thought on this important question. Many are under the impression that they are bearing such a cross when it is not so. Many may be bearing it though they know it not.

The Christian cross is not any of the inevitable ills of life. When people are visited with a disability of any kind—a bodily weakness, anxiety about some dear friend, bereavement, a disqualification or infirmity which prevents them living the life they would, or doing the work they would like to be at—they often speak of it as their "cross." And if "cross" meant a burden laid on us from outside, without our asking and against our will, then this way of looking at it would be the right one.

Still, though the bearing of involuntary burdens may be truly a religious and heroic act, and the patience, resignation, and refinement of character in which it often issues may be of the utmost value and beauty, it is not what is meant by the Lord Jesus when He tells his disciples that they are to "take up their cross and follow Him." You cannot "take up" what is laid upon you by another will.

Nor is the Christian "cross" the patient endurance of punishment for sin. If a course of wrong action issues in results that are painful and hard to bear, we speak sometimes as though the righteous consequence of our wrong-doing is a cross which we have to bear with such sweetness and resignation as we can muster True souls recognise the justice of such burdens, accept them humbly, and endeavour to extract from them the discipline and chastisement for which they are sent. But in no sense can this be called the cross. He was "without sin, neither was guile found in his mouth," and He never bore the lightest burden of penalty for his own wrong-doing. The cross He bore was for others' sin.

Setting these misconceptions aside, let us ask more particularly the meaning of these words. What were the positive distinguishing marks of the Cross of Christ?

1. It was a voluntary acceptance of an avoidable trial. Nothing on the surface of the Gospel narrative seems clearer than that Jesus was the victim of a popular tumult, and that he was carried along by it helplessly, resistlessly, to his doom. Nothing, on the other hand, looking at the deeper currents beneath the surface, is more certain than that the death of Christ was a voluntary offering. He did not merely die for a principle, like a martyr, who, after all, only simply anticipates an end which he knows to be inevitable some time or other; but death having "no dominion over Him," when He died it was an experience which He might, in virtue of his own lordship over life and death, have avoided. And yet He died. Of his own free-will He gave Himself up to the last great enemy of all, that He might "overcome the sharpness of death, and open the kingdom of heaven to all believers." And it was He who determined the time of his death, and the manner of his death, and not his enemies. He took up his cross, and bore it freely and lovingly, tempering none of its harshness, avoiding none of its pain, submitting Himself to the obedience of bitter death, "for the joy that was set before Him."

2. It was all for others. We suffer mainly for ourselves, and our Christian temper may be truly shown in the way we do so, as in every other test that may be put on us. But Jesus suffered for others, and He bore his cross for others. It was a vicarious cross. He bore our grief, and the iniquity of us all was laid on Him.

Now there are unique and unapproachable elements in the sacrifice of Jesus that none of us can share in. His sacrifice for sin stands alone in the world's history. It was offered once, and it was completed in one supreme act of love. It is a "finished work."

But there are other aspects of his sacrifice which are not only communicable to, but incumbent on his people. St. Paul put it all into those pregnant words, "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh," &c. (Col. i 24).

Here we have the essential mark of the "daily cross." St. Paul underwent hardship, suffering, the loss of ease, health, position, possessions—all that is dear to the natural man—becoming a wanderer, an Ishmaelite on the face of the earth, not for his own sins, and not for his own sake, but in order that through these deprivations and pains he might benefit and bless others with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He took up the cross of the missionary, bearing it voluntarily, persistently, graciously, joyfully, for the sake of his converts and the Church.

Do you see whither this leads us?

It is well to bear with fortitude, resolution, and patience the inevitable ills of life. But do not even Mussulmans, and Stoics, and Agnostics, and many a heathen philosopher, often manifest such nobility? We may superadd to this mood a Christian quality of sweetness and light that is most beautiful. But we are not yet bearing our "daily cross."

That process begins when we voluntarily undertake some burden, some form of service, some gracious enterprise, for the spiritual good of others, which enriches them through our poverty, and enables them to reach the light while we may be in gloom "for their sake." The "daily cross" means that we have taken up some burden that does not belong to us by right, and that we are bearing it voluntarily, and in the name of Christ.

In a sense, we may say that this includes every type and form of Christian service, but more especially those forms of service that are peculiarly distasteful to the feelings, which yet are of the utmost service to those for whom they are undertaken. Those who give up their ease on the Lord's Day that they may go down to an ill-smelling slum or to a distant mission hall, and there, amid all that offends their æsthetic tastes, work in the Sunday-school or the P.S.A. or the open-air service—they are bearing the "daily cross." Those who, realizing their right to a life of ease, and feeling that they have earned their rest after many years' service, still continue to labour under conditions of failing health or waning strength—they are bearing it, and bearing it well. Those who give up the comforts and interests of civilization, and busy themselves in an African forest or an Indian jungle or a Chinese village, in order that they may carry the precious Gospel to the heathen, they are bearing it. And so are many others, who are giving up what is dear to them day by day for some one else, living an impoverished life for the sake of love, that some other life may be enriched, all for the sake of Jesus, and looking for no reward except his smile—these are bearing the "daily cross," even though that cross be a hidden one, and there is no exhilarating atmosphere of romance to gild its rugged edges with golden light. The number of such cross-bearers is myriad, and of them truly it may be said, "They are the light and the salt of the world," and men, seeing their good works, glorify our Father who is in heaven.

If we thus suffer "with Christ," we shall also reign with Him.

The Bible and Modern Thought.

An important and able paper on "The Bible and Modern Thought" was read by Rev. Henry Wace, D.D., Principal of King's College, London, at the Liverpool Diocesan Conference on Tuesday last week. Some extracts from this timely deliverance on a subject the importance of which, to the Christian believer, can scarcely be exaggerated, will be of interest. Dr. Wace said it was best to come straight to the point in which modern thought was concerned with the Bible, and that point was simply, "Is the Bible True?" It was a point which might be wrapped up in many disguises and circumlocutions, but it would be found that it was to that question that the matter really came. This was the issue to which matters were really brought by the results of modern criticism.

IS THE BIBLE TRUE?

Dr. Wace pointed out that the recent results of the Higher Criticism do not immediately affect the New Testament. Forty-two years ago the predominant school of criticism in Germany asserted with the utmost confidence that the Gospels and most of the Epistles of the New Testament were neither written by the authors to whom they were attributed by tradition, nor by contemporary writers at all. That criticism was dispersed by a better criticism, both in this country and in Germany, and it is now generally acknowledged that in the New Testament we are face to face with contemporary testimony given by the apostles or their companions. It is worth while remembering that the illusion referred to was for a considerable time predominant in Germany.

As regards the Old Testament, there predominates in Germany at present a school of criticism presenting a singular resemblance to the Tübingen School of New Testament criticism. As it formerly denied the authenticity of the Gospels, so now it denies the authenticity and credibility of the Pentateuch. Dr. Wace claimed that natural suspicion was aroused when they found a criticism which had been triumphantly defeated with respect to the New Testament, now advanced in regard to the Old. It was true that criticism in regard to the Old Testament might be more difficult to meet than in the case of the New; for while the literature of the New Testament was of narrow compass, and within modern and accessible dates, the literature of the Old was of very large compass and of great antiquity. There could be no doubt that those illusions, for so he would venture to call them, have taken a strong hold of modern thought, and are widely spread. The views he referred to would destroy the plain man's belief in his Bible.

MEETING THE ASSAULT.

The time has come when the allegations of the dominant school of criticism must be faced. They are menacing our belief in the Bible with nothing less than a revolution, which cannot fail to have the gravest consequences to the stability of Christian faith in this country. How was the Tübingen criticism on the New Testament defeated? First of all, because those who opposed it refused to be overborne by dogmatic assertions of an academical speculation, however brilliant. That steadied the Church till time was afforded for the new criticism to be adequately criticised. It should be inculcated upon any one who has any influence in the matter to think once, twice, and thrice before allowing himself to be persuaded that the uniform belief of the Christian and Jewish Churches for nearly three thousand years has been proved, not merely in detail, but in its broad substantial outlines, by sane modern German professors, to be entirely wrong.

Against the attacks of the advanced school of criticism, it must be shown that the conclusions are not the unanimous result of criticism, but are discredited by critics, particularly in Germany, of the highest authority. As there is such a considerable divergence between critical authorities as to the relative dates of two important documents of the Old Testament, two considerations seem to be justified. One is that the critics are not unanimous; and the second, that the tests by which these critical decisions are made must be extremely precarious. The contradictions of the critics as to the relative dates and possible antiquity of the documents, are sufficient to prevent our relying with any confidence on the broad and startling results they deduce from their arguments.

THE NEW TESTAMENT ON THE OLD.

We need not shelter ourselves under the authority of any professor or critic, for we know the testimony of the New Testament to the Old. Knowing what the apostles believed regarding the authenticity of the Old Testament, we have authority sufficient to justify us in refusing to be brow-beaten by the critical school now loudest in our Universities and in the Press. Technical as some of these discussions may be, there is no question which involves more important practical consequences. If that belief in God—that realization of his constant providence—of which the Bishop of Liverpool has spoken as decaying to some extent, is to be revived, nothing is more essential than that we should be able to vindicate for the Bible to the people at large the statement of the Epistle to the Hebrews, that God in many times and in many ways spoke in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, and that in the Scriptures of the Old Testament we have a faithful and inspired record which the plain man may follow and understand, finding its utterances profitable for instruction and guidance, for warning and comfort.

Walk Not.

Walk not by fleshly impulse led,
As in the evil bygone days;
But as one risen from the dead,
Walk ever in the Spirit's ways.

Walk not by sense and carnal sight;
Let faith's clear vision be thy guide,
And in the darkest hour of night
The Lord will travel by thy side.

Walk not in cunning craft and guile,
By selfish persons led astray;
Yield not to evils subtle wile,
But fearless be the child of day.

Walk not by legal burdens bowed,
But Christ's redeemèd freeman be;
With all his living grace endowed,
Live the glad life of liberty.

Walk not as utter worldlings do,
With vain and foolish thoughts inspired;
Be to your God and calling true,
Your heart with holy passion fired.

Walk not as fools, but as the wise,
Redeeming life's swift fleeting hours;
Counting but dross earth's dearest prize,
Judging as nought its richest dowers.

Walk not in any doubtful path,
But in the straight and narrow way;
And thus God's smile, and not his wrath,
Shall be upon thee day by day.

Jewish Almanack for 1902.—Mr. Henry Barnett, of the Gospel Hall, 70, Sidney Street, Commercial Road, E., has again brought out his English and Jewish Almanack. Every other page is devoted to Scripture teaching on the person of Christ in his various functions, all in the language of the Old Testament. The publication will be found of great service in visiting among Jews. Mr. Barnett writes: "I have had a blessed summer's work in the Commercial Road, especially in the open-air meetings, and in circulating sound Gospel tracts. The influence of the Gospel upon the Jews and all around is most encouraging. I am always glad to help in Jewish missions and in others where opportunity opens." Mr. Barnett's address is 94, Malmesbury Road, Bow, London, E.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, November 10. 1 Thessalonians ii.

THE Apostle had been enumerating the reports of others as to the marvellous results of his ministry at Thessalonica, and now from these he turns to the experience of his readers. They knew that his entrance had been far from powerless and empty.

He bore on his person the marks of his shameful and painful experiences at Philippi (Acts xvi.); he was absolutely free from ambitious motives and the meretricious tricks of the flatterer; his one motive was to please God; from man he sought neither money nor praise; love alone inspired him in enduring his heavy sufferings, and performing his marvellous acts of self-sacrifice.

Think of his working at his craft by day and teaching his converts by night. Consider the conscious purity of his life, in that he was able to challenge the verdict of those who knew him best, that he had lived in unquestioned holiness and righteousness of life. Whatever his enemies might say about him, here was surely a character approved unto God. Was it wonderful that through such a channel the Word of God came with undiluted power to his converts? Alas, that in so many of us the holy Gospel loses so much of its virtue. Small wonder that it affects so little comparatively.

What an ideal this chapter furnishes of the Christian minister. Gentle as a nurse, or mother cherishing her own children (7); wise and strong as a father, exhorting, comforting, and charging (11); entrusted with the holy stewardship of the Gospel (13); yearning after his converts with warm-hearted affection (17); and counting them his sufficient reward at the coming of the Lord (19). Would that there were more pastors like this!

MONDAY, November 11. 1 Thessalonians iii.

This is specially the Epistle of the Second Advent. From first to last, it is radiant with the anticipation of the Lord's return.

Clearly the Apostle's condition, as he wrote this Epistle, was dark in the extreme (7). The Jews had expelled him from their synagogue, and had finally dragged him before a Roman tribunal (compare ii. 15 and Acts xviii. 6, 12); but he was greatly comforted by the tidings that Titus brought (2 Cor. vii. 4-7). He says in effect, We are in the full health and freshness of life, we do not feel the sorrows and tribulations with which our career so plentifully abounds, if only our work in our converts resists the storm without wavering. There are well-springs of joy for all of us in the desert-solitudes of life. When Satan tries us most, the angel of the Lord is nearest to our side.

In the world we must expect trial. This is the way to the crown (John xvi. 33; Acts ix. 16; xiv. 22; Rev. vii. 14). In the catacombs, where slumbers the dust of so many martyrs and confessors who sealed their testimony with their blood during the sanguinary ages of persecution, we perpetually meet with the emblems of the palm and crown, the designation of the martyr's sufferings and reward. But in one form or another it comes to us all. The sunniest and most radiant life descends presently into the valley of shadow.

He who wrought night and day now prays night and day (ii. 9; iii. 10); and his one desire is that they may love with the perfect love of Heaven, because on that condition the establishing and perfecting of the character are most certainly realised.

TUESDAY, November 12. 1 Thessalonians iv.

The first paragraph of this chapter exhorts to purity, the second to industry, the third to the expectance of the Second Advent. But these three are closely linked, because those who wait for the Lord from heaven should carefully attend to the demands of their life-work; and those who expect at any moment to be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, must be clad in the white robe of purity.

The first paragraph (1-8) is very significant. The body is compared to a vessel, and we must keep it clean for God. We must so walk as to please Him. It is his will that we should be holy, therefore we ought; and if we ought we can, and if we can we must, and if we must we will. We must not defraud another of the lawful love which, as husband or wife, he has a right to claim of his partner in the marriage tie. And for all these high claims, be thankful that God hath given his Holy Spirit to make them possible (8).

In the second paragraph (9-12) the Apostle again urges to love. Notice the recurring phrases, "abounding" and "more and more" (iii. 12; iv. 1, 10). Ask God to teach you this art (9). God wills (3), calls (7), gives (8), teaches (9), and waits to bring again his saints (14). Evidently the members of this church were drawn from the labouring class (11). Here is a Divine recognition of the dignity of labour. Honest toil soils no one's hands; but all the scented soap in creation cannot wash the stains from idle ones.

The third paragraph (13-18) is full of comfort. Our beloved ones who have departed this life in the fear of God are with Jesus, in the conscious enjoyment of his presence, and will come again with Him. They will tarry for our coming (15), and we shall lose nothing, but on the contrary, gain much, if we avoid the dark passage of the grave, and are caught up to meet the glorified Lord in the air, as Enoch was, and Elijah, and the Lord Himself. Blessed are they who go in by the open door of heaven to the marriage supper of the Lamb!

WEDNESDAY, November 13. 1 Thessalonians v.

The Lord's return will be as unannounced as the visit of the midnight robber; and while to the world it will be as painful as the most acute suffering, yet it will be as the travail which precedes birth; out of it, and through it, will be born the new heavens and the new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness.

What a beautiful conception follows. We are the children of the day, as though it were our parent. God our Father is Light, and we, as his children, share his nature. The deeds of darkness, therefore, are not for us, nor anything that cannot bear the impact of sunbeams. Our attire must be worthy of our origin. We must wear the white lustrous robes of an unsullied purity, and over them the breast-plate of faith and love. That is, we must meet every stinging sentence, every sarcastic taunt, every cruel attack, with an unfailing trust in God and unexhaustible love to man. And our destiny, whether we wake in life or sleep in death, is to live together with Christ.

The remainder of the chapter is filled with brief sentences of exhortation, like telegrams from our heavenly Captain; and as we endeavour to obey them, we become conscious of a new and divine energy entering and energizing our nature—it is the God of peace who is sanctifying us wholly, working from the spirit, which is the most holy place of our being, throughout the entire organism. Thus our whole nature is preserved blameless. We are not absolutely faultless, but blameless, because kept from sinning—up to the measure of our light. But this keeping is only in so far as we abide in Him who knew no sin.

THURSDAY, November 14. 2 Thessalonians i.

This Second Epistle was probably written shortly after the First. The Apostle appears to have heard that people who claimed to be acting on his authority, were promulgating the notion of the immediate coming of the Lord; and this so excited and unsettled the disciples that they were neglecting their daily employments, and living an idle and listless life. Writing from Corinth, where he was staying, the Apostle endeavoured to calm and still this spirit of restlessness.

Notice the remarkable couplets of this chapter—Grace and peace (2); faith and love (3); faith and patience (4); tribulation to the troublers, rest to the troubled (6, 7); know not, obey not (8); the presence of the Lord, the glory of his power (9); glorified and admired (10); the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith (11). Like mirrors, opposing each other, these words flash backwards and forwards their depths of sacred significance.

The final prayer has always been inexpressibly dear and precious to God's people. If they shall ever be worthy of his high calling, it is He who must make them so. Thus his being glorified and admired in his saints is not a far-off event, but actually present, and the name of Jesus may be magnified in us here and now, as it will be finally and perfectly hereafter (compare verses 10 and 12).

FRIDAY, November 15. 2 Thessalonians ii.

The Apostle now sets himself to correct certain erroneous impressions, which had unsettled the Thessalonian Church. Notice how reverently he speaks of the Saviour. Again and again he alludes to Him, in this chapter, and throughout the Epistle, as the Lord Jesus Christ. He is surely coming, and, as surely, his saints will be gathered to Him, as the drops of moisture are gathered from ponds and oceans, to cluster in clouds of radiant beauty around the sun.

But certain events were to transpire previously. There would be first, the great apostasy, and then the revelation of the man of sin. To whom this refers—to the Pope, or to the Roman Cæsar—it is impossible to be sure. No doubt before the unveiling of our Lord there will be an unveiling of his great antagonist, who opposed Him in his life from the moment of his temptation, who works now through all the evil agencies by whom the progress of the Gospel is resisted, and who some day will throw off his disguise, and in the arena, surrounded by men, angels, and demons, measure himself in one last desperate struggle with the Son of God. All things are leading up to that last mighty conflict, which will not only involve the overthrow of the power of darkness, but seal the doom of those who wilfully refuse the truth.

The closing verses of the chapter are full of blessed comfort (13-17). Christians are the beloved of God, their salvation dates from the elections of eternity which are being wrought out by the Holy Spirit, and by the Truth, and shall be consummated in the glory of the Saviour. Meanwhile, drink of the cup of everlasting comfort, and cherish a good hope.

SATURDAY, November 16. 2 Thessalonians iii.

The Apostle was now preaching at Corinth, and he asks that the Gospel may run. Oh, for a Divine impatience that we may be discontented with anything short of this (see 1, R.V.).

From unreasonable and wicked men who oppose the Gospel, turn to the Lord who is faithful to his promises and to his saints, establishing them as they strike their roots deeper into his promises, and keeping them from evil by his environing and enveloping presence. He will do more. He will make our hearts a thoroughfare, through which the love of God, and the infinite patience of Christ shall pass to a needy and a waiting world. Observe the contrast in verse 5 between the patient waiting of the A.V. and the patience of R.V. Yes, my friend, we need the patience of Christ, that patience of which the beloved Apostle speaks when he connects it with the kingdom (Rev. i. 9). There is a royalty in waiting. There is a kingdom to be obtained through suffering rightly borne. The Lord Jesus has dignified the passive virtues.

From these high expectations of the Advent the Apostle turns to the prosaic commonplace of daily toil, reminding them again of his own work, and of the nights and days to which he made reference in 1 Thess. ii. 9, iii. 10, spent in prayer and labour on their behalf. Opposed to the lazy and meddlesome life of gossips and busybodies, he puts the plodding and quiet work of the Christian, who desires to be found at the advent fulfilling the duties to which the Lord has called him.

Let us carry through our life this parting salutation, and dare to believe that the God of peace is giving us peace by all means. Every wind is a south wind to the believer, breathing from the heart of God. Every messenger brings God's salutation of peace. The wallet may be blackened by use, but the white silver greeting is within.

Dr. Baedeker in the Prisons.—III.

THE following incident will show how well the prison visitation was appreciated from its early days by Christians highly placed in Russia.

On his first visit to Siberia in 1891, Dr. Baedeker had been visiting the prisons at Twer, north of Moscow, and returned by a night train, which was very crowded. After making his way with some difficulty through the throng on the platform, he at length found a seat; but discovered he had lost his pocket-book containing his passport, his permit to visit the prisons, and 1,000 roubles. He telegraphed to influential friends at St. Petersburg that he had lost his permit, asking if he could obtain another. A reply came that it should be sent on the morrow. It occurred, however, to his friends that he may have also lost his money, though he had not mentioned it; and a second telegram followed, "How much money have you lost?" and in answer to his reply he received another message, "A thousand roubles shall be sent," and in due time it came.

Having lost two pocket-books in railway stations in America, one of which contained 300dols, I would advise young travellers to avoid carrying their pocket-book in their hand, especially in a crowd, and to carry the bulk of their money in a bag beneath their under vest, or in a secret and well-protected pocket. In this case, at least, it is possible and profitable to benefit by other men's experience. "By others' faults wise men correct their own."

I have already mentioned a room full of chained men we saw in a valley of the Caucasus. In other parts of the same prison we found a number of noblemen imprisoned for debt; a dozen boys, among whom was a fair-haired bright-looking lad, the leader of the gang; about the same number of women, very few of whom could read, but some wept at the words of kindness spoken to them. We could not help thinking that some of them were more sinned against than sinning. Luther said, "It is a hard world for girls." Who will help them?

Have you had a kindness shown?
Pass it on.
'Twas not given for thee alone;
Pass it on.
Let it travel down the years,
Let it dry another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears,
Pass it on.

The fair-haired boy was thought to be incorrigible; he had been there more than once before. Probably he was waiting, though unconsciously, for the word or deed of kindness that is to reach his heart and make him a new creature. How many there are like him!

Oh, the good we all may do
While the days are going by!

Next to him was a young fellow of about eighteen. He had killed a man, but he was not a murderer. Three men had come to a house where he and a young girl, a relative, were living, and endeavoured to carry her off. The lad seized a weapon worn by one of them, and slew him with it. Then the others left. It was satisfactory to learn that the imprisonment was to be a brief one.

The governor of the prison was evidently interested in the work. Dr. Baedeker was weary after having spoken to several groups, some of them in the hot sun, and the wife of the governor kindly gave us some refreshments before we left.

At another prison in the Caucasus we found the governor a courteous and cultured gentleman, who not only received us pleasantly, but showed us much attention, and gave us some articles made by the prisoners. He was of good birth—a Mohammedan. He told us that two years ago he had resolved to do his duty to the prisoners, and had done all he could for their welfare, and now every one of them would do anything for him. We quite believed this, for when he accompanied us to the hospital we observed little acts of kindness and consideration which could not but win their hearts to him. On one occasion there was a fire near the prison, and he asked the inmates if they would help to extinguish it. Sixty volunteered, and after having accomplished their task they every one returned.

In one of the groups here we noticed some young men, evidently of good breeding, fine, noble-looking young fellows. They were Grusians, of princely birth. I asked why they were there, and received for reply that the Caucasians are a hot-blooded race, quick in resentment, and that their wine is exciting. In unguarded moments they are easily led to commit themselves to violent action, and thus get committed to prison.

In another place we found three brethren who had been sent to prison for the Word of God and for the testimony of Jesus. One of them had been so filled with the Spirit of the truth that he had been the means of turning his whole village to the Gospel, and they had given up bowing before pictures. This could not be allowed, and the brother was sent for detention down south. He had served four months, and he had to remain four more. He was evidently not considered dangerous, for he had free range of the prison and even beyond. Still, he is a prisoner, but "the Word of God is not bound."

Sometimes a visit was permitted to a "political" prisoner in his cell. One would be alone, or there would be two together. Generally they were the least responsive, especially at first. But Dr. Baedeker's power lies in his loving spirit, and in spite of their views, which thinly conceal their ignorance of the Gospel, they generally accepted the Testament with thankfulness, not seldom with tears in their eyes, for Kindness can woo the lion from his den;

A moral lesson to the sons of men.

One party of "political" offenders was not allowed to be seen. They were men "on strike," and this summary method of dealing with them is perhaps for the time effective. This may throw a sidelight on the attitude towards Chinese strikers, recorded in The Times of a few weeks ago:—

It appears that there has been a strike for higher wages, under the leadership of a certain Wu-Wang-tze, among the workers in the Niu-chwang oil factories; and the persons concerned are informed that under the laws, not of China, but of Imperial Russia, the leaders in any such movement are sentenced to the same punishments as persons guilty of rebellion, and that even their followers are punished "very severely." The Imperial Russian controller of the port has therefore given orders not only for the arrest and punishment of Wu-Wang-tze, but also that all the workers are to resume their occupation by "to-morrow morning at the latest." Anyone who disobeys this command will be "instantly arrested and most severely punished;" after which he will be banished from the port, and will not be allowed to linger within its precincts for a single moment.

It is unquestionable that this official has far exceeded his powers. It is to be hoped that his action will be repudiated by his Government. The article in The Times, and another two days later (September 23), are instructive reading for all those whose purview is wider than our own little island.

In meeting with so many men and women who are confessed sinners, with a sprinkling of self-righteous Pharisees, one feels the necessity and the efficiency of the Gospel—the Gospel alone, but also the Gospel in its fulness—"Jesus and the Resurrection"; the birth and life and death of Jesus, but emphatically his Resurrection. "Jesus the Christ—and Him crucified;" Jesus the Anointed One, risen, glorified; but—pointing with emphasis to his cross in the foreground—Him crucified. The preachers who give themselves to study and meditation upon these two formulas, will say with Jeremiah, "Thy words were found and I did eat them; and thy words were the joy and the rejoicing of my heart. . . . I said, I will speak no more in this Name; but thy word was a burning fire in my bones, and I could not forbear." They will receive the power of the Spirit coming upon them from the ascended Christ; they will be his witnesses; and out of them will "flow rivers of living water."

A gospel without the Resurrection is not the Gospel of God. It leaves the sinner in his sins. The faith which justifies is faith in God "who raised Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered up for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." Thus, and not otherwise, WE HAVE peace with God, principles of criticism notwithstanding; for unless we have peace with the Judge of all the earth, by his own act and decree, it is of no use to say with the R.V. "let us have peace with God."

In a prison, with one opportunity, in a few minutes to be gone for ever, the uselessness as well as the impossibility of discussing his religion with a Mohammedan, or Jewish or Mariolatrous sinner, is evidently and vividly felt. Not external, but internal evidence is the essential need. Conviction by the Holy Spirit, of sin against God, and the witness of the same Spirit with our spirit that we have been born of God, and are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus—that is God's way from death unto life, and from the power of Satan unto God.

A look at the eager faces of the listeners as the love of an unknown God is declared to them by one who has drunk in that spirit of love, makes one feel, on the other hand, the waste of power in preaching the Gospel ad nauseam to congregations who have sat under it for years, and who only increase their own condemnation through being hardened by it. There are waters in Great Britain which have been fished until there is not a fish left that has not rejected the bait; while villages and hamlets at home, to say nothing of the opportunities abroad, are uttering their dumb appeal, "Come over and help us." Oh that our young Christian manhood and womanhood could see, like Paul, that vision of the night, enforcing the command and promise of the Lord Jesus when about to return to the Father, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature . . . and lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the age."

Budapest, October 17. We have just said good-bye to our beloved friend, Dr. Baedeker, with whom we have spent two most pleasurable and profitable months. I cannot doubt that words spoken in the ears of three or four thousand criminals interned in eight prisons, and the Word of God, in a dozen different languages, given to many hundreds who could read, will not return void, but will accomplish that which He pleased, and prosper in the thing whereto He sent it.

We have travelled by day and night, mostly the latter, have had many personal interviews, have held many meetings. There has been little cessation, and now that we are for the moment resting we feel the reaction, and are weary. We hope our valued and indefatigable friend, on whom chiefly the burden fell, is holding up. He needs, as he deserves, the loving and constant prayers of all God's witnesses.

"From the Karawanken Mountains."

IN a recent letter, Pastor Ernst Schwarz mentions the urgency of his work in connection with the college at Klagenfurt and the Protestant Hospital at Waiern. He says: "Our institutions are in great need. We have building debts, and responsibilities for feeding and tending the sick. Especially should more be done to give the Gospel to our nation. But we are poor, and, as it were, forsaken in the diaspora. If the Lord were not our trust, and his word sure, I would have to despair a thousand times. But He lives! He cannot become anything else than what He is—our faithful heavenly Father.

"If you would help to save Austria, then create enthusiasm among English Christians that an Evangelical university should be founded with all speed, in which professors might in the most broad-minded manner offer learning on the foundation of the Christian view of the world. So shall the Gospel advance in our land. With the human spirit we remain human; with the Divine Spirit we become divine!"

Progress in Arabia.

THE latest report of the Arabian Mission records continued progress in the evangelization of that country. The year 1900 was one of strengthening the lines of effort, and at all the stations the workers feel themselves more firmly established than ever before. There are now seven missionaries and four associates. The most promising feature of the year, perhaps, was the Bible work, both as to the sales of the Scriptures and the extent of the tours made. The sales have increased over fifty per cent., while missionaries and colporteurs covered 6,853 miles in touring. The sales of religious and educational books also show a large increase. Medical work has taken a decided step forward, the number of patients treated last year being 8,843, against 4,513 in 1899; while the Mission, as a whole, has developed, and at each centre the work has been characterized by a spirit of earnest aggressiveness. Concerning the Bahrein station the report says:—

Our preaching in the dispensary this year was unhindered and not unblessed. Many, indeed, have heard the gist of Christ's message to the world again and again. Some have heard it only once. But all who came to be cured of disease know at least that we are servants of Him who is the Physician of souls.

MOSLEM WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

The school enterprise was originated by Mrs. Zwemer, and the kindergarten part of it is still under her direction. Considerable time was spent, especially during the cooler weather, in receiving Moslem women at the house or visiting them in their homes. Nearly 200 garments were given away to the poor.

Until October 1 the medical work at Bahrein was carried on without a qualified physician. In October Dr. and Mrs. Thoms came to Bahrein. The number of patients increased, and none were turned away. Several successful major operations on poor pearl-divers bitten by sharks advertised the arrival of Dr. Thoms, and there are patients who now come long distances to be treated. The dispensary is too small for the growing work, and we have no place for in-patients save our courtyard. Of the 5,314 patients 5,100 were Moslems; the others were Hindus and Christians.

NO LONGER LONELY.

Missionary life at Muscat should no longer be associated with the idea of isolation and loneliness. In the evangelistic work at Muscat there is much to be thankful for. Our total Scripture sales were 1,433, over 156 per cent. increase on those of any previous year. The missionaries have made several tours. Wherever the Arabs were not fighting, the welcome was most cordial, and their experience simply reinforces the constant assertion of open doors in Oman. The country north-west of Muscat is now quite well known to the Mission, but in other directions there are numerous towns and tribes from which we have had a cordial invitation, and the sooner we can accept these the better.

BUSRAH STATION.

The bazaars and environs of Busrah have been thoroughly worked. The value of the Bible shop must not be judged solely by the number of sales, but by the number of visits made to it, and the amount and character of the conversation on spiritual things. At the out-stations the work has been continued throughout the year with encouraging results. Tours from Busrah have also been made, and both Jew and Moslem have heard the Gospel preached in its simplicity and power. An experiment was made of instituting women's work, which has proved most successful. From the first a woman finds no difficulty in entering the homes and reading from her Bible to the people.

A Sure Method.—The Bishop of Stepney tells that in a conversation with a commercial traveller in the train, he asked him how he fared with the temptations so heavy and constant in that life, and the answer was, "Well, sir, I have only found one way, and that is, 'walking with God.'"

Mission Work in Madeira.

READERS of The Christian will doubtless remember the account of Bishop Hartzell's work which appeared in the issue of May 9.

Those interested in the progress of the Gospel in Madeira have cause for thankfulness and praise to God in the encouragement vouchsafed to them during the past months.

The work at Mount Faith Mission makes steady progress. News comes from time to time of fresh converts, and of the thirst for knowledge of the Scriptures. The night schools are well attended by boys and men, all anxious to be able to read, especially the Word of God. The day school is well attended by the children, the Bible is the text-book, and the discussions upon religious subjects are often highly interesting.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

A girl came one day and begged Mrs. Smart to protect her from the wrath of her father, who threatened to thrash her because she had come to the Protestant Mission. Mrs. Smart sent her to an upper room, while she herself faced the furious father and reasoned with him. After a time he calmed down, and Mrs. Smart pointed out to him that the girl was twenty-two years of age, and able to make a choice for herself, and that she wished to be allowed to become a servant at the Mission. Finally this was arranged, and he left. A neighbour afterwards told Mrs. Smart that the poor girl had been beaten by her mother, and her screams could be heard for some distance. She has proved herself an earnest and consistent Christian. In a short time she learned to read the sixteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel, and when her mother came to see her, she read out of the precious Word, and preached Christ to her.

At this time, when the strong anti-Jesuit movement in Spain and Portugal is making itself felt in Madeira, it behoves those who enjoy the priceless privilege of religious liberty to seize the opportunity, and to stretch out a helping hand to these poor people, who are emerging from the darkness and superstition of Rome.

A special effort is now being made to raise £450—£250 for the completion of the Mount Faith Mission, and £200 for the Sailors' Rest and Reading-room. The honorary secretary and treasurer is Mrs. Walter J. Terry, 2, Talbot Road, Highgate, N.

Zambezi Industrial Mission.

THE latest reports received by the Zambezi Industrial Mission—secretary, Mr. R. Caldwell, 6, Colonial Avenue, Minories, E.—show that in the Michiru District (which has, from the first, been a very difficult one to influence spiritually) the predominant tribe (the Yao) having hitherto manifested, as a whole, the greatest indifference to such teaching, there is now promise of a better state of affairs.

At Mitsidi the attendance on Sunday averages 200, eighteen of whom are communicants, and twelve are candidates for baptism. At the Christians' Bible class the average is about fifty, and at the weekly prayer meeting still larger. Five villages are being evangelized from this centre, and from two out-station schools twenty-nine more villages are visited every Sabbath day. From Ailsa Craig, Maliya, and Chilingani equally good work is reported, though on a smaller scale.

The reports from Angoniland also contain cheering accounts of progress. At Ntonda there are ninety-eight members and forty-eight candidates for baptism. The two European workers are assisted by twelve native preachers, and fourteen villages are regularly visited. The members at Chioli number 163, and the candidates for baptism 240, with three European workers and twelve native preachers; while thirty villages are reached. The two Europeans at Domboli have thirty helpers, thirty-two villages are reached, seventy-six members are on the roll, and 156 are seeking baptism.

McAll Mission in France.

FACTS and figures set forth in the annual report of the McAll Mission in France convey a stimulating and comprehensive idea of the progress which has been made during the past year. Commencing with the opening of the Exhibition Hall, and closing with the inauguration of a new branch at Amiens, the year must be regarded as quite unique. The annual report says:—

"Never since the death of Dr. McAll has so much new ground been opened up, and so many hopeful beginnings made." After describing the special endeavours made to preach the Gospel to visitors to Paris Exhibition, the report continues:—"Meanwhile the regular work of our permanent halls has been going quietly forward. The impatient decry this steady industry, and would like the ready hearer, who seems to change so little from month to month, to give up his place to some scoffer who should, after a night or two, break down confessing his sin, and then disappear, to be succeeded by another like-minded, and so on. Undoubtedly the excitement of such an experience is attractive, and it is inspiriting to see the preaching of the Gospel at once take visible effect. But with such a population as we have to deal with, conversions of this violent type are the most unstable of all. Of course our permanent halls have acquired permanent audiences, with just about the same admixture of outsiders as may be seen in any church. They all come in quest of spiritual nourishment, they are all desirous to 'see Jesus.' Some 2,500 different individuals enter each week the various Salles Populaires in Paris and the suburbs."

THE SOCIAL WELL-BEING OF THE PEOPLE.

The McAll Mission is not indifferent to the social life and well-being of the people. Dr. McAll from the first encouraged to the utmost social gatherings in the salles, lectures or informal talks on moral topics, musical evenings, &c., and we have always welcomed the efforts of the young people to attract their parents and friends by giving once or twice a season a soirée littéraire et musicale.

But in the varied and numerous means which may be adopted to gain the ear of the unconcerned, that which is fundamental and of primary importance is ever kept in view.

Many interesting particulars of the work are given in the annual report. "One afternoon," says a worker, "while sitting in the Salle Rapp, a young girl came in and walked round the hall reading the texts on the walls. We had a long and interesting conversation. She was a teacher in a communal school, but was so disheartened by the lack of religious instruction in the Paris schools, so different from what she had known in the country, that she had thrown up her position, and was seeking to return to her village. She was intensely in earnest in seeking the truth, but this was the first time that she had ever entered a mission hall, or had conversed with a Protestant. The verse she kept on repeating was one in which the word 'peace' struck her greatly, and she asked where we had found such a verse. I prayed with her and gave her tracts and Gospels, and begged her to return, but I never saw her again. She had probably gone back to the country. Amongst other things she said was, 'Oh that Jesus would come back again, for then the world would be a paradise, but now it is like hell.'"

Mr. Reeve, of Poona.

MR. C. F. REEVE, of Poona, India, has been spending five weeks with us in the North, and has spoken with very great acceptance at a great many meetings in various churches and mission halls. He is in this country in the interests of the "Poona and Indian Village Mission," of which he is founder and director.

Few men can speak with more intelligence and instructiveness of the missionary question, and he is also a most helpful Bible teacher. During November Mr. Reeve's address will be 8, Alleyn Terrace, Park Road, West Dulwich, S.E.

Saving Indian Widows.

PANDITA RAMABAI'S WORK.

IN a brief visit paid to this country, Miss Abrams—one of the helpers in the work—has been able to give to the Christian public an object-lesson in the true nature of the efforts carried on by Pandita Ramabai among the widows and other suffering women of India. Miss Abrams went out from the United States in 1887 as a missionary, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church. From the first her sympathies were drawn out on behalf of the younger portion of the population, and, four years ago, she was led to cast in her lot with the workers at Mukti. Since then she has been a much-valued coadjutor, taking a goodly share, among other branches, in the teaching of the Bible school, and in the conducting of services in the large church between the fortnightly visits of the pastor. The picture she draws of this "church of widows" is a tender and touching one, opening up a vista of great possibilities in the furtherance of the kingdom of God.

The marvellous growth of the work at Mukti may be understood from the fact that, whereas before the present famine and its predecessors—that is to say, about five years ago—the institution sheltered some fifty of the widows for whose benefit it was originally planned, it has grown so rapidly that the last exact figures received showed the inmates to be 1,910. This large household is still advancing by leaps and bounds, an incidental reference in a letter received a few days ago showing that twenty-eight had been welcomed on the day of writing. While under the pressure of famine conditions some exceptions have been made to the original terms of admission, yet the girls and women who do not come under such terms form but a small proportion of the total. Women who have been deserted are, to all practical purposes, in the same position as those whose husbands are dead, it being contrary to Hindoo law for such persons ever to live together again.

AN ENCOURAGING FACT.

One cause for profound gratitude has been the fact that when claims for attention were increasing so rapidly, the earlier inmates were found ready and qualified to perform many of the routine duties. At the present time fifty women are under training to go out as teachers, forty-five for the work of nursing, and a large number to be Biblewomen. Many requests have been received for the services of such helpers from missions all over the country, though it is impossible, in the meantime, to accede to these on account of the large demands at home. This solves part of the problem of the future. Another section of the women will, of course, go forth as the wives of Christian natives; while, for a yet larger company, the remarkable development which has taken place in the industrial departments opens up the prospect of a respectable livelihood.

That there is such outlet as the last-named is entirely due to Christian influence, and its importance at the present time can hardly be exaggerated. Such a life is only possible for those who make a Christian profession, and whose lives and conduct will bear close and continuous scrutiny. They are continually put to the severest of tests, which they are only enabled to bear because of that spirit of self-reliance which it is the aim of Ramabai to inculcate at all times. In cases where women have failed to make themselves efficient at one industry after another, measures have been taken, consistent with proper safeguards, to throw them practically on their own resources, that they may acquire some trade at which they may afterwards earn their own living.

Buildings have been added one after another as the need grew. Since Miss Abrams left Mukti, a new corridor accommodates 300 persons. A church, used also for school purposes, has been built to hold 2,500. The work is a great one, and it is of the utmost importance for the Christian Church to recognise that the famine has suddenly thrown thousands of young people on the care of the missionaries of India, and that these must be provided for until they are launched on life on their own account. None of them can ever go back to their own people.

The liberality called forth by the famine showed signs of falling off, as soon as it was known that rain had fallen, without allowing time for a crop to be grown. Yet the need is at present as great as ever, and when the new harvest is reaped, even that will only relieve the missionaries of the maintenance of adults. For years to come, every mission and society at work will have a growing demand on acconnt of the orphans who must be maintained. At Mukti 1,300 conversions have taken place during the last fifteen months, and in many other quarters the bread of life is being received with gladness as well as the food for the body.

A CHILD-WIDOW'S EXPERIENCES.

Accompanying Miss Abrams are two youthful widows, as shown in the illustration which we have pleasure in giving. One of them was married at the age of five, and became a widow at ten. On account of her tender age, her parents took her home. Unhappily they did not live long. She then went to live with her brother, who, although her father had made ample provision for her maintenance, subjected her to all the hardships of widowhood. She was not allowed to accompany her relatives to the temple on holiday occasions; but on one such occasion her brother told her to bring the children and care for them outside, while the others enjoyed themselves within.

That evening a missionary went to preach outside the temple, but at first she thought him crazy. He preached till three o'clock in the morning, and when leaving said to this hearer, "Child, why are you waiting here?" She said, "I was listening to you, but I do not understand what you say. Explain it to me." The missionary told her he was very tired, and invited her to come and see him the next morning. From that day she prayed and read a New Testament given to her, which greatly comforted her. As soon as he saw the book her brother burned it, but the missionary gave her another.

After much suffering from over-work and insufficient food, the poor child decided to put an end to her life by drowning in the sea, but failed to accomplish her purpose. She then went off to the mountains, and lay down in a tiger's cave; but "that day no tiger came, no snake came." It was reported to the authorities that she had run away, but the policeman who was sent after her was a Christian, who had two widowed sisters; and he treated her kindly so long as she remained under his charge.

One day the brother discovered that she had been to visit the missionary, and beat her with great fury. She was enabled to say: "You may beat me all you like; I love Jesus, and I am not afraid to die for Him." Her screams, however, attracted the notice of a policeman, who put a stop to the beating. The man was arrested, but his sister had been taught the spirit of forgiveness, and begged for his release. After this, she was not allowed inside the house, as her brother considered the visit to the missionary had defiled her. She bought a little rice, of which she made gruel, and thus passed fifteen days.

Hearing of the Pandita Ramabai's home for widows, the outcast at once recognised how God had heard her oft-uttered daily prayer, "Dear Jesus, I love Thee; take me somewhere." With a little box of money, saved carefully in her happy childhood, she started on the long journey, two days by buggy, four by sea, and one by rail. The difficulties by the way were almost insurmountable, but she persevered, and at length found herself surrounded by friends.

All was now changed. Love, rest, food, and opportunities for study were pressed upon her. The former victim of heathenism is hardly recognizable in the happy school-girl, who can refer to the days of darkness, "when I was a widow." Now we see an earnest, humble Christian, who is preparing to be a helper to sisters still in sorrow, darkness, and bondage. Sent to America to be educated, the climate proved too severe; and she now returns to her native land, in the hope of continuing a course of study at the Sharada Sadan, Poona.

This work* is one of simple dependence upon God. Money has been spent as it came in, but nothing has ever been purchased which could not be at once paid for. Daily and hourly God has honoured the faith of his servants. With nearly 2,000 to provide for, the need has been met just as when there were only fifty. The American Ramabai Association holds itself responsible for the maintenance of seventy-five out of 160 of the women who live in a branch institution at Poona. All the others there and at Mukti are dependent from day to day on the free-will offerings of the Lord's people. The workers have been much encouraged by the fact that Ramabai's daughter is now taking charge of the Poona Home and of correspondence. Miss Abrams sailed on October 29 on her way to her sphere of labour, and many prayers will follow, that Pandita Ramabai and her colleagues may be sustained in the important work which has been committed to them.

Prayer for India.

THE North India Missionary Conference, assembled in Mussoorie, September 18 to 26, heard with deep feelings of thankfulness and praise to God, of the manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit in Japan, and of the great ingathering of souls there into the fold of Christ, in answer to the definite prayers of God's people in that land.

Believing that this comes to the Church of God throughout the world, as a call to prayer for the world, that the wave of revival may roll over all peoples and be a fulfilment of God's promise to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, the Conference issued a circular calling upon God's people everywhere to "unite in earnest supplication that this outpouring of the Holy Spirit may be vouchsafed to India, where, after one hundred years of faithful and widespread preparation and seed-sowing, there seem to be many indications that the time of harvesting is at hand."

Gone Home.

Rev. Wm. Crosbie.

MANY will hear with regret of the death, after a few days' illness, of Rev. William Crosbie, M.A., LL.B., of Nottingham. During recent years, since relinquishing his pastoral charge, Mr. Crosbie has been assisting the churches generally, and has been writing singularly helpful words to readers of The Christian and correspondents in various parts of the world. Especially has he been moved to emphasize the importance of persevering prayer and sustained communion with God. "Now the labourer's task is o'er." Death came through an attack of pneumonia.

Mr. Crosbie was born at Violet Bank, between Annan and Ecclefechan, Scotland, but when young was taken to live at Friar's Carse, about six miles above Dumfries. It was a locality, not only fitted by its picturesqueness to make an impression on a boy's emotional nature, but which was replete with traditions of the Covenanters. His father held the position of gardener, or manager, to Dr. Crichton, the munificent founder of the Royal Asylum at Dumfries, and became an office-bearer in the Free Church at Dunscore, about two or three miles from his residence. In the parish of Dunscore he was placed under a schoolmaster of note in those days, and strong local influences quickened his enthusiasm. Thomas Carlyle and his gifted wife resided at Craigenputtock, in this Dunscore parish, and had in his boyhood sat on the same forms in school at Ecclefechan with those who became William Crosbie's parents.

From Scotland he went as a youth to Nottingham to be with an uncle. Here the great avowal took place of his faith and loyalty Christwards. In order publicly to confess the Saviour, he joined the Congregational church at Castle Gate. The pastor was Rev. S. McAll, who afterwards became Principal of Hackney College. Admiring young Crosbie's devotion in the Sunday school and other Christian activities, Mr. McAll urged his entrance to Rotherham College, and here began his more systematic preparation for pastoral work. In college he did three things which are too often thought incompatible: he studied hard at divinity, took high literary degrees at the London University, and maintained his religious spirituality. Those who knew him at that period were aware that he was accustomed not only scrupulously to observe his ordinary seasons of devotion, but to set apart special times for confession, for personal meditation on the Scriptures, and for prolonged prayer.

Seven years of pastoral devotion at Romsey marked his entrance to the Congregational ministry. The full preaching of the Gospel of Christ was blessed to the eternal salvation of many. In 1864 a call, which could not be misunderstood, took him to Derby, where he was permitted to accomplish good work for the Saviour. A Midland Counties Christian Convention for the promotion of spiritual life and activity was organized at his suggestion, and successfully carried out.

Sixteen years of heavy labour began to tell seriously on the health of Mr. Crosbie. An invitation had come to him to a tutorship in Hackney College, but his preferences were for pastoral influence, and, out of other overtures, he responded in his over-worked state to one from Brighton in 1880. In the pulpit of the imposing structure called Clifton Road Congregational Church he attracted many who loved downright Evangelical and spiritual preaching. Former public and denominational activities, however, still occupied him.

In 1890 Mr. Crosbie returned to Nottingham, where he not only engaged in strenuous evangelistic endeavour, but exercised a powerful influence over ministerial students in training at the Divinity Hall there. Three or four years ago he retired, but he never laid aside the spirit of the pastor, nor the care of souls. He will long be remembered with affection, and many will not cease to praise God for his life and ministry.

Mr. J. K. Starley.

ALREADY and earnest co-operator in religious and philanthropic causes, as well as a generous benefactor thereof, Mr. J. K. Starley, of Coventry, who passed away on Tuesday, October 29, was a noble type of a Christian business man. Amid the pressure entailed by a highly active life, and while bearing upon his shoulders the responsibilities of a vast industrial undertaking, Mr. Starley's first thought was the extension of the Kingdom of God.

YOUTHFUL PROMISE.

From his early youth Mr. Starley evinced the mechanical genius which has made his name famous. He was but eighteen years of age when a set of drawings which he executed secured him a position in the works of his uncle, a prominent sewing machine and cycle manufacturer. From that time forward his advance was rapid; and when, after commencing business for himself, he developed the idea of the "Safety" bicycle, he found himself borne on a full tide of financial prosperity. The wide demand for cycles led to the formation of many limited companies for their manufacture, and some of these experienced vicissitudes which have resulted only in large loss to the shareholders. Mr. Starley consistently refused to become a party to any undertaking which his conscience would not approve. A good estimate of the man's principle and character may be gleaned from the fact that, when disposing of his business to a company, he refused a sum higher by £25,000 than the amount he accepted, his reason for choosing the smaller amount being that he was determined his name should not be associated with any company that was over-capitalized, and, had he accepted the larger sum, he could not have controlled the amount of the company's capital.

IN CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

As we have intimated, however, Mr. Starley found his true joy in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. He was an earnest student of the Bible, and those who did not quite approve of his issue of an edition, in which the New Testament was placed before the Old, will gladly admit the enthusiasm for the Scriptures which gave rise to the idea. To Mr. Starley the foundation and maintenance of the Y.M.C.A. in Coventry were mainly due, and he gave generously and worked arduously for its success. In many ways he revealed his interest in the young men, conducting a Bible class on Sunday afternoons, attending meetings during the week, and being ever ready to give advice to those seeking it.

Among other Christian activities, Mr. Starley filled with wisdom and tact the presidencies respectively of the West Midland Free Church Federation, the Coventry Free Church Council, and the Sunday School Union of the district. His addresses at the various gatherings over which he presided revealed the practical interest he took in religious matters. He was a regular attendant at the West Orchard Congregational Church, which in his death loses a generous and sympathetic supporter.

"A GENERAL BENEFACTOR."

In Coventry Mr. Starley was looked up to as a general benefactor, and his generosity to and interest in the welfare of the workers of the city increased his popularity. He was one of the best-known citizens of the day, a man of reading and culture, a close reasoner, a fluent speaker, and altogether a man who recognised the duty of attempting to leave the world better than he found it, and of assisting others to overcome some of the difficulties with which the path of life is beset.

The end of Mr. Starley's busy life came as the result of an operation for an internal malady. The condition of the patient, who was but in his forty-sixth year, gave no cause for apprehension. On the contrary, the physicians anticipated an early recovery; but the heart suddenly became affected, and the sufferer speedily but quietly passed away. His memory will long be cherished. He was a man sincere in motive, conspicuous for business rectitude, and whole-hearted in Christian work. He set a noble example to men who had amassed wealth to use it as a trust from God, for the furtherance of great causes, and the benefit of humanity.

Rev. James Wall.

THE announcement of the death of Rev. James Wall, of Rome, will bring a sense of personal loss to a wide circle of friends who knew and honoured him for his work's sake.

It is now more than thirty-seven years since Mr. Wall resigned the pastorate of the Baptist church at Calne, Wilts, in order to devote himself to preaching the Gospel among continental Roman Catholics. After much difficulty, and in spite of priestly opposition, he commenced evangelistic services in a large hall at Bologna, Opportunities arose also for proclaiming the Gospel in the regions around, and so manifestly did the Divine power and blessing accompany the Word preached, that three churches sprang into existence. When, in 1870, King Victor Emmanuel I. occupied Rome, and the Pope's temporal sovereignty was confined merely to the Vatican, Mr. Wall at once proceeded to the Italian capital, and commenced to evangelize among the people. About this time Mr. Wall was included among the agents of the Baptist Missionary Society.

The work continued to make remarkable progress. In January, 1871, a church was formed, eight persons professing their repentance and faith by baptism. In March of the following year this number had grown to fifty, and in 1880 Mr. Wall could declare that he had seen thousands of persons coming to listen to the preaching of the Word of God, of whom many had believed. The present premises of the Mission were secured in 1874. The building provides accommodation for preaching and school teaching, and includes convenient premises for the maintenance of so important a mission; and from this centre evangelistic work is maintained at a number of subsidiary stations. Mr. Wall's intense love for the Bible was shown, among other ways, by the extensive operations which he maintained for the distribution of copies of the Scriptures. Vast numbers of Testaments and Gospel tracts have been given away with encouraging results, while to large Bible texts posted up in the streets of Rome, several conversions have been traced. To-day the community has a membership of nearly 300, and among other departments of work mentioned in the last report are Sunday schools, mothers' meetings, catechumen classes, daily prayers, Christian Endeavour, working classes for boys, singing classes, instruction in brass instrument playing, and frequent tract distribution. In all his work, Mr. Wall has had the devoted assistance of Mrs. Wall and her sister, Miss Yates. For some time past Mr. Wall had been in poor health, and considerable anxiety had been occasioned of late by an apoplectic seizure. The end came on Tuesday, October 29.

In our next issue we hope to give some particulars of our dear friend's last hours. Meantime, we ask the prayers of our readers for Mrs. Wall and her family in their sore bereavement.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hanbury.

THE death is announced of the venerable Mrs. Elizabeth Hanbury, a member of the Society of Friends, at the great age of 108 years. She was the daughter of Mr. John Saunderson, a merchant in Leadenhall Street, and in 1826 she married Mr. Cornelius Hanbury. During her long life she had been connected with many religious and philanthropic undertakings. When Elizabeth Fry began to visit the prisoners in Newgate Mrs. Hanbury joined in the work, and thus began many years of untiring labour among prisoners. A great amount of good was accomplished through these efforts, and Mrs. Hanbury, turning her attention to other social and religious needs, worked vigorously for the anti-slavery movement and many other noble causes. In due course Mrs. Hanbury was recorded as a minister of the Society of Friends. Her addresses were thoroughly evangelical in doctrine, and always correctly and admirably expressed. She took a deep interest in the various religious and benevolent objects which engaged the time and attention of her granddaughters, two of whom became missionaries, one in connection with the China Inland Mission, and the other with the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. Her sight enabled her to read and write, though with some difficulty, till she was over 100, and she daily dressed and went into her sitting-room till about the middle of her 107th year.

Presbyterian Home Missions.

AN important meeting in the interests of the Home Mission operations of the Presbyterian Church was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening of last week, when the congregations of the North and South London Presbyteries were represented by a large audience. In a thoughtful address from the chair, Rev. Principal Dykes (Westminster College, Cambridge) pointed out some of the lessons of the present position of affairs. He sounded a special note of warning against taking too dark a view of the moral and religious condition of the country, because (1) pessimism has always an enfeebling effect, and (2) it is not a true, and certainly not a religious or Christian attitude. "It would be injurious and unthankful to forget what God has done." The England of to-day he believed to be a better land than it had been in any past generation; and he went on to show how this had been brought about through the successive revivals of religion during last century, the quickened interest which had been shown in the problems of the religious life, and the deepening of earnestness and zeal inside as well as outside the Church of England.

CHRISTIANS AS CITIZENS.

Turning to the disquieting features of the case, he placed as the first of the adverse influences at work the new and peculiarly difficult problem which the very rapid aggregation of population in cities and towns has created for church and statesman alike. Among causes which disinclined men for religion, were named overcrowding, the craving for exciting forms of amusement, and the increase of gambling, especially among the young. Addressing his hearers as citizens, Dr. Dykes declared that while Acts of Parliament may not make people religious, they have often tended to make them irreligious, instead of checking temptation as they might have done. Christian citizens might do much to strengthen public opinion on two points—the housing of the people and the licensing laws.

The speaker said what he feared more than anything else was the creeping over the Church of God of a languid faith—not doubt, perhaps, but something so near it that it will paralyse energy, and disincline Christians from that heroic enterprise and self-denial without which the world cannot be evangelized.

An impassioned address followed, from Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast), on "Home Mission Work in Great Cities," in which he illustrated, from personal experience, the extent to which the Church is crippled from carrying on aggressive work by the drink traffic. He did not think that the evils of drink can be solved without Christian effort, because the drunkard is not dealt with effectively until he has a new heart; but the two must go hand in hand.

THE CHILD AND THE MAN.

Mr. Montgomery was particularly earnest in his appeal for the saving of the children, "for if you save the child you save the man," and brought it to a practical point by calling on his hearers to use all their powers in promoting the Twentieth Century Million New Pledges Crusade. The tone of the ordinary communicant is, he said, sadly below the level of the New Testament, and not much can be done until it is lifted up. In closing, a warm appeal was made for individual work for Christ and for self-surrender by young men present.

Speaking on "The Local Home Mission Work of the London Congregations," Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson (St. John's Wood) frankly declared that the efforts of all the churches put together are not keeping pace with the growth of population in the city and suburbs. "We want a greater expenditure of life in our congregations in order to have fulness of life in this aggressive work." Mr. Frank T. Bullen followed with an address on "The Spiritual Needs of London."

Rev. T. Connellan in Belfast.

REV. T. CONNELLAN has just concluded a very successful mission in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast. The hall seats 3,600, but there was scarcely a meeting at which some had not to be turned away from the door. A priest attended on two nights. The first night he contradicted Mr. Connellan's statement that the Pope had granted an indulgence for the reading of the Douay Bible. Mr. Connellan promised to produce a copy of the four Gospels published by the London Catholic Truth Society containing the indulgence. Then Mr. Connellan took the priest into Hebrews (he was speaking on the Mass); but the latter seemed to know little or nothing about his Bible, and made a sorry show of himself.

On the next night no hall in Belfast could have held the people who tried to get in. The priest was there, and Mr. Connellan, having produced his copy of the Gospels, invited him to come to the platform and apologise. This, however, he did not do. Then Mr. Connellan took up Purgatory as the subject for the evening, and again the priest soon got beyond his depth. While Mr. Connellan read from 2 Maccabees xii. the priest asked: "What is the gentleman reading from?" "I am reading from the twelfth chapter of the second book of Maccabees, one of the spurious books of Scripture added to the Canon by the Council of Trent," was the reply. Then Mr. Connellan added, "the reverend gentleman does not seem to be very familiar with his own Bible." The priest did not reappear. He gave a false address, but his name is known.

Roman Catholic inquirers were present at every meeting, and Mr. Connellan, in an address at Woodvale Presbyterian Church after the Mission had closed, said: "If I could see my way to open a branch of our Mission in Belfast to-morrow, I know sufficient converts from the Church of Rome here to form a very respectable congregation." Although many of the subjects looked controversial, Mr. Connellan always brought them to the touchstone of Bible truth, and always referred his hearers to the Douay if they doubted the Protestant version. Christians in Belfast are greatly cheered by the results.

Manchester Refuges.

ONE of the joys experienced by those who are carrying on the Manchester and Salford Boys and Girls' Refuges and Homes is the receiving of letters from many at home and abroad who are living honest, useful lives, and who gratefully acknowledge the helping hand given them at the "dear old refuge." The thirty-first annual report of these institutions contains many such greetings, and it is with thankfulness that the committee are able to record growing appreciation of the work which is being carried on. The Institution comprises seventeen distinct branches, each of which is in active operation on behalf of poor and needy children. Seven of these are orphan homes for little children. By means of the seventeen branches no fewer than 2,569 boys and girls during last year received the help their individual cases needed. At the Central Refuge and Home, Strangeways, 183 boys have been under care and training, and the ceaseless activity and manly spirit shown have acted as a keynote to the whole philanthropic undertaking.

STARTING IN LIFE.

'From the earliest days the motto "We help those who try to help themselves," has been kept before the minds of the inmates, and the boys are duly apprenticed to the various handicrafts. At the completion of apprenticeship at the age of twenty-one, no difficulty is experienced in obtaining employment in the city if the young tradesman is not retained in the Refuge workshop. While prominence is given to self-help and the working element, education is not given a secondary place. A full half of the total number in the institution at any given time are of school age. Something like 250 boys and girls turn out every morning from the homes for the various Board Schools, and the number of prizes and certificates which they bring home are practical proof of the high standard of proficiency attained by the scholars.

An important feature of the work is the Shelter in Chatham Street, Piccadilly, the door of which has never been closed since it was first opened fifteen years ago. During the past year 485 children of all ages in urgent need or grave moral danger have been received. Numbers of young lives have thus been saved from the contamination of the police cells and degrading influences.

The seven orphanages have been full of fatherless and motherless children, and no fewer than 149 have been carefully trained and tended. A pathetic side of the work is carried on at the Bethesda Home for Cripples and Incurables. The inner life of this home is full of interest, notwithstanding the fact that its inmates are full of suffering, the merry round of glad and happy childhood prevails over every other.

AT THE PRISON GATE.

The Prison Gate Mission, under the care of Mr. Horne and other refuge workers, and assisted by a worker from the Central Hall and City Mission, has continued morning by morn its benevolent work. Seven o'clock a.m., whatever the weather may be, finds these devoted workers at the prison gate. Out of a total of 10,629 discharged prisoners met during the year, 4,151 men and boys, and 3,047 women and girls, accepted the invitation to the Mission Hall adjoining, where a simple breakfast is provided. Earnest helpful words are spoken, and help of various kinds afforded, and 1,253 voluntarily signed the temperance pledge before leaving.

The emigration work of the past year has given much satisfaction to the committee; twenty-five boys and twenty girls have been carefully placed in good homes in Ontario, the garden of Canada. The accounts of those who have gone out in previous years and the reports from Canadian visitors are full of encouragement. Other branches of this many-sided philanthropy might be mentioned, but for further information readers will do well to apply for copies of the annual report. The hon. secretary is Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, Strangeways, Manchester.

Saving Female Hooligans.

MANY changes have been witnessed in riverside London since Miss Steer commenced those arduous labours of hers for the reclamation of degraded womanhood, which have resulted in the building up of the "Bridge of Hope" Mission. Ratcliff Highway, once of world-wide notoriety for flagrant and shameless vice, is now characterized by poverty of the grinding and sordid kind, rather than flaunting wickedness. Miss Steer, therefore, while meeting the needs of homeless women by means of a night shelter, and at the same time maintaining extensive rescue operations, has, of late years, largely increased the preventive branch of the operations, since that helps to meet the chief need of the time.

During the past year good progress has been made in these three main departments of the Mission. The night shelter has been used chiefly as a refuge from the streets of London for young servants out of place, and girls in various circumstances of distress who seek protection and help. In the capacious rescue home, which is in the same block of buildings, in Betts Street, E., sixty-six girls have been received and trained in useful industries. The cottage homes at Chingford afford shelter at the present time to no fewer than 167 children, who, amid surroundings which are delightfully homely, are "mothered" by experienced workers, cared for and educated under Christian influences, and trained for domestic service.

THE ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

The public meeting in connection with the twenty-third anniversary was held on Wednesday, October 23, at the mission premises, and was full of encouragement. Mr. E. C. Straker, who presided, in the course of a sympathetic address described the various departments of work, and dwelt on the high value of the Christian care exercised by Miss Steer and her helpers in their solicitude for the spiritual and moral well-being of the inmates.

Rev. J. G. Train, of Norwood, who followed, said that the great word, "Love," is written large over the "Bridge of Hope" and all its work. An outstanding feature of the administration is its economy; the funds are husbanded with the greatest care. In dealing with the problems presented by the many difficult and widely-differing cases, Miss Steer first gives skilled attention to the individual need, following that up with earnest efforts for permanent reclamation. The mission is conducted in the spirit of the Good Samaritan, who first came where the wounded man was, met his immediate needs, and also provided for his future.

Next came a reminiscent address from Mr. Harry L. Nisbet, who spoke of the vast good which has been accomplished. "How many parents through the 'Bridge of Hope' have welcomed back daughters whom they thought they had lost, never to see again!"

REACHING FEMALE HOOLIGANS.

Miss Steer said it is sometimes objected that not so many of the fallen class are received as in former days; but after twenty-three years' work it is not surprising to find that the need in that particular is lessened. The urgent requirement of the present time is to reach and influence the young girls who run the streets wild and impatient of restraint, the female hooligans of metropolitan slumdom. While the hardened, reprobate class of older women has decreased in numbers, that of these wayward girls has increased. Many have been received into the institutions, including numerous cases sent by magistrates who avail themselves of the advantages of the "Bridge of Hope" as an alternative to consigning the girls to gaol. It is necessary, of course, to maintain strict discipline, but the homes are essentially happy places. Many of the girls do remarkably well in their situations; their mistresses speak of them in terms of high appreciation. Proceeding, Miss Steer instanced a typical case in which a young girl who had recently gone out to domestic service, re-visited the homes, and, in addition to paying off part of the cost of her outfit, made, out of her small wages, a contribution to the funds, and expressed her heartfelt gratitude for the trouble expended in her training.

A vivid description of the daily round of work was next given by the speaker, who went on to express regret that the income does not allow her to accept all the cases concerning which application is made, and most of which are of a sorrowful and pathetic character. An effort is being made to complete the purchase of one more of the freehold cottages at Chingford, and for this purpose a balance of £120 is still required. In conclusion, Miss Steer said that the work is first of all a spiritual one, carried on in dependence on God, and for the winning of souls. "God is with us, and will strengthen our hearts."

Other speakers were Miss Lithgow—who made an earnest appeal to ladies to co-operate in this Christ-like work of uplifting the fallen, and who added a vivid account of the brightness and joy of a Christmas spent in the Chingford homes—and Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, who, in a forcible address, expressed his sense of the value of the work which is blessed to the reclamation of so many who stray from right paths.

Billingsgate Christian Mission

A PERUSAL of the annual report of the Billingsgate Christian Mission will afford both pleasure and instruction to readers who have at heart the evangelization of this busy centre. In this record the secretary reviews the efforts which have been made during the year. "We have studiously avoided," he writes, "tricks and devices to reach the masses, but we take the Word of God for our guide and example. Though there is, on the whole, a spirit of indifference on the part of men to hear and accept the Gospel, there is evidence on the part of some of a desire to listen to our message, and any legitimate means which we feel we can conscientiously adopt to assist in reaching the hearts of men, we gladly avail ourselves of.

THE MEDICAL MISSION.

"We feel that the Medical Mission has done much in that direction. Dr. Stansfeld has lovingly tendered his valuable services without fee or reward, and much of the success it has achieved is due to the efficient manner in which the cases are dealt with by the Sister in charge, Miss Warberton. That the men who avail themselves of the privilege afforded are grateful for the help rendered is shown by their having, during the last six months, contributed the sum of £8 through the medium of the dispensary box."

TO ENCOURAGE THRIFT.

The year before last, in order to inculcate a habit of thrift among the men, a Billingsgate Porters' Christmas Club was formed. Some 250 joined, and all but three completed their payments. Last Christmas this number was almost doubled, there being 470 members. This, of course, entailed a lot of additional work; but, on the other hand, it brought the workers into touch with the men, and afforded the opportunity, when the weekly payments were made, of speaking a word and giving a little book to those who came. The two coffee-stalls which the Mission established adjacent to the market are still centres of usefulness.

The Sunday-school is still carried on under the direction of the Sister in charge of the Medical Mission; and the Sunday evening service continues to be conducted by friends, whose clear,, earnest preaching of the Word has been the means, from time to time, of awakening in many hearts a desire for salvation. The Monday noon Gospel services for the men in the market are still maintained and fairly well attended. Address, Mr. A. Walters, Secretary, 19, St. Mary-at-Hill, E.C.

Emmanuel Creche, 72, Commercial Road, Lambeth, S.W.—Besides the day nursery where babies are fed and minded for threepence a day, the house is used as a rescue home, and for weekly Gospel services. Situated right in the slums between Waterloo and Blackfriars Bridges, it gives us a splendid opportunity of reaching the lowest and most degraded. Left off clothing, &c., is very welcome.—(Miss) Charlotte S. Reid, Hon. Superintendent.

The Lydd Soldiers' Home.

IT is a privilege to tell with gratitude what God hath wrought in connection with our labours among the troops at Lydd, during the past nine months. The home has been open each evening, and between 300 and 400 officers and men have visited the place, according to the register of our visitors' book; but many come who do not enter their names.

Each night, individually or collectively, the "old, old story" has been told, and, as of old, God has "confirmed his Word by signs following." Much blessing was given in the spring, when numbers of the cavalry were stationed here. Several professed conversion, and, we believe, are to-day witnessing a good confession. The following is an extract from a letter received last week from a 5th Lancer at the front (one of the cavalry mentioned above):—

"I hope you are still doing as well for the poor soldier lads at Lydd Shooting Camp as you did for me, and, let us hope, the rest of my companions that visited your Home during our stay at Lydd. I can never forget the pleasant evenings spent at the Home, and the delightful conversations I have had with you. I will look forward to your letter; let it be a long one, full of encouragement for a poor soldier who is trying to follow 'In His Steps.'"

The open-air services on Sunday afternoons in the camp were becoming well known and the attendance better, but to our deep regret we were compelled to relinquish them. Miss Davies has now been working here for twelve months most indefatigably, and many of the men will thank God through eternity for the message she has given.

But to continue this work, begun in 1877, we need more support. Just now there is a deficit of £30, which we trust will soon be forthcoming, so that we may keep out of debt, and not touch the amount given and promised to our new building fund.

Frank E. Wootton,
Hon. Sec. and Treasurer.
North View, Lydd, Kent.

Brixton Orphanage.

AT the Brixton Orphanage for Fatherless Girls, 300 children are maintained, educated, and trained for domestic service. These little ones are received from all parts of the United Kingdom. The most necessitous are admitted free, without election.

At the age of seventeen the girls are placed in service, and supplied with a good outfit. The whole of the household and laundry work of the Orphanage is done by the elder girls under the supervision of matrons.

Started in 1876 by Mrs. Annie Montague, the Orphanage has been the means of blessing to large numbers of distressed children. This year has brought difficulty, as, owing to the illness of Mrs. Montague and other causes, the funds have become quite exhausted.

Adeline Bird, Vice-Superintendent.

A Canal Boat Mission.

FOR some years past Mr. R. Bamber, of the London City Mission, has done good work among the canal boat population at Brentford, a place through which, according to official statistics, from 250 to 300 barges pass weekly.

A day school, started for the children, has proved very useful, and has a large number of little ones on the register. They proceed to school with alacrity on arriving at Brentford, and attend regularly until the time comes for making the return journey—perhaps to Birmingham, or some other important industrial centre in the Midlands.

Evangelistic work has also been undertaken, and among other departments of service, a maternity room has been inaugurated for the poor boat-women. With the development of the work the mission premises have become too small, and the committee have decided that it would be far better to erect a new building rather than attempt the reconstruction of the present one. Mr. Frank A. Bevan writes that "the poor people welcome the missionary's visits, and many are leading a Christian life who were before in ignorance of spiritual things." The cost of the new premises is estimated at £800, of which sum about £300 has been received or promised.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

REV. DR. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

THE provincial demonstrations conducted by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry continue to attract large audiences, and to arouse fresh interest in the temperance cause. Continuing the series, Dr. Henry has spoken to enthusiastic assemblies at Liverpool. The first meeting was held on October 29, in Great George Street Chapel, Rev. Griffith Ellis presiding.

The Chairman, in a few introductory remarks, said that the drink bill for the last year was close upon £161,000,000, which amounted to £3 18s. 8d. per head of the population, or about £20 per family throughout the kingdom. He asked, "How long is this source of crime and poverty to remain untouched in the twentieth century?" The Secretary (Mr. Boreland) followed with a statement which showed that 7,000 new pledges have been received by the canvassers, which, together with the 3,000 taken by the three committees, bring the total for the present year up to 10,000. The speaker urged that if temperance people will throw their enthusiasm and energy into the work they will soon make Liverpool brighter and better.

Dr. Henry, in the course of an impassioned address, said that two institutions characteristic of the present time are the Christian Church and the public-house. The Church governs by love, whilst the public-house promotes the spirit of destruction. It is a question whether the public-house shall dominate the earth and control mankind, or whether the Christian Church shall be triumphant. The victory of Christianity will mean death to the public-house and its attendant evils. Great Britain is face to face with a crisis in connection with the drink question. After dwelling upon poverty and other evils brought about by drink, the speaker said that the Church has in its power the solution of the question, and Christian people ought to realize their responsibility for the success or failure of the temperance movement.

During the campaign meetings were also held in the Welsh Church, Bootle, and the Y.M.C.A. at Birkenhead. The final gathering, held in the Philharmonic Hall, was full of encouragement. It appears likely that Liverpool will accomplish the laudable object which local temperance friends have in view of securing a grand total of no fewer than 30,000 pledges ere the Crusade is concluded.

ENTHUSIASM AT NORWICH.

Throughout Dr. Henry's Norwich campaign intense interest in the movement was aroused. The meetings held in Calvert Street Free Methodist Church and in St. Andrew's Hall attracted very large audiences, and many new pledges were secured.

Speaking at the inaugural meeting on Saturday evening last in Calvert Street Church, Rev. J. King, who presided, said he believed that vast good will come out of the Crusade. Alderman White, of Norwich, has said that the city should obtain 3,000 pledges as its contribution to the scheme, and, as a result of devoted and industrious effort, one-third of that number were already to hand.

Dr. Henry followed with an earnest and characteristic address, in which he said that the history of the drink traffic is written in tears, in anguish, and in blood. It involves a wicked waste of health and makes terrible inroads upon the resources of a nation. The time has surely come when the Million Pledges Crusade should have a place in the ministration of every pulpit, and in every Sunday-school throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The Christian Church must lead the way in the reform, and rouse the conscience of Parliament on the subject.

Both afternoon and evening crowded meetings were held on the following day in St. Andrew's Hall. Indeed, so great was the degree of enthusiasm aroused, that the commodious building proved too small, and an overflow gathering was held in Princes Street Lecture Hall. Alderman G. White, M.P., spoke vigorously on our national responsibilities with regard to the terrible nature of the drink traffic, and the havoc it has wrought on every hand, and Dr. Henry again addressed the people with evident good effect. The campaign closed on Tuesday evening with a meeting which, for warmth and unanimity, proved a fitting close to a most helpful series. The Fisk Jubilee Singers again rendered valuable help with their delightful melodies.

Later intelligence from centres already visited shows that deep and abiding impressions were made. Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, writes: "At Dr. Henry's final meeting in Leicester the people, with three rounds of applause, passed a resolution inviting him and the Jubilee Singers to visit us again. We have every reason to be satisfied with the impression made by the first appeal." Of Nottingham, Mr. John Stewart, hon. secretary of the Nottinghamshire United Temperance Council, writes: "The meeting was the most remarkable temperance gathering held in Nottingham in recent times. The whole audience rose to urge us to bring Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers for a further mission of not less than a week. 'We mean to attempt great things for God and the crusade.'" At Bradford the demonstrations have given a great impetus to the temperance cause. Everyone has been surprised at the far-reaching results of the meetings.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Nov. 10-13, Manchester (Free Trade Hall); 14, 15, Wolverhampton (14, Mount Zion Chapel, 15, Agricultural Hall); 17-22, Birmingham (17-19, Town Hall, 18, Central Hall, 20, Carr's Lane Chapel, 21, Friends' Institute, Moseley Road, 22, Town Hall); 23-25, Bristol (Colston Hall); 26, 27, Cardiff (Park Hall); 28, Portsmouth (Town Hall); 30-Dec. 1, 2, Brighton (Dome).

The "Holdfast" Declaration.

THIS is a combination of clergymen and lay members of the Church of England, who consider it important to maintain, as far as possible, the following features in church arrangement and ritual:—

No cross or other image on the Communion table. No Eastward (sacrificing) position in consecrating. Periodical evening communion. A full-length surplice, and black preaching gown for the minister. Scarf, if used, to be distinct from the stole—condemned at the Reformation. No "Ancient and Modern," or other Romanizing collection of hymns. An unsurpliced choir (mixed or otherwise); and no singing or monotoning of prescribed prayers.

The hon. secretary of the Mission is Rev. E. H. F. Cosens, vicar of Holy Trinity, Tewkesbury, who will be glad to supply forms for signature by members. In a letter to us, Mr. Cosens says:—

"We have many active and earnest dignitaries who appear determined to favour Romish postures, vestments, and hymn books, &c., which, it is admitted, capture the people. Were these dignitaries ever Protestant? Our true men should not be satisfied without taking some simple action. Provision is made in the Declaration for signatories, who may not be with us in one or more points which may seem to them of small importance."

Mr. Charrington and the East End Poor.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me once more to ask your readers for their kind help towards the Lord Mayor's annual banquet and entertainment to the poor of the East End on November 9

The Lord Mayor-elect has kindly given twenty guineas, and the sheriffs ten guineas each. The invitations are distributed to the very poorest irrespective of creed and denomination.

The public have always supplemented the amount given by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and we trust they will again assist, so as to enable us to entertain at least 3,000 guests on November 9. Donations will be gratefully received by, yours faithfully,

Fredk. N Charrington.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, London, E.

British Syrian Mission.

AT a public meeting held at Exeter Hall on Friday last, in connection with the British Syrian Mission, Sir George Williams, who presided, was the recipient of hearty congratulations in the attainment of his eightieth birthday. On the platform were Revs. John Sharp, H. B. Macartney, and other friends, both of the Mission and of the chairman.

Speaking on behalf of the meeting, and also voicing the feelings of the wide circle of Christians who hold Sir George in deep esteem, Mr. Albert A. Head referred to his far-reaching influence in Christian work, and particularly as the originator and organizer of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. Head sketched the rise and progress of that movement from the time of its inception, and showed how large a tree has grown from the little seed sown at that historic meeting in St. Paul's Churchyard on June 6, 1844, when the idea of gathering together and influencing the young men of the city first took definite form. The Soldiers' Christian Association also owes much to Sir George, who has followed with eager interest, and practically helped, the extensive operations which have been maintained during the South African war for the evangelization of the soldiery.

Proceeding, Mr. Head referred to the intimate connection of Sir George with the Bible Society, the China Inland Mission, and with a great number of other organizations which have for their aim the extension of the kingdom of God. Christian workers may well draw encouragement from the devotion and perseverance which Sir George has so consistently manifested, and go forward with renewed faith and earnestness of purpose to labour in the Gospel cause.

In response, Sir George Williams, in a few well-chosen words of thanks, modestly disclaimed any title to recognition. "The Y.M.C.A. came from God. He it was who inspired the thought and carried on the work."

An interesting account of the Mission was subsequently given by Mrs. Chapman, hon. secretary, who spoke of the training institution at Beyrout, in which girls are educated as native teachers, and of the schools at Baalbec and Shemlan. The Mission has fifty day schools in Beyrout, Damascus, Tyre, the Lebanon, &c.; and 3,652 scholars, including Mohammedans, Druzes, Jewesses, and Protestants; while the Sunday schools have an average attendance of 1,310. In all these schools the Bible is the foundation of instruction. The staff of workers include twenty English ladies and 103 native teachers, and twenty-five Bible women and Scripture readers. Evangelistic work is also maintained among the Bedouins, and the soldiers of the Lebanon Army.

Miss Mason's House of Rest.—Rev. Henry Dening, vicar of Holy Trinity, Kilburn, addressed a large meeting at the House of Rest, St. John's Wood, on Friday afternoon last, dwelling on 1 John i. 3. In the prayer meeting which followed, thanks were given for the safe return of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, and earnest prayer was offered for a speedy termination of the war.

The Gospel in Portugal.—A new stage in the progress of the reform movement in Portugal was reached recently by the ordination in Madrid of Rev. Josué de Souza and Senor F. W. Flower. Bishop Cabrera, and Portuguese and other ministers took part in the ceremony. The service was held in the Church of the Redeemer, Madrid, the front door of which is still kept closed by the act of the public authorities.

Anti-Clericalism in Italy.—The Avanti, a socialistic newspaper published in Rome, recently sent out a circular addressed to the Directing Committees of all the socialistic and republican societies in Italy, calling a meeting for concerted action on anti-clerical lines. This is probably the result of a newspaper exposure, during the months of June and July, of the evils of the confessional, accompanied by an offer on the part of the paper, the Asino, to forfeit one thousand francs if any Roman Catholic organ dared to publish certain pages of the "Moral Philosophy of Liguori," which is used in the confessional. It believed (with reason) that any paper accepting the challenge would be prosecuted for an offence committed against common decency.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Southport Y.M.C.A. reports an increase of forty-three members, and the present season has commenced in a most encouraging manner.

Eighty-six new members have been received, at the commencement of the winter session, by the Newcastle-on-Tyne Y.M.C.A., bringing the total to 1,365.

The first annual meeting of the Handsworth Association, Birmingham, was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday, October 30, Dr. Satchell in the chair. An encouraging report was presented. Rev. E. P. Gonner, vicar of St. Saviour's, gave an interesting address; and Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Carr's Lane, spoke on "Moral Courage."

The annual conference of associations in the Manchester district was held at the Town Hall, Blackburn, on October 26. Dr. H. B. Wilson, of Birmingham, gave an address on "Bible Study," and Mr. R. D. Pringle spoke on the Foreign Association Movement. During the past three-and-a-half years thirty-one associations have been formed in Lancashire and in border towns, of which number twenty-two were represented. The Mayor of Blackburn presided at the evening meeting.

The Mayor of Luton, Mr. Alderman Low Giddings, presided recently over a meeting to devise suitable means for the equipment and public recognition of an Association which has recently been formed there under circumstances of much promise. Mr. Alderman Hucklesby, who has been thrice mayor, and Mr. Alderman Warren, who has filled the mayoral chair on two occasions, were among those who attended, and both, with the present Mayor, consented to join the provisional committee, for the securing of suitable premises, furnishing, &c. An address was delivered by Mr. W. H. Mills.

The thirtieth annual meeting of the Sunderland Association was held on Wednesday, October 23, Dr. G. B. Morgan, J.P., presiding. The reports showed that there are now 920 members and associates. The net gain for the year had been 153. There had been 641 entries for the educational classes. Several members had offered for the foreign mission field, and two had entered college to prepare for the ministry and mission work. Four open-air meetings had been conducted weekly during the summer, and it was estimated that at least 10,000 persons had been thus reached. The mission band had also done excellent work, conducting seven special missions in chapels and halls in the neighbourhood. The swimming, cricket, chess, and other clubs had had good seasons. Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, is engaged to conduct a mission in February next, and a missionary exhibition in spring has been arranged.

The Central Association has commenced the winter's work at Exeter Hall with a successful mission conducted by Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A., of Christ Church, Brixton. On the Friday preceding the commencement of the Mission a meeting of workers for prayer and conference was held under the presidency of Mr. M. H. Hodder. The opening gathering of the Mission took place on Monday, October 14, when about 300 young men, many of whom were recent arrivals in the metropolis, responded to an invitation given by Sir George and Lady Williams to a social reception. Mr. J. H. Putterill having spoken of the advantages offered by the Association to young men on their entrance upon life in London, Mr. Mowll followed with an impressive address on "Life," which was listened to with deep attention. The subsequent meetings of the mission were attended by large numbers of young men, many of whom were secured by the distribution of invitations in the Strand adjacent thoroughfares. The evident results of the mission were a great encouragement to the workers.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE formal opening of the new premises of the Young Women's Christian Association Victoria Institute and Home, 16, Harcourt Street, took place during the recent Conference held in Dublin. The lease of the former premises being about to expire, the committee resolved to take this large house, which has the advantage of a hall capable of seating about 200 persons. On the opening day a meeting for prayer and dedication was held in the morning, presided over by Miss Bradshaw, and in the afternoon there was a crowded attendance, when Mrs. S. H. Smith, President of the Irish Division of the Y.W.C.A. took the chair. During her address she alluded to the fact that the Association now, for the first time in Dublin, possesses a hall of its own. In answer to the appeal made for £1,000, they had received over £550, and she hoped that the full amount would soon be contributed. The Institute and Home was then declared open by Lady Coote. The committee are most anxious that the present need of funds to complete this undertaking should be more widely known. The address of Miss Marrable (Hon. Sec.) is 49, Waterloo Road, Dublin.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Charles Inglis at Crouch End.

A FORTNIGHT'S mission has just been concluded at Crouch End by Mr. Charles Inglis. A great deal of interest was taken in the meetings, which were very largely attended, especially on the Sundays, when the hall was crowded. The stirring addresses of the missioner were greatly blessed of God. Not a meeting has been held without souls having sought Christ. The afternoon Bible readings were times of deep spiritual profit. We have much cause, as workers, to praise God for all that He has accomplished.

W. G. V.

Central Mission, Bedminster.

During the anniversary month at the Central (inter-denominational) Mission, Bedminster Town Hall, Bristol, two missions were held, with good results. The first was conducted by Mr. Paul Redwood, Mr. Holzer, and Rev. A. H. Jenkins ("singing evangelist"), and the services were fruitful in blessing, both to the unsaved and to Christians. Mr. R. S. Bradbrook, who followed, made a deep impression by his Gospel addresses, and at the close a number of inquirers sought the Lord Jesus Christ. The building, which accommodates 1,500 people, was crowded to excess on the Sunday night.

Railway Mission, Stratford, E.

A fortnight's Evangelistic services have been conducted at the Railway Mission, Stratford, E., by Mr. John Hawkins. Our hearts are overflowing with praise for the blessing which was given. Many professed decision for the Lord Jesus Christ. The brass bands of the Stratford Crusaders and of Major Road Baptist Church rendered valuable service in processioning the neighbourhood and advertising the meetings. The large hall was crowded each Lord's Day, and the week-evening meetings in the lower hall were also well attended. The gatherings for women, held on Thursday afternoons, were also seasons of blessing.

S. D.

St. Paul's Church, Birkenhead.

A fruitful mission has been conducted by Rev. W. H. Stone at St. Paul's, Birkenhead, popularly known as "the working-man's church." Under the direction of the vicar, Rev. E. Davies, an energetic work had been carried on in preparation for the mission, and the attendances were encouraging. Among the addresses to men was one given in the workshop of a local builder, who stopped all work while the missioner spoke. On this occasion Mr. Stone's address was founded on the words, "A Saviour," "The Saviour," "My Saviour." In addition to the services for adults, meetings for children were held, conducted by Rev. H. M. Dale, of Southport.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Chesham.

The mission recently conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne at Chesham was fraught with blessing to the town. Mr. Thorne had the earnest support of the Free Church ministers, and many of the church members laboured energetically to impress the people, and to point them to Christ. At the Bible readings many of God's people received fresh light on the Word. Mr. Thorne's telling appeals to Christians to be more Christlike in life and character must surely produce rich results. Night after night, in the Gospel services, the workers were encouraged by seeing some of the audience come to decision. The mission has been the means of bringing numbers, of whom a large percentage were young people, into the fold of Christ.

L. P.

The Weaver Brothers at Reading.

The mission conducted by the Weaver Brothers during the past two weeks in London Street Primitive Methodist Church, has been very fruitful. At the Sunday services the church was crowded to its utmost capacity, and at the evening meetings many persons were turned away. During the week nights the attendance increased night by night until the church was filled. The addresses of the missioners were well thought out, and carried the judgment, as well as the hearts, of the audience. Each evening the inquiry rooms have been filled, and a well-equipped staff of workers dealt thoroughly with the cases. Six years have elapsed since the Weaver Brothers' last mission in the church, and the results are to be found to-day.

Benjamin Wise, Secretary.

Hyde Park Services.

In connection with the open-air services held nightly in Hyde Park, W., near the Marble Arch, under the superintendence of Mr. G. Williams, of St. George's Hall, and Mr. J. Newman, of Onslow Baptist Chapel, a thanksgiving meeting has been held at Stafford Rooms, W. Mr. William Davis presided over an audience which crowded the meeting room. Mr. Williams gave a brief account of the work, showing that during the work of the past six months there have been many cases of blessing. The chairman followed with a stirring address, after which a large number of friends told how God had led them to the services and blessed them. The meeting was bright and full of encouragement, and the hearty words of many who told what great things God had wrought were most helpful. Mr. Ned Wright and other friends also spoke, and solos were acceptably given by Mr. T. Perrin.

Lewisham Road Baptist Church, S.E.

A twelve-days' mission has been concluded, by Mr. E. P. Telford, at the Lewisham Road Baptist Chapel, Greenwich (Rev. E. D. de Rusett, B.A., pastor). Large numbers gathered to hear the Gospel Story from this experienced evangelist, and also the sweet and telling solos rendered by Madame Annie Ryall. Both on the last Sunday and the Thursday the building was packed, and it was with much regret that Mr. Telford's engagement to proceed to Glasgow prevented the meetings from being continued. Large numbers were dealt with in the inquiry room by an earnest staff of workers, the names of nearly a hundred being handed in. Many girls employed in a neighbouring mill were led to Christ. They are holding a prayer-meeting among themselves in a room kindly provided by their employers. Mr. Telford's mission has led to results which will be long felt in this needy district.

E. D. de R.

At Zion Baptist Church, Pentre, South Wales, Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, Mon., conducted a series of services last week. The Bible readings were much appreciated. Many hearers decided for Christ.

Rev. John Mitchell has concluded an eight-days' mission at Grafton Street Tabernacle, Northampton (Rev. T. Napoleon Smith, pastor). The Gospel was faithfully preached. The closing address will long be remembered, and should bear much fruit in the days to come. The meetings were attended by large numbers.

S.

At Lingdale-in-Cleveland, Rev. John Jameson (Congregational Union county missioner), has just concluded a brief mission. The chapel was crowded. Drunkards of both sexes, gamblers and pigeon flyers have been impressed. A deep sense of the evil of sin, and an equally deep sense of the beauty of holiness will be an abiding result of the mission. A number publicly avowed their decision to accept Christ as their Saviour.

A two weeks' mission has been concluded at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Brightside, Sheffield, by Mr. C. E. Barraclough. The services were characterized by spiritual power. The missioner's discourses were thoughtful expositions of Gospel truth, and the message was delivered with tact and earnestness. During the mission a number decided for Christ. The Church, which heartily co-operated with Mr. Barraclough, has itself been revived, and the missioner's visit will long be remembered.

Rev. S. G. and Mrs. Neil, the Scottish evangelists, who took part in the recent London Tent Campaign meetings at Clapham Junction and at Islington, are in the midst of a revival campaign at Manchester, New Hampshire. The Baptist Tabernacle has been crowded to the doors every night, and people turned away for lack of room. Souls have been blessed at every service. From Manchester, Mr. and Mrs. Neil go to Lowell, Mass., to Waterbury, Conn., to New York City, to Pittsfield, Mass., and to Philadelphia, Pa. The latter engagement will be Mr. and Mrs. Neil's twentieth meeting among the Philadelphia churches.

A three weeks' mission has been held in Paisley by Miss Glover, of Edinburgh. The intention was to have a fortnight's mission, but as the meetings proved so helpful they were extended to three weeks. Even on the week nights the large hall was filled with most attentive audiences, and on the Sabbath it proved too small to accommodate the great numbers who gathered to listen, so that a smaller hall was also called into use. As the mission advanced the interest deepened, while very many professed to find the "Way of Life." The work had every appearance of being real and lasting, and the mission was one long to be remembered as a time when God drew very near, to save the lost and bless his own. Miss Glover spoke plainly and faithfully.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessings on Mr. J. Bennett Anderson's mission at Gourock, N.B.

For blessing at a convention at Colchester to be addressed by Rev. D. Morris, November 10-18.

For a mission at Barrow-in-Furness, conducted by Mr. T. Swanston Smith, November 10-22.

For a mission to men at Dublin Y.M.C.A., commencing Sunday next, to be conducted by Mr. Samuel G. Montgomery.

Scripture Lotto.—By the use of a system of cards, two series of Lotto have been constructed; No. I. for children, No. II. for young people. (1s. 6d. each, post free. Miss E. Tregelles Cook, 5, Rothsay Road, Bedford.) Some cards propound questions, and others answer them, the link between the two being furnished by common numbers. The "game" may serve as a useful exercise in memorizing Scripture facts and truths.

"Jesus Lives There."

FOR my part, I think it would be a beautiful thing for any little girl to say: "Jesus lives there." But when you remember that it was spoken by an Indian girl, it seems to give it an additional beauty.

I feel sure that you will quite agree with me when I have told you the story.

The name of this Indian maiden does not appear, so we will call her M'ahne.

It happened that one day Mahne was walking through a street in a great Indian city, when she saw a poor leper woman begging. Mahne's heart was touched with pity for her. She stood still, thinking, wondering how she could help the sufferer.

The thought of the Leper Asylum, not very far away, came to her. "If only the lonely woman were there everybody would be so kind to her, and perhaps she would get to know Jesus, too."

She then went up to the woman and said, "Why don't you go to the Leper Asylum? There you will be kindly cared for. Jesus lives there." It seemed to Mahne that nobody could be unkind or selfish where Jesus lived.

There are many lepers in India, and they are mostly poor. The terrible nature of leprosy, so infectious and hideous, makes it necessary that all who suffer from it should be separated from their friends and relatives, and live entirely by themselves. Everything touched or used by lepers also carries infection. The separation is in itself a fearful thing apart from the pain and loathsomeness of the disease.

In order to relieve those smitten with this dreadful malady, missionaries have built leper hospitals or asylums, where the best treatment and loving care are to be found. Mahne knew this, and therefore she wanted the woman to be where Jesus was.

This Indian girl had come to know of Jesus, and his love for all who suffer, through attendance at the mission school. Now she, in turn, is trying to be a little missionary as well. It is really fruit-bearing for Jesus.

The girl's sympathy and thoughtfulness are beautiful things that all of you can imitate. But the thought that God put in her mind and gave her the power to tell to the leper woman was the sweetest thing of all: "Jesus lives there."

How different Mahne's conduct was from that of two girls in Madagascar!

It was a very painful sight they saw. Here again it was a woman, poor and lonely. But in her case the leprosy had made such progress that her fingers and toes had gradually fallen off!

Instead of pitying her, these rude children called out after her, "A leper! a leper!" At the same moment a lady missionary was passing. What do you think she did? Her heart was so deeply touched with tenderness that she put her hand on the leper woman's shoulder and asked her to sit down on the grass by her side.

That was really doing what Christ would have done had He been present as the lady missionary was. This tender sympathy so affected the sufferer that she sobbed bitterly, quite overcome by emotion. Then she cried: "A human hand has touched me. For seven years no one has touched me!"

Can you imagine anything more terrible than that? You, who have so many loving friends to care for and bless you. What would it mean to you if no kind hand touched you for even one year? How could you bear to be left alone, utterly alone, separated from all related to you, like that!

Well, the missionary tells the ever-true story to heathen people, whom the leprosy of sin separates from God, that Jesus loves them, and lives "there" with them, just to have the joy of healing them. And when the missionary relates how Jesus cured the lepers in his day, it is just as though Jesus were close at hand to put away all their sin and make them clean every whit.

And would not you like to begin to be a little missionary like the Indian girl Mahne? I think you would! Perhaps you can begin among your own circle of friends. Or it may be that you know some poor, sick person, whom a visit from you would help.

Only think of making it real to any sorrowing, suffering one whom you may know that. "Jesus lives" with them! It is a beautiful thought—all so true—that is sure to carry with it blessing of some kind at once. And when this is known and felt, and the sick one puts faith in the present Jesus, He will touch their souls and cleanse them of sin's sore malady, and make them white as snow.

So, too, for yourselves, dear boys and girls, "Jesus lives" with you, there, where your home is; where mother and father and sisters and brothers dwell! Perhaps you have never imagined it quite like that before. But it is really so.

And you may have this kind Christ for your friend and helper and Elder Brother every day.

"Jesus lives there." Where you live. Wonderful! But true! Joseph Woodhouse.

How to Form Character.

IN The Christian last week an article appeared upon Jerry-Building, and, although it was intended for older readers, yet I think the subject has some lessons for us younger ones too.

A jerry-built house is one that is badly built, and after awhile the walls begin to crack, and constant repairs are needed, or else the house becomes unsafe to live in. I daresay you have sometimes seen one propped up with long planks, like a man who has to use crutches to prevent him from falling down.

Every child is a builder. As soon as they can count, the little ones are sent to school, but they have not been there long before they meet the jerry-builder. Certain lessons have to be learnt, certain sums to be done. These mean work. But we get to know a boy sitting near, or living next door, and he tells us there is a way of dodging the task. Perhaps he suggests playing truant, and invents all sorts of excuses for our absence from school. Or he tells us we need only do that part of the lesson on which we are likely to be questioned; or that a still easier way is to copy the answers of another boy.

Now all these may be called forms of jerry-building, their object being to make a showy structure without laying firm foundations, or putting in good work. Such an erection will not stand in the storms of life, nor keep out the wet when the testing time comes.

The jerry-building boy will fail in his examinations, and will never rise to a high position in life. Neither will the girl who does all her work in the spirit of "That'll do for now," or who scamps the sewing in her frocks, because "no one will see it" but herself.

The writer of the article I have referred to said: "Even a child can understand that no ornamentation, however pretty, will make up for bad foundations, cracking walls, or a leaky roof." He meant that our real object in life should be to build for use and not for show; and that it is even more important to do well what is not seen, than to take pains only with what other people see and praise us for. Let us remember that God sees all, whether our friends do or not; and seek to please Him by doing his will—"heartily as unto the Lord."

Our National Bondage (Habakkuk i. 13-17; Amos vi. 1 6.

THANK God there is every sign that the tide of national feeling against the drink traffic is rapidly rising. Statesmen give much more space to temperance matters in their political addresses than they were accustomed to, even ten years ago, and the various expedients which are being suggested to mitigate the awful power of the drink curse, indicate how deeply men's minds are being wrought upon. One cannot but feel that this question is vital to the very existence of our nation. When we are told that in America seven of the greatest trunk lines of railway traffic will employ no man who drinks, so that guards, engine drivers, and porters alike are necessarily total abstainers; and when we are told that two of these have banished alcohol from their restaurant bars, so that it is impossible for either passengers or employers to obtain it; and when one considers the strength of the temperance sentiment in that great country across the Atlantic, one is disposed to be pessimistic for our national prosperity unless something can be done to arrest the growing appetite for intoxicating liquor, which wastes the life tissue, the money, and the time, of myriads of our people.

Habakkuk dealing with the evil doers of his time wonders that God can stand by and hold his peace, whilst the wicked swallow the righteous as the fishes of the sea; and our lesson suggests a close comparison between the evil doers of the Prophet's time, and those who are engaged in making and selling liquor. What are public-houses but traps; the inducements to purchase drink like the bait on the hook; the carnivals of intemperance like dragging fish to land in the same net? It is but too true that by the money that is wrung from the poor, the drink trader is made fat and his meat plenteous, at the cost of empty platters and cupboards for tens of thousands. We would not say that all brewers and publicans are bad, but it does seem an anomaly that any Christian man who follows Him who spent his life-blood for men, should be able to follow a calling which thrives upon the poverty, anguish and murder of such hetacombs of victims Young friend, if you should ever have an opportunity of entering some brewery, or of making money by any connection with the trade, I pray you stand clear of it, even to poverty. Come out and be separate.

The prophet Amos warns those who are at ease in Zion. By this he refers to statesmen, public men, and others, who thought that the kingdom of which they were part was so impregnable that there was no fear of its overthrow. The prophet bids them turn to certain kingdoms which he names as examples that great and mighty peoples have been, in a moment, overthrown. The fate that befell Hamath, Gath, and Calneh would inevitably betake Israel. There are plenty of people at ease amongst us. They think that because our beloved Fatherland has been so great and prosperous her future is secure, whereas it may be that the worm is even now at the root of the gourd, and that unless God Almighty shall avert the secret sapping of her strength, our land will follow the downward track of the great nations of antiquity, which were corrupted by the very forces which are rife amongst us.

In the closing verses of the paragraph the prophet depicts a scene of carouse, which probably was only too frequent in Israel, where men and women, luxuriously vestured, reclined on couches, eating of the richest food, singing idle songs, and drinking heavily. The scent of their perfume is heavy in the air. In the seventh verse the prophet predicts their captivity. The revellers will be the first to suffer. Sins like theirs are abhorrent to Jehovah, and undermine the protection which He would otherwise afford against invasion. I plead with all who read these words to abstain from drink, to sign the pledge, and to use their influence to promote a sober nation.

Child-Widows in India.—You have often heard of the terrible sufferings endured by little Indian girls who have been married very young, and, having lost their husbands, are subjected to the greatest cruelty. You will, therefore, be much interested in a description of one of them who suffered a great deal for her love to Jesus. It is given on page 16.

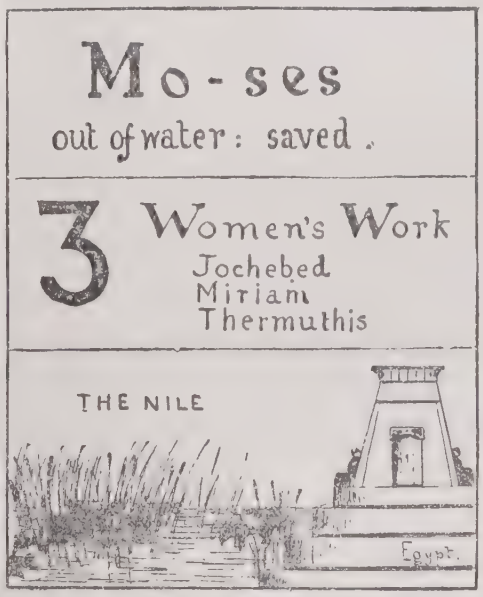
The Childhood of Moses (Ex. ii. 1-10).

Golden Text: Prov. xxii. 6.

Introductory.

THE persecution and attempted destruction of the Israelites in Egypt were fierce and determined; but in vain, for they were Jehovah's people, and "they multiplied exceedingly." The command went forth that every male child was to be cast into the river. It was God's will that his people should be delivered from Egypt and go to their promised land, and a leader is needed. Our lesson shows how God provided that this leader should be raised up and trained for his great work.



The Parentage (1, 2).

The Israelites were divided into tribes, each called after the Son of Jacob, from whom they were descended. The tribe of Levi was afterwards chosen by God for his special service, instead of taking for that purpose every first-born son. See Num. iii. 11-13. The father's name was Amram (meaning "Kindred of the Lofty One"); the mother's Jochebed (meaning "She whom glory in Jehovah") (Num. xxvi. 59). They had two children older than Moses, Aaron three years his senior (Ex. vii. 7), and Miriam much older.

The Babe (2, 3).

The time had expired of which God had told Abraham his descendants would remain in Egypt, and doubtless the faithful among them were looking for their deliverance. There was some wonderful appearance about this babe which made his parents think he might be the expected one. Josephus tells us that they had a special revelation to that effect. Stephen records that he was "exceeding fair," or "fair unto God" (Acts vii. 20). In Hebrews we read that it was their faith which led the parents to hide the child. It appears from his after conduct that Moses had been taught that he was to deliver his brethren (see v. 11-13). How well his mother trained him!

The Ark.

A cradle cleverly woven of papyrus stems and leaves, made watertight with Nile mud and bitumen, was the ingenious invention of the mother. An arched lid for protection, and the beautiful child laid therein was placed in the reedy shallows close to the spot where the Princess was accustomed to bathe. Surely Jehovah must have put this thought into that mother's mind. The word translated "ark" is used only here and for Noah's ark. The "papyrus" is a rush, about the size round of a man's finger, with three-sided stem, growing from ten to fifteen feet in height. From its pith the earliest kind of paper was made. In Isaiah xviii. 2 we read of vessels which were made of papyrus. We have a good example for girls in Miriam, the clever, cute, and trustworthy child.

Pharaoh's Daughter (5-9).

The story of the Royal Lady is graphically told by Josephus. He says her name was "Thermuthis." Her brothers had all died, and she was heiress to the throne, and though married had no child. This gives significance to her adoption of this wonderful babe, who, had he accepted the position, might have been raised to the throne. Her "maidens" mean her girl companions; her "handmaid" her attendant. (Picture this whole story. Show how God can use even the crying of a babe to bring to pass his purposes.

Moses' Education (10).

Begun by his mother, carried on in the Palace, and when older doubtless in the university temple of Zoan; he had the advantage of the highest culture of that age. Stephen said, "Moses was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in his words and deeds" (Acts vii. 22), which the traditions of the Rabbi's and history by Josephus fully corroborate, and yet withal he always worshipped the God of his father's outside the city gates.

Lessons.

I. Trifling means often bring about God's ends.

II. God's plan for preparing a man for a great work.

III. For boys, make the best use now of every opportunity, the Lord may have a special work for you in the future.

IV. For girls. Be obedient, kind, watchful, and thoughtful like Miriam; beware of jealousy and pride, which were, in after life, her ruin. See Num. xii. 1-11.

Cheer for Teachers.

By Rev. William Crosbie, M.A., LL.B.*

WHILE residing in Brighton as minister of Clifton Road Congregational Church, I mentioned one Sabbath evening from the pulpit that I was going to Derby the next day to fulfil a preaching engagement. At the close of the service a gentleman came to the vestry, and asked to speak with me. He was clad in the dress of a civilian, but had the air and bearing of a soldier. His face was bronzed, as if he had been much exposed to the weather, and to the rays of a scorching sun.

The Egyptian War had just been concluded; and the stranger introduced himself with the words, "I am a captain in the army, and have returned home from Egypt; and a soldier of my regiment, who was mortally wounded in one of the battles, charged me with a message for a Mr. Crosbie, of Derby. As I heard you say just now that you were going to Derby, it occurred to me that I might send the message of the dying soldier through you. I came into this church by pure accident. I have been in England only a day or two, and am in Brighton for a little rest and change, and when I heard your announcement about Derby I said to myself, 'Here, perhaps, is my chance.'"

Then, pausing for a moment, he anxiously inquired, "Do you know Mr. Crosbie, of Derby, and are you likely to see him?" "I am Mr. Crosbie, of Derby," I replied. "I used to live in Derby, and was minister for sixteen years of Victoria Street Congregational Church; but am now resident in Brighton, and pastor of this church."

"Well, that is strange!" he answered—"very strange!" There was a look of surprise on his face, and a deep, pathetic note in his voice, as he repeated for the third time the words, "Very strange!" Glistening tears filled his eyes, and, gazing upward, he exclaimed, "Surely God's guiding hand has been upon me to-night!"

Then he told me the story, and his lip quivered with emotion as he spoke. "My brave young soldier's name was McBride, and as he lay dying on the desert sand he said to me, 'Captain, when I was a little boy at home, I was a Sunday-scholar in Derby, and I belonged to a children's class conducted on week-days by Rev. William Crosbie. When you go back to England, if you are spared to go back, will you try and find Mr. Crosbie out, and tell him, with my grateful love, that the lessons he taught me, and the lessons I learned in his Sunday-school, I have not forgotten? They are all present in my thoughts now, and are speaking to me. And will you say to him that I died trusting in Jesus? Captain, I know I am saved!'"

The testimony of the dying soldier and old Sunday scholar had made a deep and saving impression on that captain's heart; and to me it was a precious joy and encouragement, illustrating, strikingly and beautifully, God's promise to the teachers and friends of children: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; and thou shalt find it after many days?" (Eccles. xi. 1.)

Church of England.

The evangelical trustees of St. Martin's, Birmingham, have appointed Archdeacon Diggle as rector in succession to the late Canon A. J. Robinson.

The Executive Committee of the Liverpool Cathedral Scheme have modified their resolution in regard to the architectural style of plans to be submitted for their inspection. The limitation to Gothic has been withdrawn.

Bishop Ingham, rector of Stoke, near Guildford, has received a cheque for £1,000 from Rev. F. Paynter, the former rector of the parish, as the joint gift of himself and his wife to the building fund of a new church for Stoughton. Mr. Paynter has promised to give a further £500 when the church is consecrated.

Southall Parish, now one of the outlying districts of London has greatly increased in population of late. The vicar (Rev. F. Roberts) is now raising a fund for the support of a curate, the C.P.A.S. having made a grant of £80 per annum towards the stipend. New Mission buildings are in course of erection, and it is hoped that they may be ready for use in December.

On the completion of twenty-five years' work at St. Paul's, Onslow Square, Rev. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe was the recipient of an address and a cheque for £2,000 at the hands of his congregation. The presentation was made at a largely-attended social gathering held in the church-room. In response, the Prebendary, after an interesting retrospect of his work at St. Paul's, paid a cordial tribute of recognition to the many friends who had helped and sustained him.

The Bishop of Durham was publicly welcomed to the diocese at a large meeting held at Sunderland on Thursday last. Archdeacon Long presided, and addresses were presented from the corporation, the clergy, and the Nonconformist ministers. The Bishop, in reply, said that he was cheered and gladdened by the welcome given him. His desire was to be faithful, and to love and serve the people. The goal of the Christian ministry is the everlasting love of God, but those who would serve Him must also concentrate their thoughts on the amelioration of human life. Dr. Moule added that he has no programme; he is only a beginner; but he wants to be of use, and to fulfil the supreme purpose of ministry in service.

Congregational.

The money needed for the proposed new building at Blackheath, one of the village stations of Guildford Church (Rev. Alexander Cowe, M.A.), has nearly all been promised, and the church will be opened free of debt, as was another village station last year.

At Knot Mill, one of the almost stranded old Manchester chapels taken over by the Congregational Mission Board, and now one of its successful stations, has been celebrating its Sunday-school Jubilee. A considerable number of old teachers and scholars assembled.

At White Roothing the services in connection with the dedication of the new building were held on Tuesday, October 29, when Rev. R. Partner (Plaistow) preached in the afternoon to a crowded congregation. In the evening Rev. J. E. Rattee (pastor) presided, and earnest addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Edward Flower, M.A., R. Partner, and R. C. Jude. The financial result of the day was £41. This leaves about £50 to be raised.

By invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer and the officers of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, the Principal and professors of Cheshunt College were the guests of the church at a gathering held on Monday week. In the course of an interesting address, Dr. Whitehouse dwelt on the unique founding of Cheshunt (he did not know of another theological college founded by a woman), on the saintly character of its first Principal—Fletcher, of Madeley—and on the missionaries and ministers trained within its walls.

At the sixty-sixth anniversary of Latimer Church, London, E., Mr. W. H. Brown, J.P., chairman of the London Congregational Union presided, and delivered a helpful address. Rev. J. W. Atkinson (pastor) reviewed the work of the church, stating that during the thirty-three years of his pastorate, nearly 2,000 members have been publicly received into the fellowship of the Church. During the evening, the Twentieth Century Fund roll was signed by a large number of the subscribers, and at the close Mr. S. B. Atkinson, LL.B., B.Sc., secretary of the Fund, announced that 300 guineas would be sent by the Church to the central office of the Fund.

Baptist.

A week of prayer for home and foreign missions, deepening of personal piety, Sunday schools, and temperance work and workers, has been held in Leamington Spa Church. The speakers included Rev. A. Phillips (minister) and Messrs. A. Purser and T. Kennard.

Essex Union has submitted to the churches a scheme which provides that in case of any difficulty arising in any Church, threatening division or separation, and thereby impairing the peace or usefulness of a church, an arbitrator shall be called in to settle any dispute existing.

The winter session of the pastor's Bible class for men in connection with Cavendish Church, Ramsgate (Rev. T. Hancocks), commenced on Thursday last. The subject of the study for the session is the Acts of the Apostles. Men of all denominations attend the classes, and are cordially welcomed.

It has decided to purchase a plot of ground at the back of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, costing £1,500. It is thought that this may be needed hereafter for extension of buildings. The church already has £500 in hand (surplus from the rebuilding of the Tabernacle funds), and a further £450 has been promised by the members.

In connection with the settlement at Wilmot Road Church, Swadlincote, of Pastor B. J. Wicks, of the Pastor's College, recognition services have been held in the Town Hall. Principal McCaig, B.A., LL.D., preached two sermons on the Sunday, giving the charge to the pastor in the afternoon, and that to the church in the evening.

The work at Penge Tabernacle, S.E., continues to make good progress. The church, which is large and flourishing, exercises a widely-felt influence for good in the district. The twentieth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. J. W. Boud has been celebrated, and the services were marked by spiritual blessing. The special arrangements included a sermon preached by Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, who founded his words on Deut. xxxiii. 27. At a public meeting, presided over by Mr. G. D. Stapleford, Revs. J. W. Boud, G. Simmons, J. Lewis, W. Winston Haines, and other friends took part. Mr. Chew, treasurer, stated that during the year £350 has been paid off the building debt, and that the financial result of the anniversary amounted to £184.

The Leytonstone Road Church is going forward with much encouragement. On Thursday afternoon last, stones were laid of a permanent building, a school and lecture hall, to anticipate the church proper. The site selected is near Harrow Green, in a district offering excellent openings for aggressive work. It is expected that about £2,500 will be required to cover the cost of hall and furniture, and donations in aid will be thankfully received by Mr. Charles Gull, 56, Worsley Road, Leytonstone. The foundation stones were laid by Mr. H. E. Kershaw, Mayor of Shoreditch, and Rev. John Bradford, minister of the neighbouring church at Fillebrook, Leytonstone. Dr. John Robertson presided over a public meeting in the evening.

Methodist.

The Wesleyan Church at Wyvenhoe, Essex, has secured a new building in a good situation, and surrounded by a rapidly-growing population.

The Forward Movement of the Primitive Methodists at Belfast is meeting with encouragement. Rev. J. A. Smith reports progress in every department. Windsor Congregational Church is to be purchased, and the missionary authorities will provide a probationer to give pastoral oversight.

The foundation-stones of a new Primitive Methodist Sunday School in Ayresome Street, Middlesbrough, have been laid. Rev. G. S. Bowran (superintendent minister) announced that the land, which cost £429 15s. had been paid for, and the schools will cost £800; over £200 was subscribed on Wednesday. The circuit has also bought sites for new churches in Southfield Road and Newport.

The second anniversary of the Wesleyan Mission at Mayfield Road Dalston, was one of spiritual power and profit. On the Sunday, Rev. Thomas Cook preached to large congregations, and at night several decided for Christ. The meetings on Monday were very helpful. Sister Florence and Sister Alison gave interesting accounts of their work among the people. Rev. J. Gregory Mantle delivered a telling spiritual address, and stirring speeches were delivered by Revs. Charles H. Kelly and Thomas Cook.

The Wesleyan Extension work in Leicester, carried out under the direction of Rev. Joseph Posnett and others, is a movement for which many have deep cause to thank God. In ten years the Wesleyan membership in the city has more than doubled, there having been an average yearly increase of over 200. Seven new chapels and mission halls have been erected at a cost of not less than £40,000, and the two circuits have at present large additional extensions in hand. The Church life is strong and vigorous, and the eighteen class-meetings are well sustained.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Hanson, of Marylebone, will not return to London till the middle of January. An important new building scheme is about to be set on foot by the congregation.

Liverpool Presbytery met at St. Andrew's, Waterloo, on Thursday of last week, for the induction to the pastorate there of Rev. Alex. Alexander, formerly of the McCheyne United Free Church, Dundee.

Rev. Hugh Falconer, B.D., of Notting Hill, is conducting a series of services for young men on the last Sunday evening of each month. Strangers are cordially invited both to the service in the church and to the half-hour's social meeting in the hall afterwards.

Society of Friends.

A new meeting for worship has been started at Wood Green in Canning Hall, Canning Crescent. Friends have decided to meet each Sunday morning of November at eleven o'clock, and also to look for a building which would be available for mission meetings in the evenings, as well as for morning meetings for worship. The company of visitors from a distance would be welcomed. An adult school is held in the hall from 9 to 10.30 a.m.

By the invitation of M. A. Marriage Allen about fifty Friends and others recently met at her house in Charles Square, Hoxton, E., to listen to an address by Henry T. Hodgkin, B.A., on Foreign Missions. The lecturer dealt with the forces opposed to missionary effort, giving a brief statement of their principles, and showing how superior to them is the religion of Jesus Christ.

Sussex, Surrey, and Hants Quarterly Meeting was held this autumn at Bournemouth. The meeting on ministry and oversight was held on the evening of the 23rd ult. The duty of watching over members of the Church claimed attention, and faithfulness was urged, especially by the use of a word in season given in love to individuals; while the meeting was reminded of the inexhaustible store of heavenly food ready for the flock. At the quarterly meeting on fifth day, William Hobson took an acceptable part in the meeting for worship, calling for self-surrender, and a willingness to be used at the call of our Lord.

The Salvation Army.

A mansion in Honolulu city, next door to the Iolani Palace, or Government Building, has been secured as a rescue home.

The municipalities of Stockholm and other Swedish cities have entered into contracts with the Salvation Army to care for the poor and distressed. In Stockholm there are now eighteen social institutions maintained by the Army.

Mr. Alpheus Wilkes, B.A., formerly a clergyman, has been giving addresses on the person and work of the Holy Ghost in Warren Road Hall, and Town Hill Gospel Hall, Torquay. There were encouraging congregations who listened with the deepest attention. Mr. Wilkes was asked to continue another week, but he had a previous engagement at Newton Abbot, whither many prayers follow him.

The eighteenth anniversary of the Gospel Mission Hall, Hailsham, Sussex, has just been celebrated. The thanksgiving service was largely attended, and the chair was taken by Colonel Campbell. The mission is carried on entirely by working men, whose labours have borne spiritual fruit. Owing to the development of the work they have been compelled to seek further accommodation, and have rented a room beneath the hall for Sunday school and other purposes.

The fourth anniversary has been celebrated of the C. H. Spurgeon Memorial Mission Church, Erskine Road, Walthamstow, N.E., of which Rev. Robt. S. Eastty is pastor. Rev. Dr. John Robertson preached in the afternoon, and at the annual meeting which followed Mr. F. Hitchman presided, and addresses were delivered by Pastors J. W. Davies, T. Maycock, T. Douglas, and others. The work was commenced in a room in a Board School, and after eleven months' mission effort the present building was erected. The preaching has been blessed to many hearers, and the workers have also delivered the Gospel message in house-to-house visitation.

The annual report of the Newcastle-on-Tyne "circus" services has been issued. It tells of Gospel work carried on in the Palace Theatre with good results, in spite of the draughtiness of the building. "The services are entirely the same as heretofore. We depend wholly upon the power of the Holy Spirit, through the simple word of the Gospel, to win and women 'from darkness unto light and from the power of Satan unto God,' and we are not disappointed, for we consider it a poor service that does not show us some wanderer brought home, and some sinner 'brought from death unto life.' And we have faith to believe that far more good has been done than we have any knowledge of."

The Bethnal Green Protestant Union was formed in April of this year, to which was attached a branch of the Protestant Electoral Hundreds. Good service has been rendered in bringing together Protestants of all sections. The Protestant Laymen's Association was formed in 1899, and has carried on an extensive open-air campaign in many districts of the Methodists on Sundays. These two societies have now united, and are about to open a hall in Bethnal Green for Gospel services, lectures, &c., and it is hoped that friends of Protestantism in the neighbourhood will rally to the support of those who are undertaking this effort. The secretary of the Association is Mr. F. W. Cook, 96, Sewardstone Road, Victoria Park, E.

A mission hall, erected a few years ago at Aylesbury by Mr. James Brandon (President of Aylesbury and District Free Church Council), has been a source of blessing. It has, among other departments of work, a flourishing Sunday school, for the scholars (particularly the young men), of which it is felt desirable to provide a reading-room as a place of resort during the long winter evenings. An old, disused chapel has been bought at a cost of £40, the people, who are nearly all of the agricultural labourer class, raising £30 of the amount. The building has been repaired and fitted by a local friend and opened as a reading-room with signal success. Mr. Brandon much desires to obtain gifts of books for the room. His address is Donington House, Dinton, Aylesbury.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. T. M. KINGDON, J.P., senior deacon of London Street Congregational Church, Basingstoke, aged ninety-one.—Mrs. S. BATTON, an earnest Christian lady, who had been a member of Tiverton Baptist Chapel for over sixty years.—Rev. STEPHEN COX, a devoted Wesleyan minister, who began his labours in the ministry nearly fifty years ago in London and closed his active service in the Bridgwater Circuit.—At Midhurst, Sussex, on Nov. 4, the HON. CONRAD DILLON, a prominent worker in the temperance cause.

Carter, 18, Cranbrook Mansions, South Lambeth Road, S.W.; Mrs Burkitt, Athenry, Ireland.

Personalia.

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES, who has been recruiting at the seaside after his recent severe illness, returns this week to London to resume his mission work. His address is 71, Tollington Road, N.

It is officially announced that the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, who has been suffering from a cold, is now better. Accompanied by Mrs. Temple, the Primate has left London for Canterbury, where he is expected to remain in residence till about the middle of January.

After the conclusion of his mission at Inverness, Mr. HENRY VARLEY paid a brief visit to London in order to preach at the new Haddon Hall, Bermondsey, and then sailed for New York, where he was due to arrive on October 26, and whence he would proceed to Northfield, Mass.

Mr. W. G. POPE, of the North Africa Mission, is spending the winter in England, and is open to undertake missionary or evangelistic meetings for children or adults. At gatherings to stir up interest in foreign work, Arab costume will be worn. Letters may be addressed—21, Linton Road, Barking, London, E.

The announcement is made of the appointment of Rt. Rev. J. TAYLOR SMITH, the earnest evangelical Bishop of Sierra Leone, to be Chaplain-General to the forces, in the place of Rev. Dr. Edghill, who retires owing to age. The new Chaplain-General was ordained by the Bishop of Rochester in 1885, and after serving the curacy of St. Paul, Penge, for five years, was in 1890 appointed Canon of St. George's Cathedral, Sierra Leone, diocesan missionary, and chaplain to the bishop of that diocese. He became an honorary chaplain to her late Majesty in 1896, and has been Bishop of Sierra Leone since 1897.

Dr. EZRA KHAMIS, son of the well-known pastor of that name, having completed his medical course at Edinburgh University, has left for his sphere of labour in Eastern Turkey. From time to time we have called attention to the work of the pastor and the noble aims of his sons. One of these, after training in England, has entered upon Gospel work among the people of Persia and Kurdistan. Dr. Ezra Khamis now repairs to the scenes of his early life—scenes associated with much persecution and suffering—and his purpose is to serve the Gospel cause—in his own words to "win Kurdistan for Christ"

Evangelistic.

A Mission to Epileptics.

A VISIT has been paid by Rev Walter Bradbury to the Colony for Epileptics, Chalfont St. Peter's, Bucks, three addresses being delivered. Five young men, who seemed to regard the visit as a notable event in their sad lives, sought the spiritual help of the missioner. The visit was arranged by the committee of the National Society for the Employment of Epileptics, an organization which should command a greater degree of public interest; for England is behind other nations in care for sufferers from epilepsy. B.

London Tent Campaign.

The ladies' local committees for the visitation of converts have proved a great help to the recent campaign, and, at a meeting held at Devonshire House, E.C., on Tuesday, October 22, after the work of the past season had been reviewed and considered, it was decided to follow up the operations by a number of well-organized efforts during the coming winter months. Mr. G. R. Williams said that the names and addresses of some 4,000 inquirers are recorded. At the suggestion of Miss Grace Pettman it was decided to hold prayer meetings and classes for Bible study for the converts and workers in the various districts where the tent missions were held. Lady Agnes Anderson presided at the meeting, which was of a very encouraging character.

Philadelphia Tent Campaign.

Three years ago the late Mr. D. L. Moody visited Philadelphia, at the invitation of Mr. John Converse, and in the course of the campaign three tents were erected for Gospel preaching. Work on similar lines has been engaged in since during each summer. Last year five tents were in use, and during the past season (June 24-September 9) seven were erected. The members of the committee that directs the work are appointed by two Presbyteries, and consist of fifteen ministers and fourteen laymen, Mr. Converse being chairman. The aim has been to reach as large a number as possible of the non-churchgoing class. This year sixteen districts have been covered by the seven tents. Meetings were held each evening, and also on Sunday mornings, while twice a week there were also children's services. It is estimated that about 15,000 persons attended the meetings each week, and there were many inquirers.

Cecil Hall, Enfield.

A week's mission has been conducted by Mr. Chas. Cook, at Cecil Hall, Enfield Town. From the opening meeting to the close the power of the Lord was manifestly present to heal. On Sunday, October 20, a large gathering of men were present to hear the missioner reasoning on the evils of intemperance, gambling, and impurity, and the baneful results of unbelief. Immediate decisions followed the preacher's telling appeal. Among the self-righteous, more than the openly godless, much fruit has been seen. The Church members, thoroughly aroused to the blessedness of the work of winning men and women for Christ, have been brought to whole-hearted surrender for life and service. We heartily praise the Lord for the visit and ministry of our brother among us.

W. C. Durrant, Hon. Sec.

Mission to the Blind.

A mission to the blind and their guides of London and its suburbs is now in progress, under the auspices of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, the expenses being borne by a lady friend of the organization. The arrangements include meetings at eleven centres, a free tea being provided on each occasion. Those who know most of the blind are convinced that their spiritual condition makes such an effort most timely. Last autumn, the number reached by such a mission was nearly 4,000. From testimony given by the blind themselves, and by letters received through the Society's missionaries, it is clear that blessing was experienced in many cases. Names and addresses of blind persons residing in London and its suburbs, not known to the Society, will be thankfully received at the office, 8, Red Lion Square, Holborn, W.C., or by Mr. W. Mead, Superintendent, 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

Mr. P. Russell Hurditch at Bradford.

A ten days' mission has been conducted by Mr. P. Russell Hurditch at Bradford. On the Saturday evening a large number of workers met to welcome the missioner, when an address was given on prayer and whole-hearted surrender to God.

The first Sunday afternoon service was for children and young people, and the hall was well filled. The second was for men only, when a large number listened with marked interest and attention to a solemn address on the saving and keeping power of Christ, in everyday business life.

At the closing Sunday evening service the hall was crowded, and many had to stand. The meeting was of a most impressive character. The missioner's stirring messages have not only been stimulating to the Lord's people, but weary hearts have found rest in the Lord Jesus. The addresses throughout were sound in doctrine, forcible in argument, and pathetic in appeal.

The Evangelization Society.

During the summer campaign the Evangelization Society, May-November, 210 tent missions have been held, each mission averaging twenty-four meetings. In no previous part in the Society's history—which now extends over nearly forty years—has there been more encouragement.

Mr. John Wood, honorary secretary, writes:—"Every day in the year the Society's evangelists are at work preaching the Gospel of the grace of God, and seeking to honour the Word of God and the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. 'The fables and passing winds of doctrine' find no place and no favour in the minds or hearts of any of its preachers, whose desire is to 'use great plainness of speech,' to avoid mistakes in manner, matter, and doctrine, so that our Lord alone may be exalted, and the work done according to the principles of his Holy Word.

"We are now beginning our winter campaign, and expect to be extremely busy during the next six months taking meetings and missions in all parts of the country at the invitation of our ministerial and other friends, and would ask a prayerful interest that the Lord may ever keep us from the dangers which must beset a spiritual work of this character."

Mr. Ira D. Sankey at West Chester, Pa.

The visit paid by Mr. Ira D. Sankey to West Chester, Pa., early in the present month aroused deep interest, and attracted a large congregation to the Assembly Building.

Rev. W. E. Needham, of the First Baptist Church, in introducing Mr. Sankey, referred to the wonderful revival times experienced in 1877 by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the old depot in Philadelphia, where Mr. John Wanamaker's store now stands, and where it is estimated that no fewer than ten thousand persons sought the Saviour.

Mr. Sankey again referred to "the rumour of his death" which has gained currency, and mentioned that a lady in West Chester had insisted that he was not the original Ira D. Sankey, but his son!

"Saved by grace," and "Pass it on," were among the solos which Mr. Sankey gave. Proceeding, he told of his early work as a Sunday-school teacher, and urged his hearers to stand for Christ at all times. "Had I not followed the religious teaching which I received early in life, I should never have been with D. L. Moody, nor here to-night." In conclusion, Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine." On the following day he visited the day schools of the town, and sang to the children.

Rev. John McNeill's Work.

After a brief visit to the United States, Rev. John McNeill has returned to this country and entered on his winter's campaign. He has conducted a ten days' mission in Johnstone, N.B.; for one week he is meanwhile in the south-east corner of Bridgeton, at the end of Glasgow; and thereafter he goes on to Edinburgh to take part in the United Free Church Simultaneous Mission in that city.

Having seen his Glasgow meetings announced as in Rockcliffe Church, French Street, as we almost groped our way along the dull, dingy, ill-lit street, we could not help feeling that it must test a man considerably to put him into such an out-of-the-way corner. When we had discovered the building, we learned from one of the deacons at the door that it had only been opened two weeks. It rejoiced us on getting inside to find the building, a place seating about 400, nearly full to the door with a decent working-class congregation, though it still wanted fully five minutes from the advertised time for beginning the service. The new structure is part of the U.F. Church Extension Scheme, and as Mr. McNeill said with a smile, they had sent him to help to root it.

He gave an earnest address on "Christ Stilling the Tempest," more particularly addressed to Christians, as he said; and it struck us that if some men of the rationalistic type, who think that evangelicals are bereft of high ethical ideals, had been there, they might have got their ideas corrected. Rev. George Burnett, who has come from Friockheim to undertake the new cause, is an earnest minister of the Gospel, and Mr. McNeill's week's mission cannot but help in giving the new concern a goodly start.

J. C.

We have also received from a correspondent an account of Mr. McNeill's recent visit to America, from which we give the following extracts:—

His work began in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he preached for one week in connection with the Presbyterian Evangelistic Summer Campaign. Seven tents were erected in different portions of the city with most satisfactory results. Great crowds thronged the tents when Mr. McNeill spoke.

From Philadelphia Mr. McNeill went to Grove City, near Pittsburg, Pa., when he spoke for a week at a Bible Conference. He spent one Sunday at Chautauqua, New York, in that great centre of summer intellectual, social and spiritual activity. Mr. McNeill's real objective point in coming to the United States was Winona Lake, Indiana.

At the Bible Conference were gathered nearly 1,000 ministers, and in all possibly 3,000 Christian workers from various sections of our country, especially from the great, populous, and important middle west. These people represent all the leading evangelical Protestant denominations.

In the midst of such a gathering Mr. McNeill was thoroughly at home; it was his great delight to preach to them, which he did once each day for ten days, and with a simplicity, illumination, earnestness, and persuasiveness that won great admiration, and that blessed, strengthened, and inspired all who heard him. P. E. Z.

At the Congregational Church, Hingham, Mr. E. Phillips, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has conducted a series of services in the church and school, with the help of Rev. W. Rees (pastor). The services have been impressive and fruitful.

At Milford Hall, Three Mill Cross, Reading, which is a centre of evangelistic work, Mr. Bob Johnson recently conducted services, preaching on the Sunday and recounting his life story on the Monday. The large building was filled to overflowing.

A fourteen-days' mission at Hogarth Church Mission, Whitehaven, conducted by Mr. Charles Noakes, of the Evangelization Society, has been one of rich blessing. The congregations increased as the mission proceeded, and night after night men and women sought the Saviour.

George E. Dutson, Missioner.

Mr. James Wharton has just concluded a very happy series of meetings at Mr. J. W. C. Fegan's Home Hall, Holland Street, S.E., in which several have decided for the Lord. The meetings, which were well sustained throughout, included gatherings respectively for men, women, mothers, young women, and children, in addition to the general Gospel meeting. The work and workers have had a fresh start for the winter.

Rev. Jesse Mayo, evangelist of the National Free Church Council, has conducted a mission at Haslemere under the auspices of the local Free Churches. The people came in increasing numbers, and were evidently much stirred by the direct and telling appeals of the missioner. The Wesleyans, Congregationalists, and Salvation Army heartily united in the mission, which had a marked effect upon the careless and indifferent. W. H. Stoneman.

Several hundreds of men are employed on the Edinburgh and District Water Extension Works, and the estimated time-limit for the contract is still somewhere about five or six years. We have a devoted missionary working among them, and much good has been accomplished. There have been several striking incidents of blessing, and the Lord's own people have been wonderfully helped.

W. S. Crockett, Minister of Tweedsmuir.

Notes & Comments

"Elisha": "Joseph": "Moses." We invite the attention of our readers to a small volume just published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, under the title, Elisha, the Prophet of Vision (1s.). The papers on the subject, contributed to our columns last year by Rev. F. S. Webster, have been re-written and their number added to. We feel sure that those who recall them in their original form, and many to whom they will be altogether fresh, will find the book helpful and luminous on a subject concerning which there is an appreciable lack of literature. The volume dealing with Joseph: Beloved — Hated — Exalted (2s. 6d.), in Rev. F. B. Meyer's series of Scripture Biographies, is now ready for publication. It is interesting to note that—in its original form, since re-written and largely supplemented—the volume represents Mr. Meyer's first essay in this department of literature. Our prayer is that it may set out on a new career of usefulness, emphasizing for fresh readers the lessons of stainless purity and forgiveness in the life of one of the great heroes of our youthful affections. Sunday-school teachers and others will find in Mr. Meyer's biography of Moses: the Servant of God (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.), valuable and suggestive guidance in the study of the current Lessons of the International series.

Invasion of Friars. The subject dealt with on page 16, under the title, "The Coming of the Friars," is of vital importance. It is no intolerant spirit which leads us to advocate the imposition of safeguards for the public well-being. This is no mere Protestant or even religious question; it is one which involves the peace of the State, and may well alarm the politician as much as the Evangelical Christian.

The New Prince of Wales. The bestowal of the time-honoured title of "Prince of Wales" on the Duke of York on his return home, is a happy and timely event. The young couple have returned home amid universal rejoicings. They have done an immense service to the Empire by the unfailing tact and graciousness which characterized their public and private actions during their long and trying journey round the world. The bond of personal loyalty to the Throne has been strengthened, and the Royal Family, as a medium for the concentration and expression of Imperial feeling, and a symbol of world-wide patriotic sentiment, has once more been proved in a singularly impressive manner. The new Prince and Princess of Wales have won their laurels during this remarkable journey, and deepened the conviction already created by their Royal parents, that, deep as was the loss incurred by the nation in the death of our late beloved Sovereign, some of the best qualities and traditions of her reign will be repeated in her successors.

The Children for Christ. A circular has been issued by the Sunday School Union to all the ministers of the United Kingdom, entreating them to take some share in the great effort which is shortly to be made to win the scholars for Christ. We could wish that every parent might also peruse this letter, for the subject is of the vastest importance. The circular speaks of the trouble which many willingly incur in order to win boys and girls for Christ, but their number is all too small. The hope of the coming generation lies with the children of the present. If the godlessness and indifference which characterize the sires of the present hour are not to be projected into the coming generation, then the children must be saved as children. Concurrently with this circular, the Agnostics have issued a pamphlet decrying all attempts at religious education. The battle is thus openly proclaimed. Every thoughtful parent should awake at once and take the right side in this terrible encounter.

Wayside Service. Perhaps one of the very best methods by which those who, by disposition, are not qualified for more prominent work for God, can labour in his vineyard, is that of tract distribution, with its manifest and manifold ways of reaching the careless and thoughtless who would resent any more personal effort. Yet it is to be feared, judging from observation, that there is a falling off in the number of those engaged in this potent, if old-fashioned, evangelistic work. In thousands of recorded instances the leaflet courteously handed to the passer-by, or to a fellow traveller, or left upon the seat of a railway carriage or public conveyance, has been the means of carrying the message of salvation to one whom it would possibly have been difficult to reach in any other manner. In all properly organized Christian effort tract distribution should be given due prominence.

France and Turkey. France has given to Europe an excellent lesson in the art of dealing with that arch-juggler the Sultan of Turkey. She has simply been firm, with the result that her claims have been at last conceded. Heretofore the Sultan has always triumphed by successfully playing his game of setting the Powers against each other to divert their attention from him. This time one Power alone, without interference from the others, has made this coward yield. No blood has been shed, nor has a shot been fired. If England had only been as firm in 1896, the Armenian atrocities would have been stopped. It is not too late even now to insist upon justice being rendered to the Armenians. A determined attitude on the part of only one Power would soon have its effect.

The Prevention of Indian Famine. The Conference held last June by a number of gentlemen interested in Indian affairs, with a view to suggesting methods of preventing the famines which periodically afflict that country, resulted in the formation of a Famine Union. This has now presented a memorial to Lord George Hamilton, the Secretary of State for India, calling on the Government to "make a detailed inquiry into the economic conditions of a limited number of selected villages in each of the famine districts." It is to be hoped that this reasonable and necessary preliminary to any policy of prevention will be granted. It is probable that a great deal can be done to forestall the terrible suffering and loss of life which these visitations always bring with them. One of the chief causes which oppress the peasantry in India is the existence of an iniquitous system of money-lending, which results in the majority of the farming population being permanently disabled from providing for these "rainless" days. We are responsible for the good government of India, and if, by a reforming policy and a better system of irrigation, we can prevent this periodical loss of life, it is our bounden duty to do our part.

Bengal's Judgment of us. The action of the Bengal Government in absolutely prohibiting the employment of English women as barmaids, is a complete turning of the tables upon those who have freely criticised the kind of life which prevails among the natives in India. This new movement has been made in deference to the natives, who regard the spectacle of a "Christian" girl selling drink as one of the extremest degradation. It is the first time that any such thing has been attempted out of deference to native prejudices, but it is none the less significant. If the natives could freely express themselves upon a great many of the exhibitions which Europeans offer to them, we should hear something to make our ears tingle. It is scarcely surprising to find that the Gospel makes so little progress amongst the people. What missionaries preach is flatly contradicted by the manners of many Europeans; and natives, always quicker to discern practice than mere doctrine, make their choice accordingly. But it is an extraordinary thing when heathens have to give us points in matters of sobriety, and in the guardianship of our women.

Hopefulness in Russia. It would seem that Russian opinion is at last awakening to the demand for religious toleration. At a recent missionary conference, held to discuss steps for proceeding against heretics, a leading noble, M. Stachovitch, protested against the harsh measures in vogue, and said it was high time for Russia to concede to all the invaluable prerogative of liberty of conscience. Though the proposal was rejected by the conference, it was taken up strongly in the secular press, which has published luminous articles on the value of liberty in matters religious. This is a hopeful sign, and the fact that the papers that have ventured on this courageous step have not been suppressed, as would inevitably have been the case in earlier reigns, is a tribute to the new spirit which emanates from the Czar, and which is beginning to permeate downwards as well as to rise up from beneath. When toleration becomes a fact in the Russian Empire, a great future will be opened to the Russian people.

"Lest we Forget." Speaking a few days ago at the mass meeting on Christian Imperialism, held at the People's Palace in the East End of London, Bishop Tucker, of Uganda, took occasion to utter some notable words in regard to the righteous development of the empire. He said, after a reference to the terrible past in Uganda, with its persecutions and massacres, its murder of Hannington, and its butchery of Christians:—

Think of the vast lake region and its tremendous needs; think of the great Sudan without one missionary; of the long ages of moral and spiritual darkness, of the degradation of its men, and the sufferings of its women, its thraldom to Islam, its ignorance, and cruelties, and cannibalism; and then think of what Christian Imperialism means. I would venture to define it simply. It means the bringing of Jesus Christ to all these suffering men and women. It is, then, the sovereign remedy for the sins and sufferings of that world which knows not God.

This is the ideal. The practical result will depend upon how far Christianity permeates the Imperialism, or the Imperialism sets at nought Christianity.

Religion Versus Ethics. Mr. Balfour's profound warning in his speech at Glasgow against attempting to "take refuge from the difficulties of positive religious teaching" in what has been called "the perfectly safe ground of ethical moralizing" is none the less weighty because it comes from an unexpected quarter. The author of "A Plea for Philosophic Doubt" is far from being an advocate for "organized doubt" in the teaching of religion, and therein he shows himself a true interpreter both of religion and human nature. Those who imagine that people estranged from "dogmatic" religion are likely to be saved from sin and uncertainty by the kind of teaching given in Ethical Societies and such-like pale reflections of Christianity, are pursuing a will-o'-the-wisp policy. As well may we expect to extract heat from the beams of moonlight as to secure religious stimulus from moral maxims. The human heart demands a religion, and no substitute can take it far or satisfy it for long. The "ethical" tendencies of some preachers are responsible for a great loss of spiritual heat in their congregations.

Creed and Conduct. We are glad to notice the emphasis with which some of the most prominent preachers are insisting afresh upon the true connection between morality and belief. Ever since Matthew Arnold informed the public that "conduct is three-fourths of life" it has been the fashion, in certain circles, to make light of belief in favour of creditable "conduct." Hence the great contempt affected by so many for those who hold a definite faith. The weak-headedness, however, does not lie with those whose good conduct is consciously ruled by their faith, but with those on the opposite side. It is impossible to separate thought from action in responsible beings. Thought rules action. Men do because they are. If a man believes—in the true sense—badly, he will not long act well; but if he truly and fairly "believes" he will act well. Belief that purifies the heart and directs the mind, is necessary to all true abiding "conduct."

Sanctity in Common Life. With the revival of teaching concerning Christian sanctity, there has come a danger of separating life into distinct parts, between which there can be no commingling. We know of some very estimable people who never will vote at elections on the ground that it is "worldly," and that their "citizenship is in heaven." Yet if all Christians held this view, the country would soon become unbearable. If it is not wrong for Christians to enjoy the benefits of organized, civilized society, it cannot assuredly be wrong for them to aid in securing them. We can hardly estimate the blessings that would arise if men like the late Lord Shaftesbury, Samuel Morley, &c., were multiplied in Parliament. The Bible idea of sanctity is expressed by the prophet in the remarkable words: "Every pot in Jerusalem shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts." True holiness is the answer to our Redeemer's prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in Heaven."

Confirmed Drunkards. The second annual report, issued by the Home Office, in regard to the working of the reformatories provided under the Inebriates' Act, is not very pleasant reading. It shows that it has been found necessary to provide another building—the fifth — with accommodation for 200 more offenders, and that the number of females who come under the Act is largely in excess of the males, the proportion, unhappily, being about eight to one. In addition to these places, however, there are twenty-two "retreats," with accommodation for 357, and a large number of "licensed institutions" for private patients, with about 500 inmates, and many "unlicensed homes." One of the saddest features of the report is that the list of confirmed inebriates includes four young women under twenty-one years of age, each of whom had been brought up in an atmosphere of drink. Numbers of the offenders, too, return again after their discharge, having "relapsed." Yet the temptations to drink are being increased on every side, and the distiller and the brewer receive ever-increasing consideration.

Feeding the Fire. Everyone who is in any degree familiar with the condition of things in the Sister Island, must be painfully aware that the temptations to drink in Ireland are almost overwhelming, the facilities for obtaining intoxicating liquor being out of all proportion to the population. It is almost incredible, therefore, that at recent sessions the magistrates have thought proper to grant more licences in the face of protests from the constabulary and other witnesses. In one village, with a population of only 593, already provided with twelve public-houses, a fresh licence was added, so that now there is a drinking place for every nine families. It is stated that at Thurles sessions alone eleven new licences were granted. The certain result will be that, in a country full of drink-created poverty, and with a large amount of crime traceable to intemperance, there will be a further increase of misery and vice. Apparently in Ireland, as in England, the executive is blind to the real causes of national poverty and disgrace. Real "Justice to Ireland" demands an effort on the part of its rulers to lessen the ravages of drink.

What is the Christian Sabbath? The action of the Presbyterian Synod of New York in burking a resolution censuring increasing laxity in the observance of the Christian Sabbath, on the ground of the difficulty of defining what the "Christian Sabbath" really is, cannot be regarded as a satisfactory treatment of a supremely important and practical question. If Christian people cannot read the teaching of the New Testament with sufficient clearness for a basis of common agreement, is it any wonder if the world outside takes increasing liberties with the Lord's Day? The difficulties of the situation are not likely to be decreased by an attitude of "non possumus" on the part of those who profess to follow the Bible as their supreme guide. A definite stand should be taken by our religious leaders in a matter which has such far-reaching consequences. If their ideas are confused and uncertain, is it any wonder if the growing generation show an ever-increasing laxity? We fear that this confusion is not confined to those on the other side of the Atlantic.

The Defeat of "Tammany."

ONE of the greatest events of the year is the signal defeat of Tammany Hall in the contest for the Mayoralty of New York. That iniquitous institution was thrown out of power seven years ago by the Reform Party, but regained its hold of the government of New York in 1897, through the mistakes of the reformers during their term of office, and a slackness in their organisation at the time of the elections. This time, the shameless coalition between Tammany Hall and all the forces of vice and lawlessness has aroused a deep-seated disgust throughout the whole of the United States, and created a revulsion even among the corrupt police under its control.

The election of Mr. Low to the office of Mayor gives a signal opportunity for the sweeping of the Augean stable of corruption with a cleansing stream of reform. It is to be devoutly hoped that he and his party will avoid the mistakes of the earlier reformers, and unite statesmanship with zeal, and wisdom with enthusiasm.

New York is a long way from London, and American and English politics are widely sundered in idea and practice; but it will be well if the English nation takes warning from the condition of local government in America, which has arisen through the fact that business men in the States have delegated the government of their cities into the hands of professional politicians, on the plea that they cannot attend at once to private and public affairs.

Politics as a profession have always led to corruption and bad administration. So far, it has been a tradition in this country that voluntary public service is honourable in all men; and it is clear that there is a better chance to maintain purity and disinterestedness in public affairs by this method than the other. When to this is added a close watchfulness on the part of the public, and a determination to repress sternly any tendency to tamper with evil ways on the part of its representatives, we have the best possible guarantee of purity in administration and policy. It is not easy to do this in these days of large and ever-increasing cities; but it is the only real safeguard of public life.

The manner in which the victory came about must also be carefully noted. Heretofore the elections have been fought on political lines, always to the advantage of Tammany; but this time moralists of all parties have sunk their differences in the effort to rid New York of the infamous incubus which has been choking its best life. The wound thus inflicted may become, as we hope it will be, deadly, if only the same spirit is maintained amongst the reformers. The shame of New York thus passes like a horrible nightmare, and we rejoice in it doubly: first, because of what it means for that city, and secondly, because of the hope which it gives to workers everywhere. If Tammany Hall can be overthrown, any other base governing power may be broken. Would God all our workers might combine against our Tammanys.

Practical Papers.

On Friendship—1.

EVER since the days of Adam, the human heart has endorsed the saying, "It is not good that man should be alone"; and no utterance from the Divine lips has been more cordially accepted as true. To be left alone is a child's horror, and, as soon as they can walk, tiny mites indicate their preference for some, more than others, of their baby playmates, as a rose unfolds its petals to the lily at its side. First comes the instinct of companionship, followed quickly by that of selection; and ere the first Christmas party is over, vows of eternal friendship have been freely pledged.

And so it goes on; at school, at play, as childhood ripens into youth, lads and lasses join their young hearts together for better or worse. Sometimes, alas! the worse prevails.

Boys and girls, men and women, all crave friendship—not of numbers but of one, for some one who may be called "mine own familiar friend." How vividly we remember when, in days gone by, life was deemed not worth living unless spent in the company of some such chosen friend—not necessarily of the opposite sex, but boys with boys, girls with girls, sharing each other's joys and sorrows, dolls and rabbits, fun and mischief, and sticking to each other nobly through evil and through good report. Many a true comrade has since then gone from us, but the impress of their friendship will ever remain—a hallowed memory of "the touch of a vanished hand" and "the sound of a voice that is still."

"Two are better than one," quoth the Preacher; "for, if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow; but woe to him that is alone when he falleth, for he hath not another to help him up" (Eccles. iv. 9, 10).

Friendship is a most important factor in life, which can either make or mar, bless or curse our whole career. Roughly speaking, there are three kinds—Firm, False, and Foolish—good, bad, and indifferent.

Of the third class little need be said, there are so many of them—friendships which spring up with all the swiftness of a rocket, emit a shower of sparks, and fall unregarded as the stick. They have their day—a short one at the best—and pass away. They do no harm, they do no good; their life is momentary, their decease calls forth no regrets.

But to the second class more reference must be made. Fair they began, but, alas! they ended false; theirs, not a happy memory, but one wet with the tears they have caused to flow.

A typical example of such a friendship is that of Amnon, a son of David, and his cousin, Jonadab. They had grown up from boyhood together, and no doubt indulged in many an escapade such as lads of all lands and ages delight in. But a cloud passed over their fair sky. Many a secret had they exchanged in their childish days, innocent enough maybe; but as they got on in their teens their confidences took a darker hue. Jonadab is described as a "very subtle" youth; one who evades a look straight in the face, whose furtive glance betokens constant fear of some hidden sin being brought to light. And when one day Amnon told him of his base desire, Jonadab fanned the flame of passion in his cousin's soul, with fearful results. Two years after, Amnon paid the penalty with his life, at his brother Absalom's hand.

And what of Jonadab? When the news of the tragedy first reaches David's ears, in the exaggerated form that "Absalom hath slain all the king's sons," Jonadab comes forward in his treacherous, fawning way, and says, "Let not my lord the king take this thing to heart, for Amnon only is dead." "Only Amnon! He's not worth weeping for! He was weak enough to yield to temptation, and fool enough to be found out. I never thought much of Amnon! Why mourn for him? Rejoice rather in those that live, who have not sinned, or, if they have, have been clever enough to escape detection."

There is the false friend—the one who leads you into sin, and then scoffs at your shame; who pretends to think so much of you, praises, flatters, leads you into wrong-doing; and when punishment looms in the distance gives you a wide berth, rounds on you, and with bland hypocrisy disparages your conduct and mocks at your name. But shall he go free? Surely not. In this life or the next God will judge him: it were better that a millstone had been hanged about his neck, and himself drowned in the depths of the sea, than that he had caused his friend to stumble.

A loud warning bell many old proverbs strike,
Of "birds of a feather," and "like draws to like";
Show a man your companions, he'll tell you what you are,
If you dwell among tarpots, you'll smell of the tar!

Does your spirit revolt at the idea of playing such a part? Stay, are you really true to your best Friend—Jesus Christ? You will not deliberately betray Him—no. But is this true of you—"Some of his disciples went back, and walked no more with Him"? Have you ever heard addressed to you the pathos of his pleading, "Will ye also go away?" There are Jonadabs and Judases around us to-day, and (almost worse) a countless throng of unnamed disciples who, from some cause or other, "walk no more with Him." Jesus Himself gives the test, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

God's Shadowland.

(Psa. xxiii. 4.)

By Rev. JAMES LEARMOUNT.

SINCE the Shepherd died for the sheep, death is abolished. There is no death! It is the valley of the shadow of death. This "valley" is only dark as all other great changes in life are dark; there are always doubts and fears and forebodings about the unknown. The valley of night is now our reviving time; and so this last passage revives for ever. The darkness and its blessings produced this "Nightingale Psalm." The darkness is always doing something for us. Light and shade are the absolute necessities of life. No man can be perfected by sunshine alone. The shadow must darken our life. Sorrow's cold winds must search; care must sit at our table; pain will ransack every nerve; we are made perfect through suffering. Yet—

The dark hath many dear avails:
The dark distils divinest dews;
The dark is rich with nightingales,
With dreams, and with the heavenly muse.

Queen Elizabeth, irritated by a pitiless and unflattering effect of light, commanded the artist to paint her portrait without shadows. It was done, but the picture appeared without features. Life itself is just like that. Not a line of the dark shading can be spared; we need every cloud that God rolls up over our lives. But if, when we are under the cloud, we trust God, then every shadow, every line of care on the face, will be a line of his own making.

A converted Japanese artist, speaking of English and Japanese art, said that he supposed the reason why English artists put so much perspective into their drawings was because Christianity had given them a future; and the reason why Oriental artists failed to do so was because Buddha and Confucius did not raise their eyes above the present. He was right. The shadows, the great tribulations, are to us significant of an exceeding and eternal weight of glory to come. Even the shadow of the valley of death is the shadow of heaven; we go through it, and as we go the "shadows flee away," and dissolve into the shadowless brightness of our Father's home.

Do you ask me the place of the valley?
In hearts that are laden with care;
It lieth afar between mountains,
And God and his angels are there.

Yes, God is in every event of the Christian's life. He never leaves, never forsakes. This truth is the bright light in the clouds in every valley experience—in the ghostly, weird, shadowy moments of life. He is the light of the valley. He is the star reflected on the face of the cold waters of the Jordan that flows through every valley, even the valley of the shadow of death.

The shadow valley gives us a sweet aspect of death. We naturally make for the shady side of the street. The heat is so many degrees less, the glare of the light is gone; the eyes are rested, and we can look upon all the glory of the light in comfort. So God says to us, "Come into the shade, this valley leads to the Gloryland, and here you will gradually become accustomed to its light. We will walk through this valley together, and as we walk the light will break, the wide-open gates of pearl catch the sheen of the sea of glass mingled with fire, and, as we advance higher, we shall see the Lamb who is 'the light thereof,' and we shall be at home."

I remember visiting an old lady who was dying of slow mortification. Something had caused an accident to one of her toes. She was dying by inches. I was going from home for a fortnight, and never expected to see her again. Before leaving I prayed with her, and was led to ask in my prayer that she might have her Jacob's ladder, and that the angels might comfort her. To my surprise, when I returned home the old lady was still alive, and eager to see me. "O Mr. Learmount," she said, "I am glad you have come! You remember praying that the angels might come and comfort me. I looked for them for three days. They never came; but on the fourth day suddenly the room was filled with angels. and they sang, oh! such beautiful music. It is beautiful dying—it is beautiful dying!" There is no death! That is not dying! No, the only shadow is on the empty cradle, on the vacant chair, the little shoes, in the mother's heart, not with those we call dead. The shadow is with the living. We cry here; they laugh in heaven. We do not see things as they are. By and by we shall know Jesus, know his loving heart, know that all things worked together for our good.

In one of his letters, John Newton tells of a good woman who was dying. She had no happiness. Another woman, visiting her, said, "Are you happy, to-day?" "No," she said. "Happiness does not come to me." "Are you afraid to die?" "No! if it is my Father's will to put me to bed in the dark, it is all right; a child would be put to bed in the dark by its mother or father, sooner than in light by strangers." She was in the shadow valley—in the dark compared with some others; but, oh, what sight she had of God. Christ gave up his life in the dark, and the cry "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" was wrung from Him. But He also had clear vision of what was being done under that Calvary cloud, and He, knowing the love of the Father, was able to say: "It is finished"—in the dark!

So I am watching quietly,
Every day;
Whenever the sun shines brightly,
I rise and say:
"Surely it is the shining of his face!"
And look upon the gates of his high place
Beyond the sea;
For I know He is coming shortly
To summon me.

And when a shadow fall across the window
Of my room,
Where I am working my appointed task,
I lift my head to watch the door and ask
If He is come;
And then the angel answers sweetly
In my home:
"Only a few more shadows,
And He will come."

*The Witness of the Spirit.

THE witness of the Spirit is too little regarded: his power and his presence in the Church of God have ceased to be expected and recognised in signs and wonders. While the fulness of the truth in doctrine has been set forth, our absolute dependence on the Third Person of the Godhead for the application of that truth to the hearts and consciences of men has not been fully recognised. He is admitted as an influence for blessing, but not always as the One whose prerogative alone it is to enlighten the eyes of the understanding, by impressing the mind, by guiding the steps, by comforting the heart, and by warning and reproving the conscience.

The gifts which were once manifested in the Church of God are seen only at distant intervals and for brief periods. When they are beheld, they create such suspicion and amazement as to beget the cry that went out aforetime against our blessed Lord, "He deceiveth the people." "Neither did his brethren believe on Him." And yet the rivers of living waters, which were to flow from the hearts of them that believed in Jesus, were promised only from the Spirit's life-giving power.

The happiness that burns in the heart of those who walk with God here is the foretaste of that which they look forward to enjoy in its fulness for ever—to live with Him in unbroken fellowship; to be like Him; to delight in Him in whom the Father delighteth; to hear his voice; and to behold the King in his beauty; never more for shattered nerve and quivering flesh to act as a cloud on the perception, or the shadow of sin to obscure the free revelation of Himself. Oh, this is bliss unutterable! And now, even now, with eyes and ears so often dull, and heart and feet so often failing, is not this the desire born of the Spirit in the heart—to "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth"?

And you who read, is this your desire? Then lose not the blessed privilege which He has given you of approaching the King at all seasons. Assure yourself continually of your oneness with Him, and welcome the witness of the Holy Spirit in your heart. "And hereby we know that He abideth in us, by the Spirit which He hath given us" (1 John iii. 24). If you do this, you will find a speech and language in things otherwise indifferent, but in which He delights to reveal Himself to them that love Him. "Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord" (Jer. xxiii. 24).

Many a sweet love message will then be distinct to your heart, and tokens of his guidance and tender care will be read in his light; and these oftentimes from sources insignificant and contemptible to those who are wise in their own estimation. In the presence of the Holy Ghost, in the temple of God, there is nothing common or unclean; for "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God;" and He has said, "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He will direct thy paths."

The Lord is not acknowledged in all the ways of his people, and therefore they remain in sad uncertainty whether He does direct their paths. It is not to acknowledge Him in all our ways, to ask for light upon our path, and then to neglect the watchfulness needful to follow Him in it. We are not to do the Lord's work deceitfully (negligently), and when we eat the fruit of our own folly to say, "It is the Lord." "Thou shalt be perfect [margin, upright, sincere] with the Lord thy God" (Deut. xviii. 13). From a lack of the witness of the Spirit, they who are thus negligent lose the blessed companionship of a Friend who sticketh closer than a brother; One in whose wisdom, and faithfulness, and power, they may alone continually and safely confide.

The natural heart would have secrets of its own; it would fain, if it could, keep out of its counsels the Lord who searcheth it, and hide its ways from Him. Fear, and shame, and unbelief, clothe the God whose name is love with the attributes of vengeance to the sinner. The soul rejoicing in salvation rests even in tribulation on the faithful love of Him whose eyes are over the righteous, and whose ears are open to their prayers. Have you been tried by oppression and misconception, where you thought you had the best right to look for kindness and sympathy? Acknowledge Him in it, and He will show you that the hearts of men can be turned by his almighty power, or used as the means to hedge up your way. Christ's love changes not: it is a blessed reality. Barter not his precious smile, his sweet companionship, for any earthly possession. Child of God! communion with the Father and the Son is your birthright.

* From The Secret of the Lord, by the late Mrs. Shipton. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

The Late Mrs. Anna Shipton.

"She spake of Him" (Luke ii. 38).

She spake of Him with tongue and pen,
In words that travelled far;
Her Saviour Lord was Shield and Sun,
And Bright and Morning Star.
And rose upon her eager soul
With deep and holy power;
And much she sought to tell his love
With every passing hour.

She spake of Him, and so would we Take up this grandest strain,
And pass it on, and tell it out
Again, and yet again.
Her cup of pain was often full,
Yea, reaching to the brim;
But sweetest solace oft she found
By speaking oft of Him.

Recording how his gracious heart
Would soothe her woe and care;
And how his faithfulness was proved
In many an answered prayer.
And now she sees Him face to face,
Where tears no longer dim;
Oh, let us follow in her train,
Because she spake of Him!

Lucy W. Parker.

THE FUNERAL SERVICES.

With a simple service, such as was in keeping with the views of Mrs. Anna Shipton, her remains were laid to rest on Friday last.

Some forty of her personal friends attended the service at the Baptist Chapel, St. Leonards, conducted by Rev. H. Rodger—not that Mrs. Shipton was a Baptist, for her sympathies were broader than any denomination; indeed, many of her most intimate friends never knew to which, if any, she belonged; neither did she, in the ordinary sense of the term.

It was felt, therefore, that her spiritual life had been of such a character as to call for something other than a formal burial service at the cemetery chapel. She herself had been in a marked degree informal as to her religious worship, and her spiritual experiences were of such an exceptional order that only a service in accord with these would have seemed fitting.

After Mr. Rodger had read appropriate portions of Scripture, prayer was offered by Mr. G. B. Osborn-Howe, who with Mrs. Osborn-Howe, has been a close friend of Mrs. Shipton for over twenty years. The predominant note was one of praise for long-extended service rendered to the Christian Church by the gifted writer (whose books and correspondence have penetrated well-nigh to the uttermost parts of the earth) rather than of the sorrow of such as have no hope. Upon the memorial hymn-sheet was the following extract* from a book of poems by herself, "Whispers in the Palms":—

Farewell, until the shadows flee away!
Farewell, my loved one; it is sweet to say
"Till our next meeting"; there no pain can come,
Nor partings dim the glory of our home.
We'll meet again—where God's redeemed ones dwell,
Where nevermore shall sound the word "Farewell."
Oh, joyful hope! for then I shall have gazed
On my Incarnate God; I shall have raised
To him these heavy eyes, tearful no more,
And faith be lost in sight. My grief is o'er.
Farewell till our next meeting; it will be
Where Christ, not Death shall veil thy face from me.

It seemed almost like her own voice speaking the sentiments she would have expressed, and no words could have come to those present with more assurance of comfort and hope.

Had Mr. R. C. Morgan, an intimate friend and adviser of Mrs. Shipton for over forty years, been in England, he would no doubt have conducted the service, and thus have fulfilled a long-cherished desire of this departed saint.

In his absence, therefore, a brief address was given by his son, who paid a grateful tribute to Mrs. Shipton's memory. The earliest recollections of his childhood had been associated with her, and from the days of the "Child Minister" she had taken the keenest interest in the family and all its members. He felt he was only voicing the thoughts and wishes of those who had known her best in saying that her life, though clouded by much physical suffering, had been full of very remarkable opportunities of witnessing for Christ. In the years past, before finally taking up her residence in England, she had, while travelling abroad, been brought into contact with people of many nationalities to whom she was able to speak concerning her Saviour—persons who, humanly speaking, were outside the ordinary range of religious influence, and upon whom the very unexpectedness of such conversation had all the greater effect. In various parts of the world are to be found those who have been helped heavenward by words spoken, or written in book or letter. Although she has gone from our midst to the land where suffering is unknown, her words and works do follow her.

The hymns sung at this service were "Sleep on, Beloved, Sleep, and Take thy Rest," and "Out of the Shadow Land" (the hymn composed for the memorial service to Mr. Moody). From the chapel the cortège proceeded to the Hastings Borough Cemetery, some four miles distant. Here the service was designedly brief, and by Mrs. Shipton's own request, her favourite hymn was sung—"The Sands of Time are Sinking." Needless to say the hearts of those who had known her best were filled with deepest sorrow as they bade a final farewell to the departed friend whom they had known and loved.

* To be had on a neat letter-card, "Farewell, till our next Meeting." (4d. per doz. Morgan & Scott.)

The Late Mr. J. R. Chase, Birmingham.

ON October 14, after years of acute suffering, borne with heroic Christian patience, entered into rest, Mr. John Rowe Chase, third son of our former partner, the late Mr. Samuel Chase. His consistent life and endearing characteristics were eloquently attested by the large concourse of sorrowing friends at the graveside. Vividly realizing himself a trophy of redeeming love, when ill-health permitted public speech, his earnest, unassuming testimony and heart-felt words would powerfully move his hearers. In private life he was greatly beloved. His submissive spirit under exceptional trial recently found utterance in these lines composed for a friend:—

"STORMY WIND FULFILLING HIS WORD."
(Psa. cxlviii. 8).

The stormy wind fulfils thy Word—
Help me to grasp that truth, O Lord,
And bow my head before the blast;
So shall the roots of faith hold fast
Till, losing faith in sight, I find
That love was in each stormy wind.

Mr. Chase was in his forty-fifth year, and leaves a widow and three children.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, November 17. 1 Timothy i.

THE relation of the Apostle Paul to Timothy is an example of one of those beautiful friendships between an older and a younger man in which each is a complement to the other (1 Cor. iv. 17; Phil. ii. 22). Timothy was a lad of fifteen when converted at Lystra, and probably about thirty-five when this Epistle was written. He was enthusiastic and devoted, but sensitive, and at times gave signs of timidity. The Apostle watched over his character with tender interest, and in this is an example to all older men in their behaviour with the younger generation.

In this chapter the young minister is warned against the Gnostic heresy, which was the last attempt of Judaism to injure Christianity. At first it spent itself in opposing and blaspheming from without the Church. Then it entered the Church, and tried to make the Church Jewish by foisting the Mosaic law upon it. Lastly, it became a heresy within the Church, and pretended to give revelations as to the names and genealogies of angels, to lay down absurd ascetic rules, and to invent and forge a number of counterfeit doctrines. The Jews tried to bridge the chasm between the finite and the infinite, between the creature and the Creator, by genealogies of beings which were wholly mystical. Hence the words of the Apostle (4 to 7). Worse than all, their doctrine led to spiritual pride and sensuality; for they counted the body as inherently evil. One school taught the necessity of starving the body into submission, and another taught that the body might be abandoned to sensual indulgence, while the soul might still serve God. All this was contrary to healthy doctrine. The word healthy is peculiar to the Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim. vi. 3; 2 Tim. i. 13; iv. 3; Titus i. 9, 13; ii. 1, 2, 8).

How touching is St. Paul's tribute of thanksgiving to the Saviour, whose love had not been turned away by all the evil that he had done to his Church! Notwithstanding all, he had committed the holy Gospel to his custody. If Paul was saved, other sinners may have hope. If the bridge will bear the elephant, certainly the ass or colt need have no fear to venture.

MONDAY, November 18. 1 Timothy ii.

The first duty which the Apostle insists on is the duty of Christian worship, of intercessory prayer, and of perpetual thanksgiving. He does not mean, of course, that intercession must always come first in prayer, or that it is the first and most important duty of the Christian; but he puts it first because, as the previous chapter indicates, it was so much to himself.

Three different words are used for prayer, showing that there are many ways of approaching God; and that there may be an infinite variety in our method of dealing with the various questions that we pray about.

Christians should not forget public questions, since they so largely affect the life of the Church and the individual; and all men should come within our cognizance, as we stand on the mount with God and look down on the great world beneath. The whole race is one, because there is one God who made man; and one Divine Redeemer, by whom the whole race has been ransomed; and one Divine way to blessedness. Let not our prayers be selfish, but infused with the Spirit of Jesus Christ, whose outspread hands included all who should believe, and all who needed his salvation!

In the early Church the men were called upon to pray, and were bidden to lift up "holy" hands, free from the taint and pollution of sin; while the women joined quietly, after the Eastern fashion. There was nothing revolutionary in Paul's teaching. He was content in minor matters to conform to the general usages of his time, though he promulgated the doctrine which would revolutionize the position of womanhood, and lift her to stand upon an equality with man. The very fact that woman has given to the world the world's Redeemer after the flesh, is sufficient reason why in Christian circles she will be viewed with marked veneration and devotion:

TUESDAY, November 19. 1 Timothy iii.

This chapter concerns the officials of the Church. It was one of Timothy's most important and necessary duties to take care that those who ministered to the Church should be beyond reproach. The condition and tone of a Christian community are to a very large degree those of the leaders. Let all readers of these words, who may be called to public office, kneel down before the Lord with this portraiture of his servant in their hands, and ask that each lineament may be reproduced. Much as John Bunyan owed to the ministry of holy Mr. Gifford, "whose doctrine," he says, "by the grace of God, was much for my stability," he owed yet more to his consistent and elevated character, which he paints in imperishable colours on the walls of the Interpreter's House, and again in pen and ink in the person of Evangelist.

The bishop of the early Church was, as R.V. margin suggests, the overseer or presbyter (Acts xx. 17, 28); and there were several such in each church. The minister of God's holy Gospel must not only be irreproachable so far as the outside world is concerned, but exemplary in his domestic relations. Such was the facility of divorce which prevailed among the Jews and Romans, that it was a common thing for a man to have more than one woman living who had been his wife, and this as a violation of the primal marriage law would be a barrier to exercising the holy offices, unless the separation had been brought about by a clear violation of the marriage tie (Matt. xix. 9). Notice how often those words grave and temperate occur: the effect of the best sermon will be spoilt if a man yields to foolish levity and wine-bibbing over the supper-table. The women referred to in verse 11 are probably deaconesses.

The Church of God is the pillar which maintains the truth of the Gospel before the eye of the world, and is the ground on which it rests. To her custody is committed the mystery of godliness (vi. 3), which is recapitulated in the six remarkable clauses which follow.

WEDNESDAY, November 20. 1 Timothy iv.

This chapter deals with latter-day apostasies. The history of the Church, as our Lord foretold, is the history of tare-sowing on the part her arch-enemy. The Holy Spirit, by the Apostle, here puts us on our guard as to the outward appearance and seductive guile of false teachers. False doctrines are not necessarily ungodly doctrines. On the contrary, they often seem to be holy—stricter, and more heavenly than those generally in vogue. Christianity teaches that marriage is honourable in all, while these forbid to marry. The Word of God insists that that Word and prayer are the only tests of the lawfulness of our use of the creature, while these invent a number of self-imposed abnegations and austerities.

The minister of Jesus Christ must be daily nourished with the words of Christian truth. If he is not fed on Christ's body and blood (John vi.) his teaching will soon show signs of deterioration. He must also exercise himself in godliness, as the gymnast attempts difficult feats and exercises, in order to drill and educate the various muscles and sinews of his frame. How much we may be rebuked by the assiduous painful attention which gymnasts, acrobats, and jugglers give to the culture of the body; why are we so careless of the development of the resources of the soul and spirit? Note these reiterated exhortations to stedfastness and the like—Be diligent, give thyself, take heed, continue. In keeping the vineyards of others, let us be careful of our own. What we are is the greatest sermon we can preach.

THURSDAY, November 21. 1 Timothy v.

The minister of Jesus Christ is happiest when he introduces the tone and manner of Christian family-life into the Church (1, 2). The attitude of the son and the brother is peculiarly befitting. But he must always keep up the high spiritual tone. It is so easy to descend to frivolity and familiarity. Remember that all intercourse must be in the spirit of the words—in all purity.

The special references to widows are consistent with the early practice of the Church, that provision should be made for elderly godly women, who had lost their husbands by death, and who in return for their weekly gift from the church funds gave themselves to Christian service. The Apostle indicates clearly the age and characteristics of those who might be eligible. It was his clear judgment, however, that, wherever possible, it was becoming for the children to make such provision as would put their aged mother or relative beyond the reach of want and beyond the need of claiming maintenance from the church funds.

The younger women's sphere must be in the home. This is the noblest work of all, and wherever it offers it constitutes a prior claim. But whatever the path that you, my sister, follow, whether it be that of ministry to the world or to the home, see that you never turn aside after Satan, who deceives Eve still by the bait of marriages in which there is neither love nor God. Evidently the early churches were encouraged to support their ministers (17, 18); but what circumspection was needful in their election and management (19-22). It is clear that the Apostles and their helpers were total abstainers, else there had been no need for 23.

FRIDAY, November 22. 1 Timothy vi.

Note the tender relationship that should subsist between Christian employers and their Christian servants, as is indicated in the words, "believing and beloved" (2). But where there is no such tie, the attitude of the Christian servant is unmistakable. The Divine Master is served in the dutiful heed to the commands of the earthly. Here are exhortations to the rich, to those who have made up their minds to be rich, and to the poor. The first class must beware lest they trust in uncertain riches rather than in God who gives them, and must act as stewards for others (17). The second class must beware lest they are swept into a whirlpool, from which they will be unable to extricate themselves (9). The third class are urged to be content, to accept their lot as by the Divine appointment.

The man of God is not to concern himself with these things. He looks not for earthly but heavenly treasure, and is playing a part in the world's arena of which God and the angels are spectators. His high charge is destined to culminate ultimately in the light, which is unapproachable by those who have not washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. To stand there attested and accepted, is his one lofty and unchanging purpose (11-16).

SATURDAY, November 23. 2 Timothy i.

This is the last epistle of the Lion-heart, who was probably awaiting sentence from the Emperor Nero. He had already had audience with him, and escaped (iv. 16); but there could be no doubt as to the ultimate issue. Now, in the fatal Mamertini dungeon, exposed to the chill ague of its damp walls, reeking with pestilence and the miseries of generations of condemned criminals, the servant of Christ awaits his Master's summons (iv. 6, 13).

He longs to see his beloved son once more. He is eager that he should stir up the dead coals of his ardour, in which there was fire but not enough flame. He reminds him of their high calling, which was in Christ before eternal ages began to run their course. He asserts that even in his own immediate experience death was abolished, and the door stood open to immortal blessedness. We are reminded of Dr. Payson's last rapturous utterances, and of Bunyan's Land of Beulah.

But how striking the reference to the double deposit, as though there had been an exchange between his Master and himself. He had committed to Christ the eternal interests of his soul, which he was sure that He would keep; whilst Christ had committed to him his holy Gospel, which by the grace of the blessed Comforter he was also pledged to maintain inviolate. Let us so guard it. F. B. M.

In Southern Russia.

IV.—From the Frontier to Baku.

WHO has not heard or read of the Russian Steppe, with its unbroken unity, its weird monotony, the home of a melancholy poetry, as expressed in the Cossacks' songs? For hours, and even days, one sees nothing but a vast plain, wooded and fruitful, in the black-earth belt which forms the connection between the north of Russia and the Steppe proper; but the further south one penetrates, the more wearisome is the aspect, the scantier the growth of trees, until they entirely disappear.

Time is evidently not money in Russia. Express trains move leisurely, and stop frequently, affording ample time for food and exercise. The officials are good-natured, and not easily impatient, but among them bribery is not unknown. "In Germany," said a lady, "the conductors do what they like with the passengers. In Russia, the passengers do what they like with the conductors."

After a journey of two days and three nights without taking off our clothes, we reached Rostov-on-the-Don, next to Odessa the best-built city in Southern Russia, where we enjoyed a longed-for Sunday rest.

A TERRIBLE STORY.

On our way we had passed a village where lived a man whose story is terrible, though at eventide it is light. He had been a Nihilist, and his comrades suspected him of being a spy. One day two of them said to him, "You are on dangerous ground. We will take you to a place of safety over the frontier." They walked on either side of him, and led him to a lonely place, where they stopped, and one of them drew out a bottle of vitriol and threw it in his face. It destroyed his sight, burnt away his lips and almost his whole face. He lay there until found and taken to a hospital. A Christian brother who visited the patients found that this man covered up his face and would not listen to anything he said. After a while, however, he relaxed his obstinate mood, and at length asked that he might be spoken to, and proved the truth of the promise, "Hear and your soul shall live." Count Bobrinski heard of him, and took him into his house and family in order that he might be an example to his children. After that he settled in a village between Rostov and Vladikavkas, and taught the blind to read. He wore a green veil over his face. Yet he found a Christian wife and has a family.

Proceeding on the Monday, we continue our journey towards Vladikavkas, which lies at the entrance to the grandest road known across the mountains, and arrive at our destination on Tuesday night.

RUSSIAN HOSPITALITY.

The following morning we receive a call from a fine, tall young man, who invites us to accompany him to his father's house. On the way we enter the Greek Church Convent, where we are courteously welcomed and thanked for our visit by the abbess, an elderly, simple-hearted, quiet-mannered lady. Everything is open to inspection; no window-bars, no walls; the rooms pleasant and well-lighted. In the dining-hall the sisters are assembled at their mid-day meal, and glance curiously at the intruders. Among them is an old man, probably a poor visitor, to whom hospitality is extended. While they help themselves with big wooden spoons to the food, another sister stands and reads to them from the Gospel of Matthew. They evidently have a more pleasant life than their Romish sisters; they engage in sewing, fancy-work, candle-making, attend to the garden and house-work, and are sent out to tend sick people, and to pray and sing on special occasions, such as burials, &c.

Our kind hosts are Stundists. The father, a well-to-do business man, had been banished to Gerüsy on the Persian frontier. It was there that Dr. Baedeker met him. He proposed to him to leave his fatherland for a freer country, but the banished man would not hear of such a thing. "Leave Russia? Never!" "But what will, what can you do?" objected his friend. "We can pray," was the reply. "For whom?" "For the Emperor and the liberty of the Gospel." Dr. Baedeker never refers to this conversation without tears in his eyes, "for," says he, "his faith was stronger than mine." The believing prayer of one deprived for five years of wife and children has already been partly answered. He and his brethren in the Lord enjoy, for the time being, a certain amount of liberty which, though forbidding every kind of propaganda, allows them to worship God according to their own conscience. While we were there, two heavily-bearded Cossacks dropped in, who, on being introduced as brethren in Christ, saluted the doctor and my husband according to Paul's instructions "with a holy kiss."

Another proof of Russian hospitality was brought that same afternoon by the daughter of a surgeon, whose parents invited us to tea. We found Dr. Baedeker already there. His acquaintance with this charming family was one of those travelling incidents which turn into a friendship by the mere exchange of kindnesses. The whole family except the father, whom duty detained, came to the station the next morning to see us off, bringing flowers and refreshments for the journey.

"My child has received so much kindness while in England," said the mother, "that I feel I could do anything for English people." Her eldest daughter had learned the language in our country, and so had the young gentleman mentioned above. Both had brought back pleasant memories of their stay. This may encourage us to continue sowing seeds of kindness, even if there be no prospect of our reaping the harvest ourselves. In this case we reaped what others had sown.

Our next halting place is Petrovsk, a little town, the chief attraction of which is a large prison, which we reach late at night, and leave the following evening for Baku, a city with over 150,000 inhabitants, and many nationalities. It has belonged to Russia since 1806, and is the most important trading place on the Caspian Sea. Then we come to Baku, of which more in our next letter. W.M.

Indian Medical Women.

THE medical school for native women which was opened six years ago at Ludhiana (Punjaub) has filled a most useful place in the province. It is recognised by the Government as a medical school, and eleven societies have sent students for training. Twenty-seven of the students have now gone out to work in connection with seven missions, thirty-four are at present in training, and numerous applications are received for such workers. The students are taught by women, consequently studying apart from Hindu and Mohammedan male students, and receive their clinical instruction in a hospital for women.

As the school is not yet affiliated to any university, the students are only eligible for the government examination for hospital assistants, and not for any university degree. Yet there are many well-educated Indian girls who would be able to take medical degrees, qualifying them for holding responsible posts in the mission field, and who would be allowed by their parents to do so if they could study at a women's college. The University of Lahore is willing to affiliate the School as soon as three more members are added to the teaching staff, and when good laboratories for anatomy, chemistry, physiology, and bacteriology, &c., have been provided. The hundred hospital beds required to ensure sufficient clinical teaching are already established.

In order to build and furnish these laboratories and an operating theatre, and to supply the outfit and the passage of the extra members of the staff, a sum of £5,000 is needed. The honorary secretaries are the Lady Macnaghten, 198, Queen's Gate, S.W.; and Miss E. Brown, M.D., 120, St. James' Road, W. Croydon, Surrey.

Jews in Hamburg.—Rev. D. H. Dolman (London Jews Society), Bürenalee 6, Wandsbek, Germany, will be thankful if friends would send papers and magazines of an evangelistic nature, or books on the deepening of spiritual life and Bible study, for the work among Jews in Germany.

The Indian Famine.

ACCORDING to official intelligence, the outlook in parts of India is becoming increasingly grave owing to the insufficient rainfall. In a recent message, Lord Curzon spoke of the gloomy prospects in the South Punjaub, and districts of Central India and Rajputana. We need to remember, too, that there are thousands of famine orphans, the cost of whose maintenance and education presses heavily upon missionary organizations, constituting an important claim upon Christian generosity.

Rev. J. C. Lawson, of Aligarh, says:—"I have received word from one of my preachers at Hansi, in Hissar District, Punjab, that in nearly all the tahsils of Hissar District there is famine. The grains on which all depend, juar, bajra, &c., have entirely failed. The fields have all dried up because no rain has fallen. Although in this section the people have not indeed left their houses as yet, nevertheless they are in very great distress, and it is thought that in the cool season now at hand they will without doubt forsake their houses and lands. In the Bazar, a large section of country bordering on Hissar district on the west, acute famine prevails, and the poor people there have forsaken their houses, and have begun to wander towards the Punjaub. Many have reached the vicinity of Hansi, and may be seen lying down underneath the trees. Without doubt the famine will be very severe."

Mr. Thomas A. Bailey, of the Mission to Lepers, sends an interesting extract from a missionary's letter, in which the situation is described as follows:—"The interest of former givers seems to be waning. Most of us do not know what we are going to do to feed the orphans. I have at present 115 boys and girls for whose mere board and clothes I am in debt over 1,000 rupees, and for whose housing I owe twice that sum. I have sold my bicycle and the buffalo and horse, and have advertised my tonga (country conveyance). The children should prove a very strong addition to the Christian Church." Mr. Bailey adds:—"Let us lose no time in relieving the pressure which rests on the noble band of men and women who are bearing this burden."

From Rev. Oscar Michelsen.

IN a recent letter from Tongoa, New Hebrides, Rev. Oscar Michelsen says:—"I am keeping fairly good health, though I feel very much the strain of the work, which I now have to do single-handed. I have been busy with the road which I propose to make right across the island. I hope shortly to go over to my station on Epi to erect a church, for which the material has all been landed.

"The gathering in from heathenism was completed when 'Cannibals won for Christ' was written, so the work to be done now is one of consolidation. Up to the time we left for Europe, the people 'came in like a flood.' Their feeling at that time must have been something like that when Jerusalem and all Judea and all the region round about Jordan, went out unto John. By degrees Christ as He is would gradually be understood by them; and then, naturally, 'many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with Him.'

"While none ever went back into open heathenism, there came a time of sad worldliness, when they enjoyed the temporal blessings of the Gospel, and were satisfied. Now there is the quiet work of influencing the people, and winning them one by one to a personal acceptance of the Saviour, and from worldliness and all other sin. It is by far the most trying work, because the result is not so tangible as when the paint is being washed off their faces, and the heathen drums are no longer heard."

Gifts of Literature.—Mr. Charles Brider, Gospel Book Mission, Wilton Place, Salisbury, acknowledges having received from A. T. Worthing a parcel of "Pilgrim's Progress," "Loving Words," and "Roger's Reasons."

Re-entering China.

THE special interest which attaches to the return of missionaries to China after the massacres, was abundantly evident at a meeting held in Exeter Hall last Friday evening. Seventy-six members of the China Inland Mission have already sailed, or are about to leave, for their field of labour, and the occasion was a valedictory service with twelve of the latter company. In opening the proceedings, the Chairman (Mr. W. H. Seagram) touched the hearts of many of his hearers as he referred to the gatherings held under the dark cloud of sorrow at the loss of beloved friends and relatives. There was equal responsiveness as he passed on to show the lessons which God has been teaching his Church, with emphasis on the responsibilities as well as the encouragements of the present position of affairs.

BLESSING AMONG MISSIONARIES.

In the course of an account of his visit to China last winter and spring, Mr. Walter B. Sloan (secretary) recalled the gratitude with which the missionaries gathered in Shanghai received the messages of sympathy which he had been commissioned to convey to them by friends in this country. It had been a great privilege to meet with larger numbers of the members of the Mission than had ever before been gathered together in one place, and to have some share in that time of rich blessing.

When at Hankow early in the present year Mr. Sloan met Rev. Dr. Griffith John, who, in the midst of war and tumult, expressed a firm belief that before the close of the year the China Inland Mission would be again at work in every province which they had previously occupied. While sharing this confidence with regard to most of the districts, Mr. Sloan had been doubtful about Honan and Shansi. Now, however, faith had been vindicated. One by one, consular restrictions had been withdrawn; and passports had been granted even to three ladies to return to Shansi, where the worst of the massacres took place. He wished that those who question the sending of ladies could have witnessed the joy with which one party received the official consent to return to their much loved work on the Quang-sin River.

The speaker had himself received a special impetus when, in conversation, Rev. Arnold Foster described a vision which had come to him. He dreamed that he had visited the home land, and instead of all the indifference and lack of sympathy for the work of the Lord abroad which meet home-coming missionaries, he found Christians everywhere on fire for the extension of the Kingdom. Taking this as prophetic of the future, Mr. Foster's own spirit had been refreshed. Mr. Sloan had been strengthened in turn, and now called on all friends to keep this ideal before them in their intercession before the Throne.

HOW THE MISSIONARIES FEEL.

Having been asked by a number of friends, "How do you feel in going back to China after all the events of the past two years?" Dr. William Wilson said, "(1) We all feel that the time has come when it is right to go, because obstacles have been removed." In a letter written at Pao-ning-fu, during a feast at which the crowds had always previously been rowdy, Bishop Cassels reported he had never known the people so quiet and respectful. (2) For himself it was a special joy. Two years ago it had been announced to all around that the dispensary at his station would be opened on the fifteenth day of the seventh month; but on the fourteenth day they were obliged to leave. Many months afterwards they learned to their amazement that God had preserved their property from pillage and destruction. (3) They go back hopefully, "because in the persecution the Gospel has proved itself to be the power of God unto salvation." Yet they go (4) more deeply conscious than ever of the need of power from on high; nothing else is of any avail.

PROBLEMS OF THE FUTURE.

As one of the original party of missionaries who went out in the Lammermuir, Mr. W. D. Rudland told how when—in the Week of Prayer in 1866—petitions were being offered for the opening of China, India, and Africa to the Gospel, Mr. Hudson Taylor remarked, "We are glad to hear these prayers, but I have a firm conviction that China is open if only the missionaries would go forward and enter the doors." Now the country is open again; but during the persecution and war a great change had been wrought in the Native Church. For the first time the Europeans had been withdrawn, and the whole work left in native hands. In future they will take a more prominent part, and the missionaries must stand back. Yet the natives will have to be trained and led and guided, and much wisdom will be needed.

"If ever China is to be evangelized it will not be by Europeans, but by native Christians; but that does not mean that we need no more Europeans. We need men and women apt to teach, who believe that the Bible is the Word of God, and who believe that God can, and will, bless that Word. I believe we are going to have such an ingathering as very few missionaries dared to hope for."

Miss R. Arnott pleaded for medical help for the women of China; and was followed by Mr. A. Argento and Mr. H. S. Conway. Among others who took part in the meeting were Dr. Baedeker and Mr. Albert Head.

Belgian Missionary Church.

THE Belgian Missionary Church is sending, as it does every two years, a delegate to visit the churches in England. His mission is to obtain help, both from churches and from the many friends who, from year to year, contribute to the support of the work. Pastor Léonard Hoyois, the delegate in former years, is this year prevented from visiting England by reason of ill-health; hence this year Pastor Charles Jung, who is perfectly able to speak English, is the delegate appointed.

The general secretary of the Missionary Church, Pastor Kennedy Anet, writes: "Our work is increasing every year. The Lord is leading us, and laying on our hands a most encouraging but heavy task, and this year, in particular, we are greatly in need of assistance. We closed last year's accounts with a deficit of £230. Our total annual expenditure is about £8,000. Our congregations, though composed for the great majority of workmen and miners, contribute £3,300. In order to pursue our work, we ought to receive annually £4,700 from our friends in various countries."

Buenos Ayres Y.W.C.A.

WRITING on behalf of the Buenos Ayres Y.W.C.A., Mrs. Milne (hon. vice-president, 718, Corrientes), says that "at the last census the population of the city was very nearly a million. Our little Home is in a retired district, inconvenient and little known. The latter defect might be remedied; the former not so easily, on account of rent—a very large item here. The income is raised principally by donations, the membership not being large, and the membership fee insignificant. Generally speaking, the Home meets its own current expenses, and pays the matron's salary. All the officers are honorary, and, like the members of the committee, have home and other duties, with only limited time to give to the affairs of the Association. We have kept out of debt, but the rent becomes more and more difficult to raise, and we are weary of a struggle which the present meagre results hardly seem to justify.

"Two alternatives seem now before us, namely, to close for all the good we are doing, or move the home to a more central position, and put the work on a broader basis. It is painful to think of closing. We have the nucleus of a work which might become many-sided and far reaching. With a well-equipped Home in a good position, dominated by the Spirit of Christ, inestimable good might be accomplished among American and English women, hundreds of whom are here alone, seeking to make their way in the world.

"Sunday desecration is everywhere. There is a regular business in bringing young girls here for immoral purposes under false pretences, and other strong currents of temptation abound, before which many fall, and against which it is hard to stand alone. Who among the Lord's stewards in America and England will send or help send 10,000dols so that we can buy or build a Home of our own?

The Late Rev. James Wall.

HIS LAST MESSAGE.

THE need of a simple witness to the marvellous grace which our Heavenly Father ever bestows upon his faithful children, as also the thought of many personal friends and supporters of the Roman mission who are naturally anxious to hear something of my dear father's last days upon earth, have prompted these few lines even while the burden of sorrow is still heavy upon our hearts.

During last summer, and almost on the eve of his falling ill, my father spoke of the difference between the end of the believer and that of the ungodly, likening the last days of the Christian to a beautiful summer evening, which, with the gathering shadows, only unfolds the majesty of the starlit heavens; whereas the end of the unbeliever is like a growing darkness when heavy clouds exclude all beauty, and fearful doubt destroys all peace.

To as many as have stood since then at his bedside, there can be no doubt that he had fitly described his own approaching eventide, in which, like the soft light of distant stars, the peace of spiritual communion was ever present, and found expression in striking words of truth.

Amid great suffering there was no complaining, and often as his mind might wander, concerning things of earth, it never failed to respond to any word of Christian experience, or of spiritual comfort.

CALM AND RESIGNED.

The medical attendants were impressed by his wonderful calm and resignation; the thought of death seeming rather to comfort him than to excite any sense of alarm. "Heaven is so beautiful," he said once, "and everything there is so much better, that I can hardly wish to remain here; but if the Lord wishes me to serve Him any longer I am quite willing to do so." It was his greatest comfort during the latter part of his long illness to be at home in Rome. "Here I am in the midst of those who love me, and whom I love;" and often did he inquire about the various branches of the work, or the attendance at the meetings in Lucina. His faith in the Italian Mission continued to the last: "Christ needs Italy, Christ loves Italy. Fear not, Christ will conquer Italy for Himself. Italy has great difficulties to contend with; Italy must pass through great trials, but Italy will rise again in Christ."

To a distant friend, also in great affliction, he was anxious to send a last message by telegram: "It must be strictly scriptural," he said; and then, after a moment's thought, he added, "How beautiful are the towers!" evidently referring to Psalm xl. 8. To the medical man he presented a copy of Holy Scriptures, and dictated these words to be written on the fly-leaf: "In the hope of a communion which will not be interrupted." To the evangelists and workers he sent this last message: "Communion higher, higher, ever higher!" After which he only added, "And now I shall go to sleep." Resting in the arms of his Saviour, without a sigh, he fell asleep, only to awake in his likeness and to see Him as He is. James Wall's last hour: the Scriptures given to an Italian, the finger pointing higher, higher, ever higher!

J. C. W.

Industrial Missions Aid Society.—Mr. H. W. Fry, a director of this society, recently paid a visit to Ahmednagar and inspected the new carpet-factory which has been erected there. He reports that the building appears most suitable and substantial, and that the workers are delighted at the change from the old place, which was comparatively ill-adapted for the delicate work carried on. The carpets in stock were of excellent quality. It is proposed to open offices in Bombay, and to take steps to extend the Society's work generally in India.

The Coming of the Friars.

A Romanist Invasion.

A CONSIDERABLE share of public attention was, during the past summer, directed to the passing of the French Association Law for the regulation of religious "congregations." The choice was presented to them of being registered at a Government office, to which they were also to submit annual statements of their accounts, or of having their institutions closed by the authorities, and their financial interests compulsorily wound up. From the outset it was realized that the effects of this action would be far-reaching, not only for France, but for other countries. Certain of the smaller orders have complied with the requirements, and remain in undisturbed possession of their houses and lands; but, led by the Jesuits and Dominicans, the great majority have—as had been foreseen—preferred voluntary exile and considerable loss of property to revealing their internal arrangements.

ALARM IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

The United Kingdom and Holland seem to offer the readiest refuges for the dispersing friars. In Belgium the Roman Catholic bishops have imposed restrictions on such additions to their flocks, which are practically prohibitive. Several of the Swiss Cantons have explicitly denied entrance, and Germany is taking steps in the same direction. Even in Italy the adoption of precautions is being planned.

Large bodies of the monks and nuns have sought asylum in Spain, where the laws are entirely favourable to Roman Catholic institutions. The authorities on the frontier report parties entering daily; and while most of them go to the convents and monasteries of their respective Orders, others have bought land for building in different provinces, where they intend to settle. They will organize their communities under abbots and abbesses, as in France. Though they have been kindly received by the Roman Catholic community, Spanish Liberals and Republicans are much displeased at this fresh influx, coming immediately after the return of monks from the Philippines.

LANDING OF FRIARS AND NUNS.

REACHING BRITISH SHORES.

The first British possessions to take alarm were the Channel Islands. Vigorous action taken in Guernsey to prevent the settlement of these uninvited guests has been followed by an Act forbidding "persons of foreign nationality forming part of any religious order if more than six in number, from settling in Jersey." In addition, members of Orders already in the island must register themselves and accept supervision.

In the Isle of Wight a considerable addition has already been made to the population in this undesirable fashion, special provision having been made for their reception by their co-religionists. It has always been a source of deep satisfaction that refugees and the victims of oppression from any country could be assured of a welcome on reaching British soil; but, in view of the present development, many who are neither fanatics nor bigots earnestly wish that some step could be taken to enforce safeguards resembling in some degree those laid down in France.

In a letter to The Times, Sir H. H. Howorth has pointed out that the demands made upon the Orders did but imperfectly disguise the real reason for the exclusion of some among them. The demand made for registration of their communities, and for details of their internal economy, with an additional proviso that they should ask for authorization from the Government, may, he says, have had no terrors for some of the Orders; but it was otherwise with the Jesuits and the Passionists. They, "in France at all events, have been powerful agencies of political propaganda, and have made themselves notorious rather than famous by their more recent policy. . . . They are reaping what they have sown. They have worked above and below ground assiduously to undermine not one French Government or another, but to overturn the Republic, and have fostered the most bitter race and religious animosities. In pursuance of this latter policy they have been very badly advised in the line they adopted about a recent most famous trial in which the conscience of many Frenchmen was wounded, and the word Dreyfus is written large across their memory. They, and they alone, are responsible for the new revolution, if it be one."

DANGER AHEAD.

Appeals have been made to the Government on the subject, but have elicited only the curtest acknowledgment. Yet the situation is of the gravest character. Those who did not confine themselves to spiritual ministrations in France are not likely to do so in England. Moreover, our institutions and religion are much less to their liking than those they have left. On principle we would maintain an open door for all comers; but such an arrangement is only reasonable where the incomers are not dangerous to the commonwealth, and are willing to accommodate themselves to the common law. This the Jesuits have never been content to do in any country, and we have no reason to expect that the Ethiopian will now change his skin or the leopard his spots.

The Protestant Alliance has decided to take legal action in the matter of this "invasion" of Britain. The Catholic Emancipation Act, 1829—which is still part of the law of the land—provided for the registration of "Jesuits and members of other religious Orders" then resident in the kingdom, and for the banishment of such emigrants. This has, however, been allowed to fall into abeyance through official and popular indifference to the serious nature of the issues involved.

A CALL FOR SUPPORT.

There have been many signs of renewed Roman Catholic activity during recent months. The agitation for a change in the form of the Royal Declaration on accession to the throne is quiescent for the time, but may be expected to burst forth into activity in the next or some early Session of Parliament. The defeat of the Government's plans for the improvement of the condition of women employed in laundries because they threatened to interfere with the freedom from inspection of certain Romanist institutions, was a sharp object-lesson in the tremendous influence exerted in this country by Romanists and their supporters. Now a great addition is being made to the machinery at work in this direction, and God's children may well sound a loud call to prayer that the forces for evil may be restrained. Our people must be stirred up to a new and continued watchfulness, for the enemy will be ever on the alert, well knowing how to appear quiet, while ready at any moment to take full advantage of any circumstance that is calculated to favour their nefarious plans.

The Condition of Spain.

ROMANISM AND REFORM.

NEVER was the condition of Spain so unsettled as it is to-day. In the past revolutionary movements seemed to have some coherent shape, and even long before a pronunciamiento, men were able to predict the form it would take. Now Spain is distressed, overtaxed, overtaken by a bad harvest, as well as industrial stagnation. Everyone is discontented, and nobody knows what will happen. The only movement that can be safely predicted is an attack on monks and friars whenever the minds of the people become excited, and violence towards the religious Orders is the regular outcome of a strike or a Jubilee procession in a large town. The exactions of the friars have made the people angry, and the fact that factories of different kinds in various parts of Spain have been started by them under the advantageous circumstances that they pay no taxes, has alienated the working classes, whom they undersell. The leading newspapers discuss the religious question as the question, and in some papers articles advising the people to turn from the study of Roman superstition to that of the Bible regularly appear. In one case, at least, the advice is given by a Roman Catholic priest, who was brought under the influence of the truth in a congregation of the Spanish Reformed Church.

Twice on one day the writer narrowly escaped being mobbed as a suspected French friar in disguise; the wrath of the populace is no longer vented upon the Reformers, whose churches escaped injury during the exciting scenes.

Slowly but surely, in Seville, Madrid, and Cigales (the stations visited), the work of reform is advancing, and the schools especially are much more flourishing than ever before. The faith of the members puts English Christians to shame, and although the same striking advances noticed in Portugal are not observed, competent judges say the dawn of real religious liberty is at hand.

All that the Protestants can do towards their own support they do willingly, and the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society (Church House, Westminster, S.W.) helps in the payment of the salaries of ministers and teachers, who bravely, amid much discouragement, carry on the work of the Gospel.

Scottish Bible Work.

Mr. WILLIAM J. SLOWAN.

A DIFFERENT generation from the one which first welcomed him now knows Mr. William J. Slowan as one of the secretaries of the National Bible Society of Scotland. From the early years of the nineteenth century there were local societies in different parts of the country whose aim was the circulation of the Word of God among the people; and, beginning in 1846, repeated efforts were made for the securing of union on a national basis. In 1860 this was in large measure secured, and Mr. Slowan was invited to Glasgow as the first secretary of the Society. It was, however, not till the following year that the Edinburgh Society cast in its lot with the new organization, and the National Bible Society of Scotland was established on its present comprehensive basis, with head offices in Glasgow and Edinburgh, the late Rev. Dr. William H. Goold, of the eastern city, being Mr. Slowan's colleague in the secretariat.

From his native city of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Mr. Slowan brought a record of much useful work accomplished on Christian and philanthropic lines. His sympathies had at an early age been enlisted on behalf of the Ragged Industrial Schools, of which he was for nine years honorary secretary, acting also for three of these years as treasurer of the Shoeblack Brigade. The testimony of Rev. Dr. J. Collingwood Bruce, in 1860, was that any society in the town which could enlist his active support was considered to be assured of success. As was natural, the heart which had so fully gone out to the English children did not remain indifferent to the needs of their brothers and sisters farther north; and Mr. Slowan's name was soon well known to those in charge of such organizations as the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society, the Sabbath School Union, and Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes.

Nearly all the directors and officials who were in office when the young secretary went to Glasgow, have now entered into their rest and reward. Among those whose warm friendship in these early days he will never forget were the late Rev. Dr. Somerville, Rev. J. W. Borland, Dr. James Mitchell, and Mr. John Henderson of Park. Dr. Somerville and others accompanied him on several of his early deputation tours, introducing him to his new sphere; but very quickly he accommodated himself to his surroundings, and drew round him a wide circle of attached personal friends and hearty supporters of the cause which he advocated wherever he went. A cause is more and larger than its officials, yet the extent of its usefulness is always limited or widened by its good fortune, or otherwise, in the men appointed. This Society's methods and plans are deeply marked with the impress of two men, Mr. Slowan and Dr. Goold, each of whom felt that he enjoyed a great privilege in having the other for a co-worker. Being in many respects men of different types of character, each seemed to be the complement and certainly was the trusted adviser of the other. On Dr. Goold's lamented death in 1897 the vacancy was filled by the appointment of Rev. James S. Nisbet, who for twenty-one years previously had acted as travelling secretary.

The impetus which the union gave to Bible work in Scotland may be estimated from the fact that the associated auxiliary societies have grown from fifty-two to 327 in number, in 700 different parishes, and their contributions from £923 to £7,275. The average annual giving in Scotland for the diffusion of the Scriptures has increased from £1 per 1,000 of the population to £4; the foreign expenditure from £731 in 1862 to £20,198 in 1900; the total income from £8,000 to £28,647; and the issues from 103,610 to 941,535. The total circulation from 1861 to the close of last year amounts to 19,979,892.

In no department of Christian work is overlapping more carefully guarded against than among Bible societies. The relations between the British and Foreign, American, and Scottish Societies are of the most intimate, and mutual consultation is regularly practised among them. To the larger associations has, of course, fallen the principal share of translation work. In certain fields where Scottish missionaries predominate, their own society has, however, been privileged to meet the need. To name a few such cases, the United Presbyterian missionaries in Old Calabar have been provided with the Scriptures in Efik Akunakuna, and Umon; the Livingstonia workers of the Free Church of Scotland in Chinyanja, Ngoni, Mwamba, and Tonga; and the Church of Scotland's representatives at Blantyre in Manganja. At present a joint committee is engaged on a united version which it is hoped will cover the ground of the Chinyanja and Manganja versions, and at the same time act as a unifying influence. Among other interesting versions may be mentioned Tannese, for the New Hebrides; one for the Torres Islands in the South Pacific, and another in Paulician for a people in the South of Hungary.

One of the Society's greatest spheres of usefulness was opened up when the board accepted Dr. Griffith John's invitation to publish his versions in simplified Wenli and Mandarin, which have made the Scriptures intelligible to millions of ordinary readers in China as they never had been before. Led on step by step, the Society has also been the pioneer in providing marginal references, maps and illustrations, and such simple and non-doctrinal annotations as are recognized by missionaries from all parts of China to be sufficient to remove difficulties which references to Jewish and Old Testament subjects must always present to the heathen reader.

The friendly relations of the Bible Societies have been carried to the highest point in Japan and Korea, where the work is done under joint committees, the societies providing for the expense in fixed proportions.

As a home mission, the Scottish Society has always found a special field in the provision of Gaelic Scriptures for the Highlands and Islands, as well as for other regions where Gaelic is spoken. As a Colonial mission it has sent during these forty years 985,605 Scriptures to the British Colonies.

As the result of an interesting calculation it has been found that each shilling contributed to the funds may be said to send forth a Bible or New Testament, or a penny to issue a Gospel in one or other of the many languages covered by the Society. For the guidance of friends who prefer to join prayer and effort in the maintenance of individual workers, we mention also the fact that for £10 a year a native colporteur can be supported in China or India.

On the celebration, in 1885, of Mr. Slowan's semi-jubilee in office, the then chairman of the Board (the late Rev. Dr. R. S. Scott) found that the wish to take part in a testimonial was shared in all parts of the country, and by persons who, with many divided interests, held in common a deep love for the Bible along with their high esteem for a worker who directed its wider diffusion. For fourteen years Mr. Slowan was a member of the Foreign Mission Board of the United Presbyterian Church, acting for seven of these as chairman of its western committee. With a keen eye for the possibilities opened up by last year's Church Union, it has been an added joy to take part in that event, and to continue a member of the United Foreign Mission Committee.

Among many public appearances, Mr. Slowan took part personally in the missionary conferences in London in 1878 and 1888, and though unable to attend that at New York last year, he contributed two papers to the proceedings, which were read by deputy. His services for foreign mission advocacy are more in request than his official duties well allow. Repeated opportunities for acquiring special information on missionary questions having been afforded, and fully taken advantage of, as early as 1869 by a tour through Spain, when that priest-ridden land was being opened up for the first time to Protestant missions, and in subsequent visits to the Continent, while in 1883 a commission was given to accompany a missionary deputation throughout Kaffraria. In 1888-89 Mr. Slowan made a tour round the world, the main object in view being to inquire into possibilities for extension in China and Japan. The results were most satisfactory, and in China at least—helped by its excellent staff of agents and the possession of a printing press at Hankow—the Society occupies a position which has for some years taxed its resources to the straining point.

Mr. Slowan has been a contributor of missionary and other papers, in prose and verse, to various journals, though they have mainly appeared in the columns of the United Presbyterian Magazine. In 1893 he prepared, at the special request of the Mission Board, a handbook on Kaffrarian Missions, which has filled a useful place among the home congregations.

A Neglected British Field.

ARE the Christian people of the British Isles aware of the fact that there is a territory under the British flag 450 miles long by 600 miles wide, and a population of about 15,000,000 heathen, for whom the Free Churches of Great Britain are doing absolutely nothing? Yet this territory is within three weeks' journey from Liverpool, and has been entered by British soldiers, traders, mechanics, and others for years past.

The people dwell chiefly in large towns and cities, varying in size from 5,000 to 150,000 inhabitants. In some of these cities English telegraph operators are at work, but no missionaries. So superior are the natives to the majority of Africans that they engage in mining and smelting iron ore, and manufacturing the same into implements. Dyeing, spinning, and weaving home-grown cotton, tanning and manufacturing leather goods, making pottery and baskets, are other industries carried on. As soldiers of the King of England, drilled and led by English officers, they have no superiors among the coloured troops under the Union Jack, but for want of missionaries there has been no one to enlist them under the banner of the King of kings. The religion of about 5,000,000 is Mohammedanism, and of the other 10,000,000 Paganism. The place we refer to is Upper Nigeria, which is reached by means of the River Niger, and the best known race inhabiting it are the Hausas.

The Church Missionary Society has made several attempts to enter this promising field, but the parties of men sent have been small, and until Bishop Tugwell's party went out two years ago none have been able to remain in the country. At present two C.M.S. missionaries are stationed at Lokoja, and these are the only two among 15,000,000 people.

Other efforts to carry the Gospel into Northern Nigeria have been made by Canadian missionaries, of whom two out of a party of three, who went out seven years ago, are buried in the land. One of them, Mr. Gowans, of Toronto, died at Ghurko, where last year Mr. Ryder, of the C.M.S., laid down his life, and was buried beside him.

The surviving member of the party of three, Rev. R. V. Bingham, is now superintendent of the African Industrial Mission, with headquarters at 96, Sussex Avenue, Toronto, Canada. This is an interdenominational mission, and has on its Council men representing eight different denominations of evangelical Christians. While adopting what are now known as faith principles as regards raising money at home, the Mission, as its name implies, intends to carry on industrial work in Africa as a means of getting hold of the natives and bringing them under the influence of the Gospel.

A party of four men sailed from Liverpool on October 30 for Lokoja, and other men and women are getting ready to go out as soon as the way opens for them to do so. General Sir Frederick Lugard, the High Commissioner for Northern Nigeria, has shown much kindness, and given much encouragement to this Mission.

The Slum and its Victims.—Within half a mile from the palaces and cathedrals of Westminster, and within a stone's throw from more than one historic and famous church, there is a slum—"Turner's Court"—which affords a striking illustration of the way in which many of our poor are forced to live. It is approached by a narrow entrance, and in its eleven houses an aggregate of 155 persons find shelter, the accommodation being of a wretched and insanitary kind. That such surroundings must be fatal to morality and religion goes without saying; how dangerous they are to physical well-being and to life itself is at once evident from the figures furnished by the medical officer of the district. During the past five years the death-rate in the Peabody Model Buildings has averaged only thirteen per thousand, and in the entire parish of St. Martin's, in which the slum is located, only fifteen. In the slum, however, the rate has ranged from thirty-two to eighty-three per thousand, with nearly an average of forty-seven for the whole period. After years of this wholesale slaughter, action has to be taken against the property owner with the view of closing the hovels.

At Fairs and Racecourses.

THE Autumnal Reunion of the Open-Air Mission, held a few days ago in Exeter Hall, Strand, was an inspiring occasion. On the invitation of Mr. Frank A. Bevan (who was unfortunately absent through domestic affliction), nearly 300 evangelists, workers and friends took tea together, and enjoyed happy fellowship.

The chair was taken by Sir George Williams, who was surrounded by many well-known friends of the Society. He dwelt sympathetically on the arduous labour of the Mission, and on the many blessed "signs following" which cheered them on in their holy and happy toil. About these the meeting was gathered to hear, and Colonel F. W. Major, Lieut.-Colonel F. Roberts, Mr. F. J. Rayner, Mr. Walter Goff, and the secretary told in outline the deeply-interesting story of Gospel campaigns at Great Yarmouth, Douglas, Newcastle and Carlisle Races, Doncaster Races, Hull Fair, and other resorts of multitudes. All were to the same effect—that God had honoured his Word, and that nowhere had the workers laboured in vain. At every place God has given them the joy of harvest, and souls had been gathered in.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch followed with an earnest address, in which he combated some of the subtle forces arrayed against the cause of Christ both within and without the churches. He was listened to with deepest interest, and his words were felt to be peculiarly appropriate to the present perilous times. A solo, sung by Mr. F. Spencer Johnson, and prayer by Mr. W. H. Seagram, brought a memorable meeting to a close. During the proceedings the secretary (Mr. Frank Cockrem, 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.) mentioned the present great need of the Mission, and appealed for liberal help.

Christmas Letter Mission.

AGAIN as the Christmas season approaches we remind our readers of the unobtrusive work of the Christmas Letter Mission. We learn that letters are all ready, with attractive illustrations. In each there are bright anecdotes and a clear Gospel message. Messrs. Hazell, Watson, and Viney, 52, Long Acre, W.C., will on receipt of threepence send a sample packet of letters, envelopes, and cards, with report and catalogue.

Last year many thousands of the letters were sent out, not only to institutions, large and small, where they were warmly welcomed, but also for distribution among people of various classes or among soldiers and sailors at our different ports. The workers at the Alexandria Institute for soldiers and sailors were specially grateful for those sent out. There is a Chinese letter, also a Spanish one, besides Swedish and Italian. Friends are needed to help in spreading a knowledge of this work. Miss E. Thornton, the hon. secretary (Eastfield House, Broxbourne, Herts), will gladly give any information as to methods of rendering assistance.

More large institutions, such as workhouses and hospitals, could be supplied with letters if more helpers would come forward. Among their friends they might arrange to obtain supplies from the publishers, and then fold and send packets of one or more hundred letters to some worker who would gratefully dispose of them. God has greatly blessed the work from its inception until now.

London City Mission.—The sixty-sixth annual report of the London City Mission will be read with deep interest by all who have at heart the evangelization of the Metropolis. The total number of missionaries engaged in the work of the mission is now 460, and while this is an advance on previous years, the committee are hopeful of still further extending operations by adding to the number. The report reviews the whole of the Society's agencies, and a perusal of the gratifying information given under the heading, "Some of the Results," cannot fail to awaken a sense of gratitude to God for the abundant harvest which He has caused to follow the sowing of the seed of the Kingdom. Copies of the report may be had from the office of the Mission, 3, Bridewell Place New Bridge Street, E.C.

Saving the Out-o'-Works.

MEDLAND HALL, the well-known East London night shelter of the Congregational Union, continues its useful career with great benefit to penniless wanderers of the London streets. Many needy men have been helped into regular employment, and the work continues to prosper.

In a pithy and interesting brochure recently issued, under the title of "In the South-East Corner," Mr. E. Wilson Gates, the esteemed superintendent of the institution, gives some account of recent results. We give a few sample cases:—

James Bowman was a farm worker, able to plough, reap, hoe, trench, drain, stack, &c., thoroughly at home with horses and cattle, and possessing a first-rate character. Like a great many others, he had come to the conclusion that life was scarcely worth living on very scanty earnings in the country, and that things must be better in London. The disillusion came to him in a few days after reaching the big city. However, Medland Hall rescued him in good time. In less than a month after this man's first appearance at the institution he was in the full swing of work on a farm in Canada, with board, lodging, washing, and a good wage secured for twelve months.

Charles Woods was another guest. Accustomed to clerical work, he had almost lost heart from the conviction that he was crowded out of the labour market. "Too old at forty" seemed to be ringing in his ears by day and by night—a respectable, well-educated man, trying in all directions to find employment of some kind, and ninety-nine times out of a hundred failing. Stress of circumstances compelled him to go to Medland Hall. He received a good outfit, crossed the Atlantic, and within two days of his arrival in Canada was in a first-rate situation, which he regards as permanent.

Joseph Youngman, aged thirty-four, had spent about twenty years of his life in gaining experience which well qualified him for Colonial life. He had been farm labourer, waggoner, saddler, harness-maker, dairyman, &c. He resolved to get away from Dorsetshire and try his fortune in London. Like a great many others he met with disappointment. He readily referred to one employer after another, and they all gave him a worthy character. "Honest, sober, and a good workman," was, in substance, the answer to inquiries. Within a month of his first appearance at Medland Hall he was working on a farm in Canada, with capital prospects.

The work is, of course, maintained on a religious basis, and is of an extensive character, large numbers of men being sheltered nightly. That it is economically managed is demonstrated by the fact that the nightly cost of housing and feeding each out-o'-work is but 1½d. a head.

Fellowship Meetings at Cardiff.

THE monthly meetings inaugurated last year for the purpose of gathering together all Christian workers of Cardiff for quiet waiting upon God, testimonies respecting his work and grace, and earnest petition for the outpouring of the Spirit, have been well maintained and much blessed.

The fourteenth meeting was held last Saturday evening at the Police Institute, when Rev. J. O. Hughes (Victoria Baptist Church) delivered an impressive address to Sunday-school teachers, on "The Ideal Teacher," basing his remarks upon three points—The ideal teacher needs (1) a clear head, (2) a loving heart, and (3) a consecrated life. Interesting testimonies of soul-winning work amongst the young were given by Mr. R. Emery (Hope Baptist Church), Mr. J. Randell (Roath Park Wesleyan), and others, and a very hallowed, soul-uplifting meeting closed with a period of waiting upon God.

The next meeting will be held on Saturday, December 7, when Mr. Davey, a returned missionary from China, will deliver an address on "The Workers' Secret of Power."

"Missionary Day" at Manchester.—One practical result of this annual gathering is that about £650 will be divided among the missions represented, and in addition a new missionary placed in the field—it is expected in South America.

Bethshan Village Mission.

DURING recent years an important and fruitful work has grown out of the evangelistic efforts in country districts of young men and women during their period of training for missionary service at Bethshan Home. So much have the council been encouraged that they have been led to seek the placing of this village work on a more regular basis. This work was started originally merely as part of the course of training; but as the way to the foreign field did not open in every case, a few have continued labouring in the villages, and have been the means of blessing to many. In future, while students will still have part of their training in the villages, there will be a recognised permanent Village Mission, and it is believed that God will lay this on the hearts of some who are called to this work at home.

Those who are familiar with the needs of many villages will appreciate how truly simple Gospel work there obtains a rich harvest. The village of Munden, in Herts, eight miles from Ware, is a bright instance of this. About five years ago two young women evangelists from Bethshan were used to bring about a real revival here, by open-air meetings visiting, and meetings held in a barn. Other workers followed and more souls were saved, the result being that the converts put up a little undenominational hall, which has ever since been a centre of spiritual light to surrounding villages.

The mission will in no way seek to induce members to leave their respective denominations, but will rather encourage them to share any blessing they receive with fellow-members of that section of the Church of Christ to which they belong.

In each district the workers will conduct house-to-house visitation, tract distribution, cottage meetings, Bible readings, prayer meetings, meetings in the open air, with occasional special missions in such buildings as are available. In summer, the aid of a Gospel van and tent with both men and women evangelists are enlisted, the unmarried being sent out two by two—the sisters working in one district, and the brothers in another.

The control of the Mission will be in the hands of the Council of the Missionary Training Home, 10 and 10a, Drayton Park, Highbury, N.; and the resident superintendent will be glad to hear from friends interested.

Regions Beyond Missionary Union.

AS the acting director of the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union, in the absence of Dr. Harry Guinness, I desire to make known more widely our Friday afternoon prayer-meetings (3-30 to 5 o'clock) every week. At these gatherings, missionary and other friends from every part of the world give us words of encouragement; news of work, and petitions for prayer from our workers and former students in distant lands are read aloud, and laid before the Lord. Tea is provided in the larger hall for those who come from a distance; and I desire to offer a hearty welcome, in the name of all connected with Harley House, to any friends who would like to join with us in these times of waiting upon God, and to take the opportunity of making closer acquaintance with our work.

Trains from Liverpool Street and Fenchurch Street, and all stations on the North London Railway, as also trams from Aldgate East, stop at Bow Station, close to the house. The Bow Church and Islington omnibus from Oxford Circus passes our gate.—Yours, sincerely. F. B. Meyer.

Chatham Royal Naval Mission.—A useful and much-needed work is being maintained at Chatham by the Royal Naval Mission. Its object is to strengthen the spiritual life of the Royal Navy, and encourage the desire for public witnessing to the saving power of God among the men. Much fruit has already been seen. Each member in uniform preaches the Gospel in the back streets and slums of Chatham, and many, attracted by the unusual spectacle, have been impressed by the words spoken, and led into a knowledge of the love of the Saviour. Parcels of literature for distribution, and other help, will be much appreciated. They may be forwarded to the hon. secretary, Mr. James Copeland, Soldiers and Sailors' Home, Old Brampton, Chatham.

Homes for Business Girls.

THE continual influx of country girls into London makes it more than ever imperative that they should be made acquainted with the home-life accommodation provided for them. It is only through the Press that such information can be made known to them, and I am therefore venturing, on their behalf, to ask you to allow me to state that any girl or young woman, between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five, able to substantiate her respectability, can find such accommodation at the following Houses:—Victoria House, 135 and 137, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W.; Morley House, 14, Fitzroy Street, Fitzroy Square, W.; Gordon House, 8, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.; Woodford House, 28 and 29, Duncan Terrace, Islington, N.; Garfield House, 8, Fitzroy Square, W.; Hyde House, 27, Somerset Street, Portman Square, W.; Lincoln House, 12, York Place, Baker Street, W.; Dongay House, 11, Fitzroy Street, Fitzroy Square, W.; the cost for board and lodging being from 7s. to 8s. 6d. per week.

Each house has a commodious sitting room, which is supplied with library, magazines, &c. Applications for admission must be made to the superintendents of the respective houses.

Dublin Cottage Hospital.

A PROPOSAL is at present on foot to add to the Christian organizations of Dublin by the establishment of a cottage hospital and home. Medical mission work has not yet taken its proper place as an important method in ministry to the poor of Dublin. There is but one such mission for the whole of Dublin's slums, and that is merely a dispensary. It is a frequent occurrence for some poor patient to travel a mile or more to reach it, and more frequent still for the doctor or nurse to be asked to travel that distance. Not that on arrival much "nursing" is often practicable, or service in spiritual things possible; for the rooms are overcrowded, five families living, often enough, in one room of some city mansion, long depreciated in value, and let on the tenement system. Unsanitary conditions, with consequent foul odours, the presence of one or more consumptive persons, the verbosity or helplessness of some one drinking or drunk, dirt much in evidence, destitution even to the lack of the clothing of decency—these things do not make the task easier.

A representative committee of all denominations of Protestant Christians in Dublin is considering to determine details of structure, initial cost, and cost of annual maintenance. The hospital is to include an in-patient department of twenty beds, divided among men, women, and children; an out-patient department, with hall for evangelistic services, and a residential part for the nursing staff with such workers as may offer themselves for a course of training for the mission field. The initial cost is estimated at £5,000, that of annual maintenance at £1,500.

Promises of money and donations have been already received. Communications may be addressed to the secretary—Dr. J. A. Percival Barnes, Beaumont, Blackrock, Co. Dublin—who will be pleased to give information.

Treatment of Inebriates.—In view of the complaint often made that local authorities fail to put into operation the Inebriates Act (1898), many will learn with pleasure of the Royal Victoria Homes for Inebriates, which are situated at Brentry, near Bristol. The Homes are available for practically all sorts and conditions of men and women, from any part of the country, without distinction as to age, religion, or social position. The number of councils for whose administrative districts provision is made is 104. The number of beds is 336, and 140 are at present vacant. The institution was established by a number of County and Borough Councils, and is managed by a board of members. The Homes include two villages—one for women and the other for men—and are so arranged that so far as possible the ordinary life of an English village prevails, without intoxicating drink. Any information will be given by the Warden, who may be addressed at the Homes.

Befriending the Sailor.

SELDOM, if ever, has the annual report of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society been more pleasant reading than the record for the past year. To say that in London alone upwards of 1,500 English and foreign services and meetings have been held conveys but little idea of the attendant blessing, the cleansed hearts, changed lives, and redeemed men and women who, having been brought under the sound of the Gospel, have believed, and, believing, have been transformed by its power. But the work carried on at the London headquarters does not represent the whole of the Society's activities. Sailors' Bethels are dotted round the coast at important centres. Concerning some of these institutes the annual report furnishes encouraging particulars:—

The work at Southwick, on the Sussex Coast, has not only been extended and improved, but greatly blessed. The mission on the South Coast of Cornwall has been very fruitful in good results, and the Sailors' Home at Fowey has maintained its reputation for comfort, homeliness, and spirituality, and many old boarders, when paid off at various ports, have made long journeys in order to enjoy its benefits. The North Devon Branch continues to flourish, and the Sailors' Rest at Appledore was never more popular or better frequented, or a greater power for good. The services also of the adjoining Seamen's Bethel have been well attended and spiritually helpful to many.

The Mission on the East Coast has progressed, despite some discouragement. A chapel has been secured at Lynn, on the Norfolk Coast, by the local friends, and opened as a temporary Seamen's Bethel and Institute, and a further effort is being made to secure a suitable site for a new building.

The usual operations have been carried on at the stations on the West Coast, and much useful work done at Liverpool, Preston, Lancaster, Glasson, Morecambe, and Fleetwood, and never has the work been in a more satisfactory state than it is at present on the Cumberland Coast. The Sailors' Rest at Whitehaven has been more largely attended by seamen than in former years. The new Sailors' Bethel and Institute opened on May 31 last at Workington is answering admirably, and the Seamen's Rest at Maryport continues to be most popular with the men who frequent that port.

The work in Scotland will in future be known as the Ayrshire Coast Branch. It would not be possible to read the missionary's journal without being convinced of the need for and the usefulness of this work.

The branches at Ramsey Bethel, Isle of Man, and at the Seamen's Memorial Home, Galway, Ireland, have been well sustained, and also the means of accomplishing much good. A world-wide correspondence has been maintained with seamen, the sick and afflicted have been visited, the distressed and destitute relieved, and in many other ways the temporal welfare and spiritual good of our sailors cared for.

It is intended by raising a special fund in memory of the late Mrs. Hill, to pay off the debts on new headquarters and other buildings belonging to the Society. The committee have received in this connection a generous promise from Mr. John Cory, Cardiff, who offers £250 if the fund can be completed by the end of the present year. The donations received already amount to £661 11s. A sum of £1,190 19s. is still required to complete the fund, and enable the committee to obtain the fulfilment of Mr. Cory's promise. Communications may be addressed to the secretary, Rev. G. J. Hill, 255, Burdett Road, Limehouse, London, E.

Christians and Spiritualism.

DEAR SIR,—I am thankful that in a recent issue you drew attention to "a spiritualist's confession." I fear few realise the awful inroads that spiritualism is making in our country.

I have just returned from a mission in the Potteries, which I had not visited for about seven years, and am grieved to find that it has made sad havoc with many there.

Few only appear to see the sin of the thing, and that it is "an abomination to the Lord." Yet the Bible is perfectly clear upon this, and every step in spiritualism (whether from curiosity or otherwise) is a falling away from the faith as it is in Christ, and is attended with terrible consequences.—Yours faithfully,

Thomas Hogben.

A Year of Work.

Dr. Chavasse's Diocese.

IT was a dull morning as we got out of the train at Lime Street Station, and rising grandly out of the mist we saw St George's Hall, where the Conference meetings were to be held. After prayer and a statement from the treasurer, the Bishop rose to give his address. One could not help contrasting for a moment his work in Oxford and the work into which he is now throwing himself so wholeheartedly in this populous South-west Lancashire diocese. The one has prepared him for the other. The man who has gained the confidence of young men, and helped shape their careers, for some three parts of a generation is the man whose words came with wonderful force and power to the hearts of the hundreds of shrewd men who listened to him last week. Optimistic in tone, Dr. Chavasse's address was not blind to the difficulties. These were marshalled before us in his usual incisive manner, and then we were told that they could be met by faith, love, wisdom and self-sacrifice. "My feelings," he said, "are different from what they were twelve months ago. I see the difficulties more clearly, but I also see the splendid possibilities." Very happy was the Bishop as he spoke of "the peoples' scheme," and pictured the proposed cathedral as a centre of unity. "It is good for us to see visions," he said, and we felt it to be good as we listened to his eloquent word-painting, throbbing with spiritual emotion.

MODERN QUESTIONS.

The materialism in the country was emphasized. "God is going from the lives of many. The Word of God is not read. Philanthrophy is taking the place of worship, and kindness the place of the fear of God." Very severe was the Bishop on bazaars. "The methods will not bear investigation," he said. "Horace's words seem to be the motto, 'Make money. By right means if you can. By any means if you cannot. Only make money.' Sales of work are right, but their accompaniments often make them a vanity fair." In concluding the Bishop pleaded for spirituality. "Spiritual men for spiritual work. Honour the Holy Ghost and He will honour you. The only true basis of increased congregations are changed hearts and lives."

Very interesting and helpful was the discussion that followed. Dr. WACE read a paper on "The Bible and Modern Thought," notes of which were given last week. The BISHOP closed a discussion, which waxed warm at certain points, in his own inimitable way. "All the speakers," he said, "were agreed about the authority of the Bible. God has spoken, they all affirmed, and if at any time doubts arose as to the precise mode, we should find the best answer in the living Christ. Abide in Him."

SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

The evening meeting was a lively one. The subject chosen was "The Church and Social Problems." Sir Edward Russell, Editor of the Liverpool Post, opened the discussion, and pleaded that the impulses of Christianity, and the opportunities of the Church, should be brought to bear on social evils. This was warmly combated by Rev. JOHN WAKEFORD, who was the selected speaker. He is a hard-working High Churchman, an able man, and for some half hour he gained the ear of the Conference, and perhaps by the very force of his individuality carried it with him. Christianity was life, and the Christian minister was not to serve tables. What had he to do with bad drains? He pleaded for individualism as against societies. He was, however, answered, and that completely. Of course, all agreed with his main contention, but it did not take the meeting long to see that he had proved too much for his own thesis, and the BISHOP, in his closing words, showed this by his reference to the plea for the Nonconformist. "We want (he said) a Church conscience on these matters. Christ indeed sent forth men to preach, but also to heal the sick and to cast out devils, and in Liverpool there were many devils to be cast out, and a Christian minister who shuts his eyes to them is neglecting his duty." Million New Pledges Crusade.

REV. DR. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

ENTHUSIASTIC audiences greeted Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. HENRY and the Fisk Jubilee Singers at the meetings held last week at Cambridge.

On November 5, the gatherings were held in the Guildhall. In the afternoon, Rev. Dr. H. P. STOKES presided over a large audience, and Dr. Henry gave a powerful address, in the course of which he adduced telling statistics in support of the temperance position. "A sum of no less than £230,000,000 is invested in the manufacture and sale of strong drink. It requires £160,000,000 to maintain the 140,000 licensed public-houses throughout the country. The greater part of this money is paid by the industrial and labouring classes. The war in South Africa has been in progress for more than two years, and the total expenditure, which stands at £155,000,000, is something less than has been spent by the British people in the maintenance of the public-houses for a year."

At the evening meeting, Professor SIMS WOODHEAD, in welcoming Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers, said that the Million Pledges Crusade is a movement of rescue on the part of the Christian churches. Proceeding, the speaker encouraged his hearers to devote their energies to the support of the temperance cause.

Dr. HENRY again gave an impressive address. He said there are two definite and distinct objects of the Crusade; to arouse and stimulate the Christian and public conscience with reference to temperance reform, and also to secure the concrete effect of that enthusiasm in 1,000,000 new abstinence pledges. Proceeding, the speaker pointed out that the public-house of to-day is vastly different to what it was a generation or two ago. "The public-houses are no longer content with the husbands and fathers and sons who are grown up, but they want the comparative boys and girls. And in order to do that they have their places richly furnished and brilliantly lighted. The public-house has entered into the life of the modern world in such manifold ways as to exempt practically nothing from its influence and grasp. It touches the whole of Society—politics, clubs, secret organizations, educational boards, chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and, in many instances, I am sorry to say, the churches."

Dwelling on the influence of time, Dr. Henry pointed out that the drink power has attained its present strong position through long years of steady work. "We have no reason to believe otherwise than that the time element will prove an important factor in the destruction of both the drink habit and traffic. If we can only keep the boys and girls out of the public-house for ten years, probably we can starve it to death. And who should stand foremost in the fight for this and every other moral and social reform? Why, the people of God."

On the following afternoon Dr. Henry addressed a large meeting in Zion Chapel. Rev. C. JOSEPH presided, and Dr. Henry made a telling appeal to Christians to work, not only to rescue those who have already been enslaved for drink, but to defend the community at large from the evils of the traffic. The evening meeting was also of an awakening character, and Dr. Henry's powerful address aroused the interest and enthusiasm of his hearers.

MANCHESTER DEMONSTRATIONS.

The programme of meetings at Manchester, the next centre to be visited, was an extensive one, and included six gatherings in the Free Trade Hall.

Our Correspondent writes of the meetings on last Lord's Day: "Twice was the Free Trade Hall filled—at night, long before the hour for commencing the meeting. The Grand Theatre was crowded by an overflow meeting. A great gathering was also held in the largest Wesleyan Church (Irwin Street) in Salford. Local friends state that the aggregate attendance was more than 14,000. Dr. Henry's addresses were powerful at all the services, and held the audiences in rapt attention. Not since the Crusade began has he spoken with greater unction. The Jubilee Singers again rendered valuable service. On account of the great crowds it was difficult to make one's way to speak to the people in their seats, but between seven and eight hundred new pledges were secured—a fact which shows how deep an impression was made." Monday evening's gathering was splendid. In spite of the adverse weather there was a large and interested audience. Rev. Dr. MACLAREN gave a telling address in advocacy of total abstinence as opposed to moderate drinking. His appeal for decision and action on the part of God's people created a profound impression. Dr. Henry delivered a fervent address on "The Bulwarks of the Drink Traffic," in which he dealt with difficulties in the way of temperance reform. Large numbers of persons took the pledge.

The Manchester campaign concluded yesterday (Wednesday), and reports show that the temperance cause has received a powerful stimulus. We hope to give particulars in next week's issue.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Nov. 14, 15, Wolverhampton (14, 8 p.m., Mount Zion Church, Horseley Fields, chairman, Mr. T. G. Baker; 15, 3 p.m., Mount Zion Church, chairman, Alderman Price Lewis; 8 p.m., Agricultural Hall, chairman, Councillor J. W. Sankey). Birmingham, 17-22 (17, 3 p.m., Town Hall, chairman, Mr. H. S. Yoxall; 8.15, Town Hall, chairman, Mr. E. Smith, J.P.; 18, 8 p.m., Central Hall, chairman, Rev. F. L. Wiseman; 19, 3 p.m., Town Hall, chairman, Alderman S. Edwards; 8 p.m., Town Hall, chairman, Mr. Joseph Hood; 20, 8 p.m., Carr's Lane Chapel, chairman, Rev. J. H. Jowett; 21, 3 p.m., Soho Hill Chapel, chairman, the Mayor of Smethwick, 8 p.m., Friends' Institute, Moseley Road, chairman, Mr. W. Priestman, 22, 8 p.m., Town Hall, chairman, the Lord Mayor of Birmingham); 23-25, Bristol, Colston Hall; 26, 27, Cardiff, Park Hall.

On Monday next, an all-day prayer meeting in connection with the Crusade is to be held in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C., commencing at 11 a.m., and continuing until 9 p.m. Prayer will be offered for blessing upon the vast number of sermons which will be preached and meetings held during the next two or three weeks for the furtherance of the movement, and particularly on "Temperance Sunday," Nov. 24.

Bayswater Convention.

THE third annual Convention at Bayswater was held in the Paddington Baths Hall, October 28-November 2, Captain TOTTENHAM presiding. The list of speakers arranged by Mr. Walter Wild and the committee included many well-known names, and the meetings were largely attended.

The address at the first gathering, given by Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS, was based on the question, "What seek ye?" Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE gave a series of addresses at the eleven o'clock meeting of each day.

On the Tuesday afternoon, Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS gave a comprehensive address, full of food for thought and spiritual stimulus, and was followed in the evening by Revs. Prebendary H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE and S. A. M'CRACKEN, who spoke to a crowded audience. Rev. F. S. WEBSTER was the chief speaker on the next day. At the evening gathering large numbers of people evidenced their desire to have "life more abundantly" in Christ Jesus.

Revs. W. DARLOW SARJEANT and S. A. SELWYN were among the speakers on the Thursday, while on the afternoon of the concluding day, Rev. J. GEORGE STUART spoke on the conditions of being filled with the Spirit. The final meeting of the Convention surpassed all the previous ones in interest and encouragement, the great hall being filled to overflowing. Revs. S. A. Selwyn and W. Darlow Sarjeant were the speakers.

A Noble Celebration.—The British and Foreign Bible Society proposes to celebrate its centenary early in the year 1904, and it has been decided to make an effort meanwhile to raise a fund of 250,000 guineas with the view of circulating the Word of God in countries and districts which have not yet been reached. The object is a noble one, and if every student of the Bible, even in the English language only, would contribute a few shillings, the amount required would be largely exceeded, as indeed, we trust it will be.

Evangelistic.

Mr. W. D. Dunn at Coatbridge.

A two-weeks' mission has been conducted by Mr. W. D. Dunn in the Baptist Church, Coatbridge, N.B., where large gatherings assembled nightly. From the commencement of the mission the interest increased, and many signs of blessing were given. We rejoice in professed conversions and restorations. Truly the Holy Ghost was in our midst. The mission was brought to a close on Sunday evening, when a meeting was held in the large Town Hall. The church people, headed by the pastor, Rev. S. Lindsay, his wife and the deacons, marched from the church to the hall with the evangelist, singing all the way, and were followed by large crowds. The meeting, which was attended by about a thousand people, was of an impressive character, and formed a fitting finish to an earnest and fruitful mission. S. L.

Baptist Church, Sutton-in-Craven.

On Sunday, November 3, Rev. F. C. Spurr concluded a fifteen-days' mission, during which he delivered a series of addresses characterized by forceful reasoning and apt illustration. Numerously attended Bible readings were held in the afternoon for Christian people, and the programme also comprised a service for children, a meeting for men only, a meeting for women only, and a missionary lecture in costume on "Life in Morocco," which proved highly instructive. The services were all largely attended, and on various occasions the building was crowded to excess. Mr. Spurr's visit was much enjoyed, and produced a deep impression throughout the neighbourhood. The Church has experienced spiritual renewal, and numbers have decided for Christ. F. W. P.

Vernon Chapel, King's Cross.

A fortnight's mission, commenced at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross Road, W.C., on Sunday last, by Mr. Leonard Weaver, promises to be very fruitful in results to the glory of God.

Much preparation of heart has been made by members of the church, culminating in a half-night of prayer on Friday last, so that when Mr. Weaver appeared on Sunday morning the members were, to a large extent, prepared for his sermon on "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto Thee."

The neighbourhoods of King's Cross and Islington are notorious for drunkenness and profligacy, and the consequent difficulty of obtaining the attendance of outsiders at a place of worship. Nevertheless, at the afternoon and evening services inquirers were dealt with, and ultimately sent on their way rejoicing.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Cardiff.

A ten-days' mission by Mr. Henry Thorne has just been completed at Wood Street Congregational Church, Cardiff, which is under the pastorate of Rev. John T. Peace. Bible readings were held every afternoon, and proved times of Divine illumination. Meetings for men only, women only, and children proved attractive features of the mission, as also did the telling of Mr. Thorne's intensely interesting life-story under the title of "From the Stage to the Cross."

The most important items of the programme were, of course, the Gospel meetings. The week evening gatherings were well attended, and at the closing Sunday evening services some 3,000 people were present. Mr. Thorne conducted the mission on his well-known lines, i.e., by bright, earnest meetings, full of power and quiet helpfulness, but happily devoid of mere human excitement and popular sensationalism. There were some scores of inquirers, and a large number of others testified to the blessing they had received. The mission was, from a minister's standpoint, admirable in every way—the kind of mission to work up to and work from; the kind of mission that leaves a blessing behind it of quiet, growing influence, and a heritage of conversions full of the promise of a genuine Christian manhood and womanhood in the days to come. P.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Another fruitful month's mission has just been concluded in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. The missioner is too well known to need any description of his methods. Suffice it to say that Rev. John T. Vine's visit this year was made very solemn by the unexpected and sudden death of Mr. Joseph Clarke, who had been connected with the Tower Hamlets Mission for so many years. The Sunday following his death Mr. Vine preached in the evening, and took for his subject "The Great White Throne," a theme which is always blessed, but on this occasion doubly so. The scene was a very affecting one, as the preacher in broken accents pleaded with the people, who were bathed in tears, to decide for Christ. The week previous he had said that ere the next Sunday came round someone would be missing from among them and passed to eternity. "Little did you and I think," said Mr. Vine, looking at Clarke's vacant chair, "that one from this platform was to be removed." Mr. Vine completely broke down, and the meeting closed earlier than usual. The impression made upon the hearts of his hearers was manifest in the after-meeting, when the inquiry-room was filled with the anxious, while many were dealt with in the large hall.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr's Missions.

A ten-days' mission has been conducted at Burnley by Rev. J. Tolefree Parr in Brunswick Chapel. The services were all well attended, and the missioner was cheerfully assisted by many of the ministers of the town. A Bible-reading was given almost every afternoon. The most successful of the services were—the temperance meeting on the Saturday night; a United P.S.A., attended by 1,000 men, on the second Sunday; and the closing lecture. About sixty persons passed through the inquiry rooms, and 200 temperance pledges were taken.

E. Hall, Secretary.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr's mission at Hebden Bridge, Yorks, will long be remembered. The local Free Church Council for months had been praying and planning, organizing and advertising, and God has done for them "exceeding abundantly" above all they had expected, The mission was held in the Co-operative Hall, but overflow services had to be held in the smaller hall and Hope Baptist Chapel. On the first Sunday night hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Mr. Parr's addresses, which were full of spiritual power, were owned of God, and the temperance lecture was wonderfully blessed. The service for men only, on the second Sunday afternoon, was notable for its helpfulness. Some hundreds of persons were dealt with in the inquiry room, a great number of temperance pledges were taken, and the good work is still going on. Thanksgiving services are being held in all the churches.

S. J. Robins,
Secretary, Free Church Council.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Paisley.

Much good Christian work is done in Paisley, and yet in some senses it is a hard town for an evangelist to work. One reason may be, that there are so many claims on the public for their support and presence. However, some years since, Mrs. Baeyertz "came, and saw, and conquered." Her meetings at that time were held in the Free High Church and were largely attended, great blessing being the result. For that reason her second visit, made at this time, was eagerly looked forward to by many, when the Christian Endeavour Union, for their third United Evangelistic Mission, invited her to be the evangelist. Accordingly, Mrs. Baeyertz began a sixteen days' mission on October 13. The Endeavourers had made good preparations, holding weekly united prayer meetings for some weeks previous, and had done what they could to prepare the way.

Mrs. Baeyertz has a convincing, winning manner, and her experiences as a Jewess peculiarly equip her for dealing with many Biblical subjects, especially those of the Old Testament. She uses her wide knowledge of the Scripture with power, and by homely illustrations drives home the truth. One felt that the Holy Ghost was working mightily through the speaker.

The meetings were held in the Primitive Methodist Church during the week, and in the Good Templar Hall on the Sabbath evenings. The attendances increased every evening, until at the closing meeting in the Hall there would be an attendance of 1,200. In addition to these meetings, Mrs. Baeyertz conducted a series of afternoon Bible Readings in the Victoria Hall Baptist Church, and Christians profited much by them.

Large numbers of the unconverted waited to the after meetings and sought the Saviour. Over thirty churches were represented amongst the professed conversions. Many persons, too, who did not come out at the meetings, went home, and there gave their hearts and lives to the Lord Jesus. We are delighted, as Endeavourers, at the fruitfulness of the mission, and rejoice at the rich blessing which Christians themselves received. A Local C.E.

Dr. Harry Guinness in Sydney.

Dr. Harry Guinness is still in Tasmania, whither he went to recruit after his long and severe illness. In a short visit to Australia he has been enabled to hold Gospel meetings in various centres. At Geelong a mission was arranged for the week following the Convention, which he and Mrs. Guinness attended, and in answer to the many prayers previously offered by assembled believers, a very real work was accomplished in the conversion of several hitherto careless ones, who have come out boldly on the Lord's side, and are throwing themselves energetically into his work.

In Sydney a very remarkable series of meetings took place at only four days' notice. Rev. C. S. Rose, pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle, and former student of Harley College, writes:—"We had no time to organize, but we soon found that God had prepared the hearts of the people. For a considerable period we had been sowing, and here and there were signs of an approaching harvest. The mission proved the field to be 'white already.' Every evening the congregations grew larger, until the people attending could not obtain admittance. The Press was kindly disposed, and soon published the news of the arrival of a distinguished visitor.

"Many souls have found a new joy through the visit, and heaven alone will reveal the good accomplished in the deepening of the spiritual life of church members. We shall never forget the sermon preached on the last Sunday morning—men and women sobbed like children. Dr. Guinness left us by the Brisbane express for Bundaberg, where in all probability he will baptize about fifty Kanakas (South Sea Islanders), about whom we hear more now that Australia has become a commonwealth, and since the abolition of the importation of these people has become part of the political programme of the country.

"Among the fruits of the Mission were many cases of peculiar interest, of which discretion forbids us to write publicly. But the end is not even yet; we are sure to see further results. And one has been the knitting closer the bond between the pastor and flock, and between the whole Church and Jesus Christ. Truly the visit of Dr. Harry Guinness has marked an epoch in our history."

In Mr. James Wharton's recent mission at St. Albans, Christians were much helped and drawn into closer fellowship, and the unsaved were impressed.

The meetings which Rev. C. H. Yatman has been conducting in Newtownards Road Methodist Church, Belfast (of which Rev. John Elliott is pastor), have been numerously attended, and have been crowned with abundant blessing.

Sister Hettie, of the London Seamen's Mission, has concluded a helpful mission at Hay Mill, a growing suburb of Small Heath, Birmingham. The small but earnest church worked with great devotion, and reaped a glorious harvest. Over 100 names (mostly of adults) were taken in the inquiry room.

Rev. S. R. Cambie, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, has concluded a fruitful mission at St. Saviour's West, St. Leonards-on-Sea, where the vicar-designate (Rev. C. M. Gale) is endeavouring to erect a permanent church to meet the needs of his growing district, and where much excellent work is being done, all departments of Church work showing signs of life and growth.

A three-weeks' mission has been conducted by Mr. Galletly, of the Evangelization Society, London, at Alexandria, N.B., under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The Gospel was preached in a clear and faithful manner, and souls have been brought to Christ. The closing meeting was held in one of the largest halls of the district, when over 1,000 people were assembled to hear the Gospel, and many were unable to obtain admission. D. Macintyre.

Rev. Andrew Allan, of Manchester, has been conducting a nine-days' mission at the Wicker Congregational Church, Sheffield. The services, although held amid the excitement of municipal elections, were well attended, and resulted in a marked quickening of spiritual life in the church. A number of young people have decided to join the church. Mr. Allan has been invited to continue his work by another and longer mission in February next.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing upon a three-days' convention at Ipswich, November 20-22.

For temperance crusade meetings, conducted by Mr. William Forbes, in South Wales.

For blessing upon a mission in the United Free Church, Inverkip, November 17-23.

For blessing on a mission being held at Slade Green Baptist Mission Hall, by Mr. James Owen.

For a mission to men being conducted at the city of Dublin Y.M.C.A., by Mr. S. Montgomery, of Bangor, co. Down.

For blessing on mission services conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver, at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross Road, until November 22.

For blessing on meetings to be held at Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, on November 14 (in connection with the forthcoming Pastor's College Conference).

For the Paris Convention (for the deepening of spiritual life) to be held in the Mission Hall, rue Royale, and the Wesleyan Church Parlour, rue Roquepine, November 19-22. Speakers, Revs. F. Paynter, J. J. Luce, and Houghton.

Personalia.

Sir Robert Anderson.—This is now the proper designation of Dr. Robert Anderson, C.B., who was until recently Director of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Metropolitan Police. His promotion to a Knight-Commandership in the Order of the Bath is included in the list of honours conferred in connection with the King's birthday.

The many warm friends in all denominations of Rev. Dr. Jenkins, the venerable and beloved Wesleyan Methodist, will regret to hear that he is in poor health, and has been forbidden by his medical advisers to undertake work of any kind. Although more than eighty years of age, Dr. Jenkins has continued to be an able and welcome preacher and speaker.

A Spreading Vice in Switzerland.—Owing to the terrible development of absinthe drinking in Switzerland, it has been found necessary to organize associations with the object of educating the public mind in regard to this frightful form of intemperance. It is stated that a persistent absinthe drinker rarely lives over the age of forty-five, and in many districts of Switzerland there is much physical deterioration, with palsy and other diseases, clearly traceable to the habit.

The Royal Return.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

WHEN seeing the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York returning to London, I thought of another Royal return, when Jesus, after a visit to our earth, returned to his palace home in heaven. In John xvii. 11 and 13, we have Him sending a telegram to his Father, "And now come I to Thee."

Who was the returning One? The King's Son—the heir to the throne. One to whom the King said, "Sit Thou at my right hand."

Who met Him? King Edward went to meet the returning Duke. The King of kings met the Lord. If He meets prodigal sons with a kiss, what a meeting it must have been when his only begotten Son returned, his pure, sinless One.

Where had He been? The son of England's King had been to far-off colonies, distant portions of his father's deminion. Christ, in coming to this world, came to a remote part of his Father's domain. Many have read the list of places to which the Duke has been, and it would be a good exercise to jot down the places visited by Jesus. I will name a few: Bethlehem, where He took our nature; Bethany, where He cheered the mourners; Samaria, where He talked with an outcast; Calvary, where He put away our sin by the sacrifice of Himself.

What had He done? The son of our King went to represent his father, and to consolidate the empire. Christ said, "He that hath seen Me, hath seen the Father" (John xiv. 9). He came on a Mission of Peace, to restore peace, to make peace, for the earth to which He came had rebelled.

How was He treated? Very differently was heaven's representative received to the earthly prince. Fêtes, favours, flattery, and fortune were the portion of the latter; while hatred, a scourge, a thorn crown, and a cross were the portion of the former; for his enemies said, "This is the heir, come, let us kill Him" (Matt. xxi. 38).

How long had He been away? One house had on it the two dates, March 16 and November 2, the departure and their return. The Heir of Heaven was absent over thirty-three years, in the midst of sorrow, suffering, scorn, and sin.

How did He look? The Duke came home without a tear. Christ went home with wounded hands and feet and side, the first man to take into heaven a body that had suffered death. May we not say say that in the midst of angels and spirits of the redeemed, "He showed them his hands and his feet"?

Who did He bring with Him? The Duchess, his wife, was with the King's son on their entry into London, or rather she followed in the next carriage. Christ has gone into the Father's presence; but the hymns says:—

> And this I shall find,
> For such is his mind,
> He will not be in glory and leave me behind.

His church is his bride, and though the bridegroom has gone on, his bride follows in the next carriage, and the course will be kept clear until she also is safe in at the palace gates.

The return of the King's son was timed; it was not till he had finished the tour appointed. How this reminds us of John xiii. 1: "Jesus knew that his hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father." The hour of return was fixed; hence the preparations for his return were all ready.

At Portsmouth an enthusiastic Dutchman wanted to get to the King. He said he had come all the way from Canada to ask his Majesty to stop the war. He failed. But the visit of the King's Son who came from heaven to earth has stopped a far worse war in every heart that has received Him. Have you welcomed this Royal Guest? "Welcome" was on many a house at the return of the Duke. Put up a welcome to Jesus. He will come in and stop with you.

A Hymn for Children.

Jesus has a word for me,
"Suffer little children.
Suffer them to come to me."
This kind word must surely be Meant for little folks like me,
"Suffer little children."

Jesus loves me; I know by
"Suffer little children."
His love makes the reason why
Such a little child as I
Hears the gentle Saviour cry—
"Suffer little children."

Yes, 'tis Jesus says to me
"Suffer little children."
"Suffer them to come to me,"
That my glory they may see,
And for ever with me be,
"Suffer little children."

Oh, may I love Him who says
"Suffer little children."
May I serve Him all my days,
May my life be full of praise
To the Lord who ever says,
"Suffer little children."

Missions: Preaching and Hearing (Rom. x. 13-17).

THIS and the former chapters are specially given up to the condition of the Jewish people, and the Apostle does not hesitate to reveal his love for those whom God chose from the nations of the world as his special and peculiar inheritance, and to whose ancient stock the Apostle was proud to belong. And in the following chapter (xi.) the veil is about to be lifted, and we are to see that God's mercy has not been withdrawn from his ancient people, but is to have a glorious harvest of salvation and blessing in the coming ages, when all Israel shall be saved. It is interesting, therefore, that this paragraph is inserted in the midst of all the glowing promises which specially concern the Hebrew race, of blessing and help for the Greeks, that is, the Gentiles, also.

The Apostle justifies himself by quoting from Joel (compare verse 13 with Joel ii. 32). The quotation leads him to a series of memorable questions. How can they call? How can they believe? How can they hear? How can they preach?

We now turn aside to deal with those who may read these words, and to ask whether they should not try to answer these questions on their knees before God, in the light of that personal responsibility. It is not enough to say that Christ expects his Church to give to a dying world the knowledge of the Gospel, it must be added that both our Lord and his Church expect each individual soul to do whatever lies in its power towards fulfilling the Divine commission to go into all the world to preach the Gospel. Not one of us is absolved from this great responsibility. Just as a whole country when in arms for its liberty expects that even women and children will do something towards the great cause, so there should not be a single individual in all the hosts of the Church who is not thinking, praying, giving, and setting apart, and enabling others to go, that the beautiful feet of the messengers of Christ may tread the soil of every land and the highways and streets of every great city.

How different is our Lord's regard for missionaries to that entertained by the world. The missionary will often travel second or third class hardly noticed by first class passengers; the Lord says, "How beautiful" (verse 15) The missionary may be derided and considered a nuisance by the rulers of the country which he adopts as the scene of his labour, he may dress in a humble garb, fraternize with the humbler and lower classes of the community, wrestle with great difficulty in acquiring a foreign language, but the Lord says of him, "How beautiful." And presently, when his life-work has been achieved, and only a comparative handful of poor people have been brought into the light of God as the outward and visible result of his toils—while the great world is prepared to look upon it with suspicion, deciding that not many wise, or noble, or mighty have been called, again the Master says, "How beautiful."

Will not some of the members of each Christian Endeavour Society retire to some lonely place and kneel down, offering their lives to God for service in heathen lands, and throwing upon Him the responsibility of bringing their purpose to fruition? All that God wants of any one of us is sincere willingness to do his will. It is for Him to send us forth.

The sixteenth verse opens another line of thought. Here we have the reason why so much Gospel preaching is abortive. Men have heard; they have heard the voice of nature; the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament speaketh of his handywork. (Compare verse 18 with Psa. xix. 1.) They have heard the voice of conscience speaking in their soul. They have been able to witness the hand of God in the government of men, but they have not responded, because their heart has been hard and impenetrable. If men will hear with the good and honest heart of which the Saviour spoke (Matt. xiii. 8) there is no doubt that through hearing will come faith; but there is always fear arising from stony soil where the word gets caught away, and from thorny soil, where the growth of thorns chokes it.

C.E. NOTES.

A C.E. Convention has recently been held at Coimbatore, India, one of the chief stations of the London Missionary Society. It was reported that there are now in South India 220 societies and 6,029 members, an increase of 1,600 from last year.

* * *

The "South African Endeavourer" tells of a society which has three members at the front who never fail to send their responses for the monthly consecration meeting. On one occasion, however, one member was unable to get his letter off in time, so he tried to send his response by wire. This proved impossible, as both clerk and censor were convinced that the Scripture reference was an attempt to convey secret intelligence.

International S.S. Lesson.

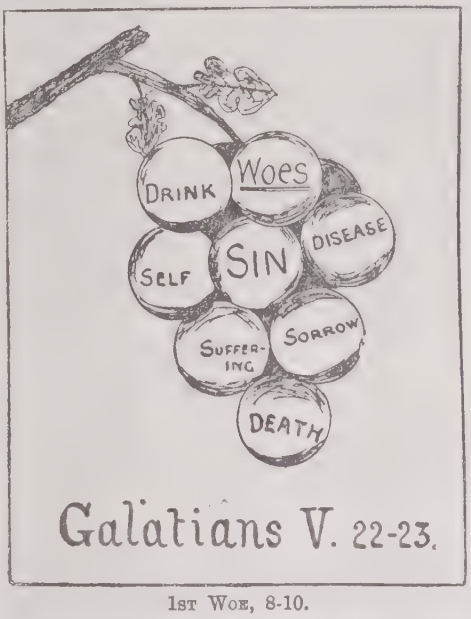
Sunday, November 24, 1901.

The World's Temperance Lesson (Isa. v. 8-30).
Golden Text: Isa. v. 11.

Introductory.

PEKAH was at this time King of Israel, and Azariah King of Judah. These nations had fallen very low both in religion and morals; but the priests were still strong in Jerusalem. God raised up from time to time prophets who denounced the sins, and uttered protests and warnings. Second to none was Isaiah, who received the Divine call in the reign of Uzziah (chap. vi.). He begins the chapter from which our lesson is taken with a beautiful poem, which touchingly sets forth God's goodness to his people and his disappointment in them (1-7). The wild grapes he uses to represent a series of "Woes," not denunciations or threats, but statements showing the inevitable consequences resulting from love of money, love of luxury, and indulgence in strong drink.

It is the question of to-day: the land question, and the liquor question, and a sad picture of the great evils of our modern civilization.



1st Woe, 8-10.

Is pronounced on those who add to their own wealth and possessions at the expense of others. Adding to their own land and depriving men of the lawful use of the soil (James v. 1-6).

2nd Woe, 11-17.

Certain consequences resulting from drunkenness and revelry. "Strong drink" was a term applied to all intoxicants. The description is as true to-day as then of those who are the slaves of alcohol and revelry. They are absorbed with their self-indulgence, and take no heed of God's warnings. Strong drink kills the conscience. (13) The gradual downfall of the nation that forgets God. The real captors were not the Assyrians, but the wine and strong drink. Both high and low alike suffer. (14) Numbers die from all classes because of this great national evil and sin. Our judges tell us nine-tenths of the pauperism and crime are caused by strong drink, our physicians tell us it is the cause of half the disease, sickness, and death. But a holy God cannot tolerate it. He never provided the alcohol, it is only manufactured by the loss of great quantities of good grain and fruits. 17, Present condition of Palestine.

3rd Woe, 18, 19.

To those who sin in spite of knowledge and warning, who are determined to defy Jehovah, are bound to their sin as with a strong rope, harnessed together like horses to a cart, they strain every nerve and drag their punishments with them.

4th Woe, 20.

The consequence of strong drink is to distort the vision, and destroy the powers of the brain and mind. The drunkard cares nothing for right and wrong, it is all alike to him. In the matter of the drink traffic and legislation the arguments used in their favour are just in accord with this verse.

5th Woe, 21.

Blinded by pleasure and self-indulgence, they refuse to acknowledge that they are wrong. A drunkard thinks himself very knowing because his brain is stupefied to the truth.

6th Woe, 22, 23.

Refers to those in power, who drown all sense of justice in drinks, and are open to bribes, and utterly forget the law of God. A nation is doomed when King Alcohol reigns!

Lessons.

No one begins by being a drunkard, so let the young be warned never to begin to take strong drink.

It brings poverty, sickness, demoralization; departure from God and all that is right and good, so never touch it.

In every country where alcohol is introduced, it brings all the evils following these woes, so try to banish it.

Individuals make up the nations, drunken people make up a doomed nation; each one won over to total abstinence helps to save our land, let me be one more on the right side.

God's grace alone can save us from this awful evil; Christ alone can save our souls; let us pray, "Hold Thou me up and I shall be safe."

The Y.M.C.A.

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of the Weston-super-Mare Association has been signalised by the opening of new rooms for the youths' department, which has a separate membership of nearly 100. At the annual meeting, the principal speaker was Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.A., of Oxford. Progress was reported in all departments of the work.

The winter session of the Durham City branch of the Association has been successfully inaugurated. An address was given by the Dean of Durham, Dr. Kitchin, before a numerously attended gathering. Rev, Canon Bruce presided, and the district secretary and Mr. Scott-Elder also took part in the proceedings.

The Bible classes of the Manchester Association are making progress—a German class is now held in addition to the English one. The meetings of the Missionary Parliament continue to be of an instructive and helpful character. A fruitful evangelistic mission has just been conducted at the Association by Mr. Moffett, of Leeds.

The annual meeting of the Poole Association was held recently in the Guildhall in that town. Sir Matthew Dodsworth presided, and the occasion was one of much interest. The membership showed a considerable increase. The work of the former hon. secretary, Mr. Dear, was cordially recognised.

The village Association of Shoreham, Kent, held its first public meeting in the National Schoolroom on the 6th inst. Mr. B. I. Greenwood presided, and addresses were given by the Vicar, the Baptist minister, and a leading friend from the Wesleyans. The Association was formed following a Free Church Mission in the village, and is being warmly encouraged on all sides. Forty members are already enrolled.

Representatives of the Stafford Rooms, Westbourne Grove, Ealing, Hammersmith, Kilburn, and other Associations assembled for their autumn conference at the rooms of the district centre, Titchborne Street, Edgware Road, on the 4th inst., when important questions were considered touching future arrangements for district work. Dr. Parker Young presided, and in addition to the appointment of officers for the ensuing year, a plan whereby the Associations of the district would further the efforts of the National Council in the foreign field was adopted. The reports submitted from the different centres were of an encouraging character, peculiarly that for the Stafford Rooms Association, which has liquidated a debt that had long weighed upon its work.

At the Hackney Association on Sunday afternoon last Mr. F. L. Porter addressed a large meeting of young men on the subject of "Gambling," and gave a vivid description of a visit to the gaming-tables of Monte Carlo and the "Suicides' Cemetery." The Hon. and Rev. Algernon Lawley, M.A. (Rector of Hackney), occupied the chair. The Sunday evening evangelistic service, held after church hours, was conducted by Rev. James Mursell and the Young People's Band from the Downs Baptist Chapel. There was a good attendance. The service indoors was preceded by an open-air meeting and vigorous canvas in the main street. Most of the churches in the neighbourhood are taking these services in turn.

Mr. D. H. Golding writes: "Mr. Charles E. Barraclough has just concluded a series of special meetings at the Clapham Junction Association. On Sunday evenings a good number of young fellows, who usually promenade the St. John's Road, were gathered in. Though manifesting a tendency to be rowdy on entering, they gradually became interested in the addresses of the missioner. One Sunday, when a prayer-meeting was announced, less than a dozen availed themselves of the opportunity of leaving, and several, without any 'button-holing,' decided for Christ. Dinner-hour meetings, lasting twenty minutes, were held outside a factory. A good work has been accomplished amongst youths of eleven to fourteen years of age, a number of whom have expressed a desire to yield their lives to the Lord Jesus Christ, and a large addition to the membership of the junior section will be made."

University Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

On the last Sunday evening before he left Cambridge to take up his new work, the Bishop of Durham bade farewell to the University. He spoke at the usual Sunday evening meeting of the Inter-CollegiateChristian Union. His text was Ephesians vi. 10, "In the Lord and in the power of his might." He made only a few personal remarks. It was, he said, now forty-one years since he came into residence at Trinity College, and just half those years he had been in continuous residence as a man living and teaching the Word. He had much to lament and repent of before God, but he had even more things to thank Him for, One of the greatest of those things for which he thanked God was the blessing he had received through having the blessed privilege to live these one-and-twenty years largely with Cambridge men in their undergraduate or early post-graduate days. He had seen God's strength grandly manifest in their young and powerful lives. He did not know what he should do when severed from the University, but as there was a Northern University he hoped he should find there some echo of the happy days he had spent in Cambridge.

OXFORD.

OXFORD is, perhaps, the home of more philanthropic societies than any other city of its size in the world, and recently a meeting was held to found a Home for the feeble-minded. The Mayor presided, and Miss Douglas Townsend, one of the Association hon. secretaries, spoke. The need of such a Home is strongly felt, as there is a large section of persons not bad enough to be confined in asylums, and yet unable to control themselves. This class is not touched quite by any existing organization. Miss Townsend told the meeting that from seventy-five to eighty children and young persons are being supported, educated, and trained under careful matrons and masters, and that expert medical treatment is provided. Verily this is Christ's work, and we rejoice to hear that the movement is to have the co-operation of the Local Government Board.

At the annual meeting of the Oxford Auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the president of the society, the Marquis of Northampton, occupied the chair. Mr. Crayden Edmunds, secretary of the society in Calcutta, and Rev. Leonard Tucker, of Calabar College, Jamaica, were the deputation. Among those present were the Vice-Chancellor, the Mayor, and the Principals of Wycliffe Hall and Mansfield. The chairman emphasized the importance of the translation work done by the society, and spoke of the labours of missionaries in this direction, who had first to learn a new language, then invent a grammar, and then teach the people to read. The result of all this labour was that the Society had promoted both the translation, printing and distributing directly in 296 languages and dialects, and indirectly in 67 more, making a total of 363.

The Bishop presided on Wednesday at the third annual meeting of the Diocesan Mission to the Deaf and Dumb. The work has now been carried on for two years, with the result that very nearly every deaf and dumb person in the diocese knows of some friend to whom to apply for help and sympathy in any time of need. All are regularly visited, and are brought together at various times to meetings. Here again is the Spirit of the Master, who was ever healing the body that He might find an avenue to the soul.

A United Temperance Mission was opened in the Town Hall on Sunday last. The missioner is the Rev. A. M. Isitt, a Wesleyan minister from New Zealand, a prominent advocate of total abstinence for some years. The committee is a fully representative one and includes Sir William Herschel, the Principals of Wycliffe and Manchester, Rev. and Hon. W. T. Rice, Canon Christopher, Revs. W. Bradfield (Wesleyan) and J. Dann (Baptist), and F. Carden Nash (Secretary of C.E.T.S.). There have been large attendances throughout, and weighty words have been spoken in enunciating the principle which we believe shall still triumph. The fallacy that education is a remedy against intemperance was exposed by marshalling the terrible fact that every year a thousand ministers of the Gospel became victims to strong drink. The duty of the Christian Church to "antagonize the liquor bar and the drink habit" was urged, and the call to give up what we like for others' sake was sounded. Mr. Robinson Souttar, who presided on Tuesday, contended that the "mangled and mutilated Children's Bill" which would become law on January 1, 1902, was a distinct step forward. He instanced this by referring to the clause which holds the sender of the child liable as well as the license holder. If this clause—which the first fought against—had not been passed any parent could have sent their child to a club and not have been punished.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. Canon Gore, of Westminster, who is to succeed Dr. Perowne as Bishop of Worcester, has resigned his connection with the English Church Union, and the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has appointed Rev. E. H. Elwin, principal of Fourah Bay College, Sierra Leone, Bishop of Sierra Leone, in succession to Bishop Taylor Smith, whose appointment as Chaplain-General of the army was announced last week.

The Bishop of Manchester, speaking at his Diocesan Conference, said: "I have lived a simple life, with as plain food and with as simple surroundings, as the very humblest clergyman in my diocese; yet, living simply as I do, I have spent a very large sum more than the income of this See every year since I became your Bishop. If I had not had a private fortune I should to-day be bankrupt."

At St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, on November 6, the Bishop of Southwark unveiled and dedicated the Cruden memorial window, erected at the expense of Mr. W. H. Francis, a manufacturer in the district, to the memory of his mother, and as a memorial to the author of the celebrated Concordance of the Bible, who lies buried in the parish. The portrait of Cruden appears in the medallion at the top of the window, which is in the north wall of the church.

The second monthly meeting for the session of 1901-2 of the Clergy Home Mission Union was held at St. Paul's Chapter House on November 4, Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas (the newly-elected Chairman for the year) presiding. A very able paper was read by Rev. T. W. Drury, Principal of Ridley Hall, on "The Cause of Diminution in the Supply of Clergy," in which he alluded, among other reasons, to the decay of family religion in many homes, to the increasing absence of sound religious teaching in many public schools; and, though he could not admire a man who remains a layman "because it does not pay" to become a clergyman, he admitted that the financial question could not be ignored. Mr. Drury concluded an earnest and very spiritual paper by the suggestion of a Day of Intercession for more young clergy to work in the home mission field.

Congregational.

Rev. W. Densham has retired from the Wareham pastorate after a continuous ministry extending over twenty-seven His place is taken by Rev. C. E. Dickinson, late of Winchester.

Rev. Arthur Furner, of London Road Church, Leicester, has accepted the pastorate of Redland Park Church, Bristol, in succession to the late Rev. Urijah R. Thomas, and hopes to begin his ministry about the end of the year. Mr. Furner has held his Leicester pastorate for seven years.

The 239th anniversary of the Jamaica Row Church, Bermondsey, S.E., was celebrated on October 27, Rev. J. Farren being the preacher. His twenty-nine years of former service here was clearly remembered by the largest congregations being present for many years. On Monday Mr. W. H. Brown presided over a public meeting, and gave a very inspiring address. Mr. Angel reviewed the history of Janeway's times. The annual report, read by Mr. J. E. James, showed the church to be making good progress.

Baptist.

Rev. Richard Richard, who recently resigned his pastorate at Cotham Grove, Bristol, commenced his ministry at Woodberry Down Chapel, Stamford Hill, N., on Sunday last.

On Thursday, October 31, a new mission chapel was opened in the village of Crawley, Hants, where services have been carried on by the City Road Church, Winchester, for the past six years. There was a good gathering in the afternoon, when the inaugural sermon was preached by the pastor, Rev. Arthur W. Wood. A public meeting was subsequently held, when the chapel was crowded. The services were continued with encouraging results. The chapel seats 100, and the total cost will be about £250. There is no other Free Church in the village.

A meeting was held last week at Chatsworth Road Church, West Norwood, S.E., in celebration of the fourth anniversary of Pastor Archibald G. Brown's settlement. Mr. Thomas A. Curtis (church secretary) said that during Mr. Brown's ministry the church has shown remarkable progress. The membership has largely increased. A new lecture hall and class-rooms have been erected and put to good purpose. Mr. Brown has attracted increased congregations, and helped to swell the membership of the church by no other means than a faithful exposition of the truths of Holy Scripture.

On November 4, Cornwall Road Church, Brixton Hill, celebrated the fourth anniversary of the formation of the church, and the settlement of the pastor (Rev. C. H. Sheen). Sermons were preached on Sunday morning and evening by the pastor, and on Monday Mr. B. J. Greenwood presided over a large and enthusiastic gathering of members and friends. Encouraging reports were read by both the secretary and treasurer. God has been richly blessing this church, and universal thankfulness is felt that so many have decided for Christ during the past year.

Methodist.

Rev. W. E. Gilbert (Bible Christian) is devoting three months' work to the Million Pledges Crusade. He is superintending the work in East Anglia. His place at Chatham is being supplied by Rev. G. E. Welch.

In close association with Streatham Wesleyan Church there is a prosperous mission hall situated in the crowded artisan quarter of West Streatham. The work has long since outgrown the existing premises, and an enlargement scheme has been started.

Three important pieces of extension have been sanctioned by the Committee of the Wesleyan Children's Home. Three new houses are to be added to the Industrial Branch at Farnborough, thus providing for 150 boys. A larger receiving house, in which from thirty to fifty boys could be temporarily accommodated is to be secured, and the number of children boarded out in cottages is to be increased.

The work carried on by the Hoxton Primitive Methodist Mission includes many departments of religious service among a large population of very poor people. By evangelistic meetings, a medical mission, and systematic visitation, many have been influenced for good. The superintendent, Rev. Thomas Jackson, 279, Whitechapel Road, E., is making an appeal just now in the financial interests of the work.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod, of St. Columba's Church (Scottish), Belgravia, has intimated the resignation of his charge. Up to his illness in May, says Dr. Macleod, he had no intention of taking such a step. If he can judge aright, the cause at St. Columba's was never more hopeful than it is now, and he is convinced that if there must be a change of ministry it should take place when the church is prosperous.

The ministerial jubilee of Rev. Dr. David McEwan, of Clapham, was publicly celebrated last week at a large meeting in the church at Clapham. Among those who took part were Revs. James Christie (Moderator of Synod), J. G. Train, R. Wardlaw Thompson, and Thomas Spurgeon. Dr. McEwan said he trusted that there was still work for him to do for the Master. He had laboured for the love of God and the good of his fellow men.

Society of Friends.

A fruitful Gospel temperance mission week, ending the 2nd inst., organized by T. J. Lee, was held in the meeting-house at Pangbourne, the room being at times crowded. A high tone pervaded the meetings: many pledges were taken, and deep impressions of truth made.

A meeting for those engaged in adult schools, missions, and other evangelistic work, was held recently in York. John S. Rowntree presided, and briefly indicated the nature of the aggressive Christian work carried on by the York congregation. Some account was given by various speakers of the results of their work, the promotion of temperance in one or two of the villages near to York, the establishment of working-men's clubs, &c.

Henry Southall and H. S. Newman visited Bradford, as a deputation from the Home Mission Committee, on the 27th ult. Both were present at the meeting for worshipin the morning and had acceptable service. On the following day Mary Anna Newman joined in addressing a well-attended social gathering at the meeting-house. The speakers laid stress upon the right standard of discipleship being set by members; then the masses around could be moved in the direction of righteousness. "The principles of the Society of Friends are nothing unless they raise up a spirit of love and co-operation."

The Salvation Army.

The Holiness Meetings now being conducted by Mrs. Bramwell Booth in the Lower Exeter Hall on Thursday afternoons are being largely attended, and the workers are much encouraged. Large numbers of people have come forward to consecrate themselves to God's service. The meetings are to be continued during the month of November. Mrs. Booth will value the prayers and assistance of God's people.

Mr. John Soames, Howard Street Gospel Mission, S.W., writes: "We have just completed our open-air work for the season, after a fruitful campaign by an earnest band of workers. Sinners have been impressed and backsliders restored, while drunkards have signed the pledge. We are just entering on our winter's work. On Thursday last we gave the first free meal to 200 poor children."

The third anniversary of Comet Street Mission Hall, Deptford, has just been celebrated. Rev. E. W. Shaw preached in the afternoon, and Mr. F. De Courcy Hamilton in the evening, and at the public meeting which followed Alderman R. Gow, J.P., presided. Interesting addresses were given by Councillor A. Good and Mr. George Hughes (hon. secretary), and others. There was a large attendance, and the meeting was in every way a success.

On Tuesday, November 5, at the Central Hall, Philpot Street, E., in connection with the Young Men's Bible Study and Training Association, a special Bible gathering was held. Rev. Samuel Wilkinson spoke on "Methods of Bible Study," and Mr. G. E. Page on "The Authority of the Word." The doctrinal basis of the association was given by the general secretary (Mr. Percy W. Heward), and short addresses by Rev. T. R. Couch and Mr. J. Reeves Heward helped to make up an encouraging and profitable evening. Particulars of the Association may be obtained from 14, Pier Head, Wapping, London, E.

Fallen Asleep.

Miss AMELIA CONDER, daughter of the late Josiah Conder, the well-known hymnologist. Miss Conder was a member of Queen's Road Congregational Church, Forest Hill, S.E.—Mr. JOHN SNALAM, founder of St. George's Baptist Church, Preston, of which he retained the oversight up to his death, which occurred at the age of eighty-two.—Whitwick Baptist Church has lost a valued worker by the death of Mr. THOMAS COX, who was for many years deacon and an active Sunday school worker.—Rev. JOHN MAUCHLEN, for twenty-three years Presbyterian minister at Richmond, has died in Glasgow. Mr. Mauchlen had been laid aside during the past six months suffering from a mental malady, which from the first left faint hope of a recovery.—Aged ninety-two, Mrs. JANE HOWARD BROWN, for years an active member at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, especially in connection with Mother's Meetings.—Rev. Dr. HARE, Dean of Ossory, aged seventy-one years.—At Bangor, suddenly, Rev. JOHN WILSON, Methodist minister, a powerful preacher, and a most able open-air evangelist, aged seventy-five years.—At Liverpool, Rev. W. B. LE BEAT, an Irish Methodist minister, aged eighty-five years.—At Dublin, Rev. ROBERT DOWLING, Methodist minister, a promising and earnest pastor, aged thirty-two years.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

"Scriptures for India." On page 13 we give particulars of the extensive scheme, which is being widely taken up, for supplying copies of the Scriptures in English and vernacular, between now and Christmas, to various classes in India, as a worthy and lasting memorial to our late beloved Queen-Empress. We bespeak for this endeavour the hearty co-operation of our readers, in the belief that nothing but the Word of God, whose "entrance bringeth light," will meet the present conditions of missionary progress in that important country. We think it only due to our readers to couple with the scheme the honoured name of Lord Radstock. Although he is by no means anxious to figure prominently in it, yet friends will, we are sure, be glad to associate the scheme with his long interest in, and labours on behalf of, the cause of the Gospel in India. Let the Christians of Britain rise to this unique opportunity, and send in their 2d. for a Gospel, 1s. for a New Testament, and 5s. for a Bible, with the least possible delay.

Notes on the Tabernacle. Readers who cherish the memory of Lady Lilias Sherbrooke will welcome the publication of a small memorial volume—NOTES ON THE TABERNACLE (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). Leaders and teachers of Bible Classes will find here, in compact and readily-available form, much valuable information on matters of fact, with suggestions as to spiritual lessons. The introduction is written by Lady Kathleen Eliot, and the preface by Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

Higher Criticism Examined. We are glad to see that our alert contemporary, the Life of Faith, is inserting an important series of articles from the gifted pen of Rev. John Smith, D.D., of Edinburgh, upon "The Integrity of Scripture: Plain Reasons for Rejecting the Critical Hypothesis." The terrible unsettlement of faith, and the perplexities occasioned in the minds of the younger generation by the plausible claims of the Higher Criticism, render such an examination of them by a masterly mind both timely and necessary. Theories as slender and changing as the clouds are propagated by critics as if they were of rock foundation; and we shall be glad to know that the articles referred to secure the attention and wide circulation that they deserve.

The Credibility of the Gospel. When the malignant attack upon the Gospels appeared in a much-praised Encyclopædia a short time ago, we described it as "Higher Criticism Run Mad." That the verdict of time will be the same concerning it, is becoming clearer every day. Christian scholars, put upon their mettle, have shown how utterly unscientific and false are the methods of the Iconoclastic German. Dr. Fairbairn, dealing with the whole subject in a marvellous sermon, put the issue in a popular form for ordinary people in this striking manner:

> Do you think that the greatest of all facts in history can be explained by five negatives? If you want to explain Jesus, you must explain all He did, and I want to know how five negative texts can be made to explain all his positive achievements? . . . How does it happen that this Person crucified, condemned, forsaken as a strictly natural man, has absolutely changed the world?

This is unanswerable, because it is scientific and historic. It is the only true way of approaching the Gospel. Here is something done—a grand effect; and it demands a grand and adequate cause. And the only cause equal to the effect is the God-man. All the criticism in the world is impotent in the presence of that fact.

Dr. Ryle and Free Churchmen. It would be an excellent thing if the kindly spirit of the Bishop of Exeter entered more largely into the question of Anglican relationships with Free Churchmen. His lordship has not only spoken with the utmost kindness of his brethren, but he has struck a practical note, which could easily be put into practice, if personal folly and bigotry did not bar the way. At a diocesan meeting in Exeter, last week, the Bishop spoke very freely—

> It is harmful to our Christian Church life that so many of us view Nonconformity in such a hopeless fashion, as if we acquiesced in the divisions of Christendom, and despaired of a better understanding. Reunion should be brought about, not with the Roman or Greek Churches, but with our brothers and sisters who live next door to us. There is an enormous fund of Christian life in this country, from which the Church of England is separated largely by sentiment and tradition.

This is a true and a strong note, and it contains matter enough to set people thinking along very practical lines.

The New Bishop of Worcester. The appointment of Canon Gore to the Bishopric of Worcester, while it has delighted the High Church party to which he belongs, will be received with mixed feelings by those Evangelical Churchmen who belong to the See associated with the names of Bishops Philpott and Perowne. The new bishop, however, has the quality of fairness as well as courage strongly marked in him, and he is not likely to ride roughshod over the convictions of his Evangelical clergy and their parishioners. His theological works, while leaning towards ecclesiasticism on the one side, and towards "criticism" on the other, are earnestly constructive in tone, and the fundamental doctrines of the faith are fearlessly proclaimed in his sermons. There are few men who have a wider influence in the Church of England, and, if he carries his strongly humanitarian and devotional qualities into his episcopal sphere, he will do good work in his exalted position.

The Apathy of the Masses. In dealing with the subject of Church Attendance, in his Ancient Merchants Lecture, Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers urged very powerfully that the truth of God is not affected by the number of people who choose to interest themselves in it, and he asked "if the pulpit exercises less influence, is there any fault in the pulpit itself?"

> It is not a question of high education; what is demanded from the preacher is that he himself should be behind his message. . . . The pulpit might indirectly be one of the most powerful agents in the advancement of social reform; but they were not there primarily as the teachers of social reform. Neither did he think the pulpit the place for lectures on Biblical criticism. In the first ages of Christianity there was no Bible, and yet the most wonderful triumphs were won by the simple preaching of Christ. Christ is the essence of Christianity.

Speaking on the same subject at the annual meeting of the Fulham Free Church Council, Rev. Thomas Law said:—

> Thousands of genuine working-men work inside the Christian churches, but they regretted that the overwhelming proportion of the toiling classes were outside. During the last thirty years the population of London had increased by 50 per cent., but the church accommodation had only grown at the rate of five per cent. London was galloping to the worst possible selfishness; democracy without Christ was dangerous and destructive. If they were not in the churches, working men were not sceptics. What they had to face was not scepticism, but hardened materialism.

It is easier to ignore God than to deny his existence, and, on the other hand, it is easier to reach the careless than the infidel. If people will not come to hear the Gospel, the Divine message must be carried to them. Christ himself taught the doctrine of compulsion. "Compel them to come in." "This is his commandment, that men believe. . . ."

Credulity versus Faith. It is remarkable how blindly many of those who attack the Christian belief give their unquestioning faith to nebulous and invertebrate theories. A singular illustration of this credulity is afforded in a recent publication in which the writer of a paper upon The Decay of the Churches refers to "the great discovery (by Darwin) of the manner in which the living world in all its forms has arisen, thereby giving the death-blow to the creation theory." As a matter of fact, Darwin recognised the existence of a "Great First Cause," but his theories (and they were only theories and assumptions which many leading scientists still reject) have been pushed beyond all reason by his disloyal disciples. To make Darwinism responsible for the alleged smaller attendance at Divine worship is too ridiculous. Whatever the working-man absentee is troubled about, it certainly is not such abstractions as the origin of species, and the survival of the fittest.

Christians and Evangelism. In apostolic days, to be a Christian involved being an evangelist also. Every saved person sought the salvation of others. That ideal seems to have departed. In place of it, we are surprised to find how much indifference, and often positive hostility, are exhibited by church members towards efforts of home evangelization. Evangelists tell us that frequently their greatest difficulties come from professing Christians, who hinder, by indifference or stupid criticism, anything that savours of mission work. We hear of deacons carefully abstaining from mission services in their own churches, on the ground that such work is "vulgar," although the missioner may be a London pastor of culture and spiritual power. We have heard of several choirs refusing to sing "Sankey's hymns," on the ground that they are "not classical enough." It is pitiful in the extreme. If this spirit rules, need any one wonder why churches are not filled? We need, surely, a revival among church members themselves.

The Need for Leaders. It is a remarkable thing thing that many of the leading newspapers, representing both political parties, are crying out for men of commanding strength to lead the country out of the sad confusion into which it has fallen. Supporters of the Government are as strong in this demand as are the members of the Opposition. In fact, the whole question has been entirely removed from the area of party politics, and has become one of national urgency. If, instead of the recriminations in which both sides indulge, we could see produced some strong leaders who would go right to the heart of the disquiet and distrust which reign, and remove their cause, the country would be reassured. But we shall not develop such leaders until there is less play and more serious thought amongst us. It would seem at present as if some of the rulers were more concerned about polo, golf, and shooting, than about those events which the papers are discussing, and which have produced such widespread uneasiness. Never has there beengreater need for men "who have understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do."

Shipwreck and Sorrow. The terrible gales of last week have carried upon their wild wings bereavement and sorrow into many a home, and caused the loss of brave and valuable lives. It is only at these times that we adequately realize the perils of those who "go down to the sea in ships," and who in so doing bring the means of subsistence and comfort to us from the ends of the earth. This nation, having outgrown the capacity of our "tight little island" to support it, is peculiarly dependent, not only on its navy for security, but on its mercantile marine for its maintenance. We owe our sailors a priceless social debt. Their life is one of frequent privation and danger, and of much temptation. There should be a warm place for them in our thoughts, our prayers, and our sympathy, especially in these times of widespread calamity. The heart of the people of this country goes out in fellow-feeling towards those who have recently lost fathers, brothers, and friends, not only on the field of battle, but in the boundless deep. The public appeal made on behalf of the seven widows and forty-six orphans of the noble fellows who perished in the Caister lifeboat, in their heroic endeavours to save others, is one to which a generous response should be made. Particulars are given on page 28.

This Weary War! During the early period of the terrible war in South Africa, the Christian public of this country were deeply impressed with the duty of united as well as private prayer for its speedy conclusion, and meetings for the purpose were frequent and widespread. Have our ministers and churches grown weary in their devotions, or lost faith in the power of "prevailing prayer" for peace? We seldom hear of any special gatherings for this purpose, though most preachers usually include a more or less formal petition for it in their public devotions. The war is now well into its third year, and is causing as much misery, material disaster, and loss of life as ever. Is it not time for a revival of the spirit of prayer in the churches on this subject? Whatever be our differences of opinion as to the origin of the war, there is none as to the awful tragedy of its continuance, and during the next few weeks it would be well for Christian people to join in common and earnest prayer that God may mercifully bring it to an end.

International Righteousness. In a powerful address at the Friends' Meeting House, Manchester, a few evenings ago, Miss Ellen Robinson, after dealing with the subject of personal righteousness apart altogether from its bearings upon national dealings, expressed some thoughts which deserve special consideration at the present critical time. She said that many people assert that the principles of Christ are not applicable to international life, and that it would be vain to attempt to carry out those of the Sermon on the Mount in national affairs; an argument which lands them in a strange dilemma, for a Christian was thus forced to act in a double way, one as a man, and another as as a Christian. She asked, therefore:—

> At what point could that which is wrong in the individual become right when done by the many? International life, as we see it, is frankly heathen. . . . If we leave politics out of Christianity, we leave Christianity out of politics.

National Waste. Mr. J. H. Whitley, M.P., contributes to a contemporary an article under the above title, in which he voices admirably the ideas of the most thoughtful Englishmen concerning our present prospects as a country. He points out that with increasing competition in trade, and the recent revelations of our inefficiency in various departments, our national waste must be stopped immediately, if we are to hold our own. The waste through drinking is seriously draining us. If this were stopped, says Mr. Whitley, "the country would not know itself, for the power that would pulse through every artery of life." Then there is the waste through idle wealth, and the waste through unused talent. Fitness—moral and mental fitness—and neither money nor birth, will have to determine the right of a man to lead the country. The churches have the work of making men of this type.

The Progress of Missions. The supporters of missionary work in all parts of the world naturally desire to know how the work is progressing among the heathen, and whether the numerical results are in keeping with immense and patient efforts put forth year by year. Fortunately the figures of the recent census in India put us in possession of facts in that great missionary field that are distinctly encouraging. A summary of these is given in a letter to The Times. In the "minor provinces" alone the increase since 1891 amounts to 66,000, i.e., seventy per cent. of the total. There is no evidence to show how much of this result is due to natural increase of the Christian population, and how much to fresh conversion; but the figures show that the work of evangelization has been making good progress during this period, exceeding, indeed, the most sanguine expectations of those engaged in it. This is a great encouragement to supporters of missions.

A Higher Standard. But figures, after all, do not prove everything; they are not the only nor yet the chief standard of commutation. The subsidiary influence of the work cannot be tabulated, nor can we estimate the number of hidden or timid believers upon whom the Lord can to-day, as in Elijah's time, lay his hand. We commend to our readers the touching story referred to in our Literary Supplement (p. 19), in which the heroic missionary lady, after enduring untold sufferings and the loss of her noble husband for the cause of Christ in Tibet, declares unhesitatingly, "The sacrifice was not too great!" The world calls this Folly; Christ calls it Fidelity.

Stage-Struck Girls. The question of the possibility of an honourable career for young girls on the stage is one of those perplexing questions which are solved only to return presently in full force. The negative answers do not come alone from the religious portion of the community. Some of the sternest denunciations of stage morality come from those who live "behind the scenes." Not unfrequently the theatrical papers contain solemn warnings to "stage-struck girls" not to venture into the uncertain whirlpool of the drama for a living. One of these figures in a recent article in the Free Lance, by Miss Annie Hughes. This writer is specially anxious to point out that only the girl who has "common-sense, influence, self-respect, as well as the usual attractive qualities," and a "sufficient income to live upon, independent of the profession she is so anxious to adopt, is safe." Let all note the last-mentioned qualification.

Goodness and Fortune. It is a significant note of our time that such a publication—in parts—as "Fortunes Made in Business," has become possible. It is simply a response to the demand, everywhere heard, how to make a fortune in the most rapid manner. Some great service will be rendered, however, if it is shown that true success in business is a matter of hard work and brains; of honesty and the fear of God. We shall welcome anything that will teach the present rising generation these old lessons, rather than the modern ones of speculation and gambling, which shelter themselves too often under the name of "business." One writer, in telling his story of success, uses these words:—

> I am not given to cant, but I must say that I honestly believe that the great secret of my success in life has been due to my mother's influence. She was a very poor woman who came from Wales, but she was a genuine Christian, and she always taught me that, whatever else happened, I must go through life straight.

Justice and Mercy. England has travelled a long way in the direction of the reform of Criminal Law, but there is still much to be done. It is almost incredible that only a century ago there were 200 offences on the list for which the penalty was death, and that when Queen Victoria ascended the throne, there were 53,000 convicts in captivity, a number now reduced to something under 4,000, although in the meantime the population has been increased by 13,000,000. No doubt a large proportion of this decline can be traced to the substitution of remedial for merely punitive treatment, and therefore the figures are encouraging to those who are endeavouring to Christianize more and more the prison methods.

Custom House Censorship. The cause of public morality undoubtedly is the gainer by the action of the Custom House officials in stopping the importation of a large quantity of vile French prints and novels, and it is to be hoped that the powers of the Customs Department, in regard to the abominable traffic in such wares, will be largely increased. The indignation which is being expressed in certain circles in France, may be regarded simply as the tribute which vice pays to virtue. Meanwhile, however, it may reasonably be asked, are we quite consistent, seeing that those who wish to find filth of the kind may obtain it, in a translated form, at some of the Municipal Public Libraries—not to mention the action of the postal authorities in delivering pernicious circulars and catalogues from house to house?

Practical Papers.

On Friendship—2.

In contrast to the story referred to last week, can we find a better example of firm, true friendship than that of David and Jonathan? It was a curious case of love at first sight on the part of a young prince for a shepherd lad. In breathless excitement Jonathan had watched the unequal contest between David and Goliath. Indeed, with his armour-bearer he had had a skirmish with the Philistines a short time before; and, with his innate admiration of valour and pluck, had doubtless shouted himself hoarse in praise of the young champion. David is brought before King Saul to receive his grateful recognition, and is escorted to the palace which the king declared should henceforth be his home.

Thus the two young fellows learned to know and love each other—"and the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul;" and before the day was out the young prince said, "You cannot live in our palace clad in a shepherd's garb; you must have a new robe;" and, as a happy thought struck him, he exclaimed, in a generous impulse—"Here, take mine! Look! it fits you down to the ground; and here, take this, and this, and this!"—"and Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David; and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle!" (1 Sam. xviii. 4). Thus were these two pure young hearts, knit in their wondrous love.

Days passed on. David by his wise behaviour won Saul's heart, and came and went as he chose, with no one to say him nay. But, hark! there's a sound of singing in the streets, and music and dancing. The women from the cities of Israel come forth to join in the general thanksgiving at the rout of the enemy. Saul's face beams with satisfaction as they sing, "Saul hath slain his thousands!" But the next moment a shadow clouds his brow as he hears, "but David his ten thousands!" "And Saul eyed David from that day forward."

Next day David stood in the royal chamber, instrument in hand to play before the king, but in a fit of rage Saul flung a javelin at him, and nearly pinned him lifeless to the wall. This was the beginning of the enmity which led the king to base extremes, but which infinitely strengthened the bond between his son and David. In vain did Jonathan plead with his father against his unjust hate. At one time Saul would say in contrite mood, "You are quite right, Jonathan—As the Lord liveth, he shall not be slain" (xix. 6); at another it would be, "You young fool, can you not see how this friendship of yours will end? David will wrest the kingdom from you—For as long as the son of Jesse liveth, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom" (xx. 31). Again the javelin flies upon its deadly errand, and David flees to save his life.

Then Jonathan, fearless, noble-hearted, went to David in the field, and swore by the God above that, kingdom or no kingdom, in life or death, he would be true to his friend. Yet he loved his father too, and tried, ah, so hard, to bring about a reconciliation. But it was of no use; on a third occasion the javelin is shot forth, at him this time—"whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David"—ay, and himself too. Again they met in the field—"and they kissed one another, and wept with one another, until David exceeded. And Jonathan said to David, Go in peace; forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of the Lord, saying, The Lord be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever."

Once more they met, perhaps two years later, when David had been driven, "like a partridge upon the mountains; and an owl in the desert," by reason of Saul's relentless hostility. Then came Jonathan to him "in the wood, and strengthened his hand in God." Ah, that is when we need and appreciate a friend—when the tide of adversity is in full flow; when the palace is exchanged for the cave, and the soft bed for the sward of the forest; when life is a burden, and food is scarce; when our "days are in the yellow leaf," and "the flowers and fruits of love are gone." It is then that we need a Jonathan to sustain us by the fidelity of his heart, and, above all, to strengthen our hands in God. O priceless friendship! Better the cave of Adullam with thee, than Israel's palace if thou art not there!

Never again did David and Jonathan meet to cheer each other's lonely hearts (for was not the heart of the young prince as lonely as that of the fugitive shepherd lad?). When next David saw his beloved friend, his face was cold in death, and in the anguish of his soul he uttered that supremely pathetic lament—"I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleasant hast thou been unto me; thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women."

This is the only kind of friendship worth having. Pluck and Piety are its attributes; the pluck that will stand by us "in the wood" in face of all the world; the piety that in the hour of our dire distress will "strengthen our hands in God." No friendship however loyal, no fidelity however true, has attained its highest end, until the natural thus merges into the spiritual. Then it becomes holy, acceptable unto God.

Jonadab tempted his friend to sin, and cruelly mocked at his fate. Jonathan strengthened his friend in God, and stood by him true till death. Jonadab forsook his friend, to curry favour with the king, that he might further his own interest. Jonathan incurred the king's displeasure for the sake of his friend, even against his own interest, cheerfully resigning his prospects of the kingdom, and practically laying down his life for his sake.

And Christ—our "Friend that sticketh close than a brother"—what of Him? He left his palace to save the world struggling in the darksome wood of enmity and sin. He died to save, not his friends, but his enemies; to reconcile them, not to a hostile king, but unto One whose infinite love yearned for their salvation. Therefore He "suffered, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."

To-day He is "despised and rejected of men." Contumely is poured upon his head, and sorrow fills his heart. Will you dare to go forth to Him "in the wood"? Will you face the world, and rank upon his side? If so, in the day of his glory He will say, "Father, this is the man, the woman, who, when men reviled Me, dared to take up the cross and follow Me." For "Whosoever shall confess Me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven; but whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I deny before my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. x. 32, 33). Elijah;

The Prophet of all Time.

By Rev. F. S. Webster, Rector of All Souls, Langham Place, W.

The chief influences in the formation of character are those arising from parentage and environment. But the grace of God is stronger. It is the direct working of the Spirit of the living God in the soul, that really determines the character of a man. St. Paul said, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

1. We know nothing about the parentage of Elijah. The abrupt way in which he is introduced on the page of Scripture is almost mysterious. It is certainly significant. We have in 1 Kings xvi. a dismal picture of the moral and political decadence of Israel. The inspired record of the nation's apostasy reaches its climax in the last verse, which describes the rebuilding of Jericho, and the judgments that accompanied it. The very next verse (originally there were no chapter divisions) introduces us to Elijah. The hour makes the man, but the man may be God's answer to the evil of his day or Satan's, an Elijah or an anti-Christ. Elijah was God's answer to the reckless and defiant sin of his times.

But Elijah was more than the prophet of a particular day and generation. The Apostle, writing to the Hebrews, dwells upon the silence of Scripture as to the birth, parentage, and decease, of Melchizedek. He regards this silence as pointing to the Divine origin of the One only Priest of the New Covenant, and to the eternal and intransmissible character of his priesthood. Does not the silence of Scripture as to the birth and parentage of Elijah suggest in like manner that Elijah is pre-eminently the typical forerunner of the Prophet whom Moses foretold, and the type or pattern of prophets of every age?

Elijah, like Melchizedek, may be said to be without beginning of days or end of life, and so to abide a prophet continually. He alone, in the time of the law, escaped death. He is to come again before the great and terrible day of the Lord. The angel said expressly of John the Baptist that he should be in the spirit and power of Elias. There is something permanent, therefore, about his type of character. In our Lord's time Elijah was regarded as

A living and abiding power.

"Art thou Elias?" was the question put to John the Baptist. "It is Elias," Herod said when he heard of Jesus Christ. "Let be; let us see if Elias will come to save Him," the Jews cried at Calvary. So among orthodox Jews to-day: a chair is placed for Elijah at the circumcision of every son; and the door is left wide open at every passover season in the hope that Elijah may appear. So deep was the impression made by Elijah, not by his words, but by his deeds, by the man himself, that to generations since he has been a living reality, a voice still calling men to repentance, a judge still executing God's righteous sentence upon the wicked. He is the prophet of all time and of every nation. We know nothing of Tishbi, of Gilead, from which he seems to have been named the Tishbite. Some, indeed, would render the words, adopting a different pointing, "Elijah the stranger, of the strangers of Gilead," and, if so, it may be that, like Melchizedek, he was a Gentile, one outside the chosen nation. Or the word may come from a root meaning "to turn," and the verse may be read, "Elijah the reformer, of the inhabitants of Gilead." All this is uncertain; and this uncertainty as well as other elements about this great man, lead us to regard him as belonging not to one nation, but to all nations; not to one epoch, but to all time.

2. The times in which he lived are clearly revealed to us. Ahab, King of Israel, was the seventh from Jeroboam. Of Omri, his father, it was said that he "did worse than all that were before him"; but Ahab seems to have outstripped his father in wickedness. Both, however, were successful rulers, and the country under them enjoyed a fair measure of prosperity. Raised to the throne by the choice of the army, after two dynasties had fallen, and three kings of Israel had been put to death by successful insurrection, Omri's first care was to strengthen the kingdom. He fortified the city of Samaria, and made it the capital in place of Tirzah. He enacted statutes which we find referred to by the prophet Micah, as still observed in Israel. And he renewed the old alliance with Tyre and Zidon. This was done probably for political reasons, partly to strengthen himself against Syria, and partly to gain for the trade of his country the help of the famous commerce of the Phœnicians. Two fatal steps were taken to cement the alliance. Ahab was married to Jezebel, the daughter of Eth Baal, King of the Zidonians, and the worship of Baal was introduced into Samaria. This new religion, backed by the influence of the bigoted Jezebel, quickly infected the whole nation. The corrupt worship of Jehovah, which Jeroboam had introduced, was unable to stand against it.

ISRAEL'S IDOLATRY.

Jeroboam had placed the golden calves at Dan and Bethel in order to prevent the people worshipping at Jerusalem. He broke the second commandment while pretending to keep the first. But such a mongrel religion, denounced by the prophets and discredited by a succession of national disasters, had no real hold upon the conscience of the nation.

Baal worship, pure and simple, however, appealed to some of their strongest instincts. The worship of the Zidonians was the worship of the fertilizing and the productive powers in nature. The Phœnicians were not great through power of intellect, nor by force of discipline and good government like the Greeks and Romans; theirs was a material greatness, the result of extended commerce and abounding wealth. So their religion was the grossest materialism. Power divorced from righteousness, and lust substituted for love, were the chief ideas underlying their worship. These appealed with irresistible attraction to a nation already turned aside from simplicity in life and worship to luxury and idolatry. The whole nation delighted in this "worship of deified abundance under a splendid and sensuous ceremonial." Before long the immorality so terribly described by Hosea was rampant in Israel, for while Baal was the impersonation of energy and strength, and Ashtoreth the impersonation of impurity. The worst excesses of vice were openly sanctioned and encouraged in every idol temple. The abominations which brought down God's judgment upon the Amorites were now common in Israel. So we read Ahab "did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel."

GOD'S ANSWER TO THE TIMES.

(3). The man who was God's answer to these times is fully portrayed. (a) He was a "man of like passions with us." This must never be forgotten. He was not cast in some heroic mould, half-divine and half-human. He was an ordinary, real, fallen man like any of us; the greatness which he displayed was not inherent, but derived. (b) He was a man intimate with God. This is the open secret of his greatness. His name shows it. Elijah means either "Jehovah is God," or "Jehovah is my strength." This truth, known and realized, was the rock fact on which he rested, and it made him steadfast and immovable. There was nothing indefinite or uncertain in his faith. He knew Jehovah. God was to him the living and the ever-present God. The age of miracles could never pass for this man of faith, for God still lived. Difficulties and opposition could not make him fear or turn aside, for he stood in the presence chamber of One who never failed.

How he gained this knowledge, whether godly parents had trained him in the Book of the Law, or Jehovah had Himself visited him in the mountains of Gilead, revealing his majesty and power, in tempest and whirlwind and lightning flash, we are not told. But the formula with which he introduced his message to Ahab ("as the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand") was no dead formula, but the utterance of a living faith which animated and governed his life.

(c) He was a man of fervent prayer. So James tells us. He prayed fervently that it might not rain. This was not his first prayer. In other ways not recorded he had learned to bind heaven to earth. So he met the first crisis of his life as a man of experience in prayer.

ELIJAH'S TERRIBLE PRAYER.

(d) He was, further, a man who preferred judgment to sin. This is his distinguishing feature. The sin of his nation drove him to shut up heaven by prevailing prayer. It is impossible to explain either the statement of St. James or the message to Ahab in any other way. We are not told that the Word of the Lord came to Elijah: "Go shew thyself to Ahab, and I will send drought and famine upon the earth." We are told that Elijah prayed fervently that God would do this.

It was a terrible prayer. We cannot imagine the Christians of England praying God to continue the war in South Africa, to spread the scourge of influenza and small-pox, to increase the number of deaths through gale and tempest, to devastate the empire with famine and plague because of the idolatry of our day—the covetousness, the luxury, the profligacy and excess, the despite done to the Bible, to the Sabbath, and to the High Priesthood of Jesus Christ. The state of Piccadilly at midnight is, of course, a greater evil than a fourteen-penny income tax; but does the nation feel it so? We need repentance more than we need peace. Elijah saw no hope of repentance.

The law was practically powerless. Even the terrible fate that came upon the family of Hiel had not aroused the nation. So Elijah, remembering the warning in Deuteronomy, prayed God to shut up the heaven that there might be no rain. God forbid that we should repeat this prayer, for our nation is not yet apostate; but may the zeal for righteousness, which prefers judgment to sin, be granted us.

(e) He was a man who dared to pledge God to the execution of the judgment he had prayed for. This judgment was a most conspicuous overthrow of Baal. The fruitfulness of Canaan was ascribed to Baal. That fruitfulness was now to be withered by a scorching sun, and all the idols of Baal could afford no relief. But how bold to pledge God to it before it came to pass! The green hills threaded by the little silver streams, the fertile valleys bathed in copious dew, seemed to laugh at his prediction. It was the wild frenzy of a madman. Jehovah would never turn a garden into a wilderness at the prayer of one man. But so it was; and the man who prayed for it was the true lover of his country. Elijah, who loved righteousness more than prosperity, and truth more than peace, was the real patriot, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof. Something of the spirit of Elijah, terrible as it seems, is the chief need of this generation.

Waiting His Call.

Waiting his call in the morning light—
Waiting his call for me;
Waiting his call 'mid the shades of night,
Then shall his face I see.
Yet never, oh, never awaiting his call
Where He cannot be with me.

Waiting his call 'mid life's busy scene—
Waiting his call for me;
Waiting his call in the hour serene,
Then shall his face I see.
Yet never, oh, never awaiting his call
Where He cannot be with me.

Waiting his call when on service bent,
Waiting his call for me;
Waiting his call when in labour sent,
Then shall his face I see.
Yet never, oh, never awaiting his call
Where He cannot be with me.

Waiting his call when the eye grows dim,
Waiting his call for me;
As quietly dies the evening hymn,
Then shall his face I see.
Yet never, oh, never awaiting his call
Where He cannot be with me.

Waiting his call at the table spread,
Waiting his call for me;
Waiting his call as I break the bread,
Then shall his face I see.
Oh, then were my joy to hear his call,
With Himself for aye to be!

ALBERT MIDLANE.

The Week of Prayer.

JANUARY 6-12, 1902.

Programme.

THE Evangelical Alliance has issued its invitation for the annual world-wide Week of United Prayer. It is requested that, in addition to attending to the programme in its division of subjects for confession, praise, and prayer, friends will also pray daily for foreign missions.

SUBJECTS FOR PRAYER.

Sunday, January 5. — SERMONS: Christ Jesus the Head; our One Prophet, Priest, and King (Col. i. 18; Eph. i. 22; Col. ii. 10-19; Acts iii. 22, 23; Heb. vii. 3-17; Heb. ii. 17; Heb. iv. 14; Heb. x. 21; John i. 49; 1 Tim. vi. 13-16).

Monday, Jan. 6.—THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL.—Faith in our Lord Jesus, and in God the Father who sent Him to save. Indwelling by God the Holy Spirit. Obedience to the truth. True estimate of spiritual realities. The Church doing God's Will and rightly representing Christ, always and everywhere. The clear recognition of all believers as constituting the one Church; and of Jesus Christ as the Head. (Col. ii. 19; 2 Tim. iii. 10; Eph. iv. 3-6; 1 Cor. xii. 12-31; Phil. iii. 12-21.)

Tuesday, Jan. 7.—CHRISTENDOM.—Abounding errors in doctrine and practice. Needless divisions. Assumptions of infallibility. The Sabbath dishonoured. Sacred Scripture doubted, discouraged, or forbidden. The Holy Ghost resisted, grieved, quenched. The Jew persecuted, and the world left largely unevangelized. (1 Pet. iv. 7-19; Matt. xiii. 36-52; 2 Pet. ii.)

Wednesday, Jan. 8.—NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.—International relationship, and action. Biblical principles and their application. Political and social action. Liberty of worship and teaching. The Golden Rule. All rulers acknowledging the one supreme King. War. Drink. Opium. Slavery. Impurity. National exclusiveness and self-conceit. (Psa. ii.; Matt. xxiv. 4-14; Rom. xiii.; 1 Tim. ii. 1-8; Rev. xi. 16-19; Rev. xix. 5, 6.)

Thursday, Jan. 9,—FAMILIES. COLLEGES. SCHOOLS.—Christian character and rule of life. Parental responsibility. Training the young. Home example. Family prayer. School and college influence. Pure literature and amusements. Temperance and self-restraint. Godly ministers, professors and teachers. The Spirit of Christ animating and energizing. God's Word studied, obeyed, and applied to conduct. (Ex. xx. 1-23; Eph. v. 21 to Eph. vi. 10; Col. iii. 17 to Col. iv. 2; Psa. cxxvii. cxxviii.; 2 Tim. iii. 14-17.)

Friday, Jan. 10.—NON-CHRISTIAN RACES.—Their exceeding need. Their claims. Efforts to reach and evangelize them by the power of the Holy Ghost. Missionaries—their preparation, sending and support. Their difficulties and dangers; hindrances and helps. (Luke i. 76-79; Matt. xxviii. 18-20; Acts i. 8.)

Saturday, Jan. 11.—THE JEWS.—"Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews." The world's indebtedness to the Jew. Their presence in all lands. Their sins and sorrows. Their past and future. The relation of the Church of Christ to them. Missions to Jews. The whole Bible for the Jew in languages understood by them. Love of them for Christ's sake. (Jer. vii. 1-15; Acts iii. 12-26; Rom. ix. x. xi.; Acts i. 8; Isa. lxi.)

Sunday, Jan. 12.—Subjects for sermons: THE ONE BODY OF CHRIST. (1 Cor. x. 17; 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13, 27; Col. i. 17, 18, 24; Eph. iv. 4-16; Eph. i. 22, 23; Rom. xii. 5; Col. iii. 15.)

Copies of the programme may be had from the Secretary of the Alliance, 7, Adam Street, Strand.

Field Lane Institutions.

IN a circular letter, Lord Aberdeen, president of the Institutions, says: "In common with many others, this work has suffered severely during the past few years through the many demands that have been made on public charity, and is consequently unable, in spite of the most rigid economy, to meet, with its present average receipts, its necessary expenses. Society can ill afford, when so many pernicious influences are at work, to dispense with an agency for good such as this; and yet there is a great danger that some portion of the work may have to be given up unless it receives immediate public help.

"I trust this may be averted, and that public liberality will kindly respond to an appeal on behalf of an undertaking which is well deserving of sympathy and liberal support

"Scriptures for India."

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR OLD AND YOUNG.

THE scheme under which it is proposed to present a Bible, New Testament, or Gospel, to every one who can read of the inhabitants of India not already supplied, has been warmly welcomed by the missionaries. In the schools and colleges of our great Eastern dependency, there are at present about five millions of young people under education, in addition to whom there are believed to be about twenty millions of readers, and it is estimated that not more than ten per cent. are already possessed of the Scriptures.

This is a most critical time in the history of India, for the progress of education has brought vast numbers into contact with a new world of thought, and nearly two millions are being added each year to the reading class. Their minds, hitherto confined within the narrowest limits, are open to receive suggestion and direction from any source. On the one hand, almost the only food for the minds of the enormous majority is a literature which is far from elevating, while their religious principles and their morals are formed by corrupt stories of gods and goddesses which have been engrafted upon the ancient Vedic faith, varied by theosophy or modern types of infidelity in publications largely and systematically distributed among students. On the other hand, tidings from many parts tell of numbers coming to hear the Gospel as never before. There is no time to be lost. A Brahmin, the head of an important college in the largest native state, said, "India is in a state of flux, and its future development depends entirely on what mould is placed for it."

MEMORIAL OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

The opening sentences of the first letter sent to them touched the hearts of the missionaries as it expressed hearty sympathy with them not only in the want of response to their Message among the people, but in the apparent forgetfulness of the bulk of Christians in Britain, as well as the utter failure at home to realize the great responsibility for India.

The suggestion was then made that in no better way could the memory of our late Queen-Empress be honoured than by placing in the hands of each of her child-subjects a copy of the Gospel which she loved, in the faith of which she lived, and in the light of which she passed to her rest and reward. But the idea developed in the minds of the promoters until it was planned to include adults as well as children. In this way a special opportunity seemed to present itself for the Christian people of Britain to give to their fellow-subjects in India for the first time a tangible witness to their true unity in the faith; and with this end in view provision has been made for each Christian donor to write his or her name on book labels, which will be pasted in the copies of Scripture given, with an intimation in the language of the readers that the recipients are invited to correspond with the giver.

HOW ALL MAY HELP.

This testimony to our Lord will naturally be much more efficacious and natural if children send to children, young men to young men, and so on; while the professional man in India would often be touched by receiving a Bible from one of his own profession in Britain. This suggestion has been warmly approved by many leaders of Christian thought in England and by the principal Missionary Societies, as well as by civilians who have held high office in India. There is every reason to believe that many thousands of children will contribute their 2d. for a Gospel, while numbers of young men will gladly give 1s. for a New Testament, to be given to one of their own age in India, and professional men have welcomed the idea of being able (at a cost of 5s.) to give a Bible under similar conditions. Young women also will be glad to show their faith and their love to their sisters by sending the Word of God.

WHAT THE MISSIONARIES THINK.

When the scheme was submitted to a conference of Bengal missionaries, held at Calcutta, it was agreed unanimously to co-operate, and an honorary secretary was appointed to be their representative. The same warm reception was accorded by a gathering at Naini Tal, which represented the North-West Provinces, Rajputana, Oudh, and the Hindi-speaking parts of the Central Provinces. In one of the latest letters, Rev. J. W. Robinson (Lucknow), who represents directly the North-Eastern Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and indirectly also the North-Western Conference, says:—"We think the plan a splendid one, and that these Scriptures, rightly used, will not only be a wonderful help to mission work, but will bring light and life to many a soul." Mr. Robinson enclosed an estimate showing how they could carefully distribute 10,000 copies of Scripture; but added that, if it were possible to obtain them, they would gladly deal with four times the number.

Among individual missionaries, a pathetic interest attaches to the reply of Miss Thoburn—sister of Bishop Thoburn—who was called to her eternal rest soon after writing it:—"There are the greatest possibilities for good in this project. No memorial (of Queen Victoria) yet suggested has seemed so suitable. There should be no difficulty in the way of success. I shall be glad to help in any way I can."

A missionary writes from Jabalpore:—"I am sure it will have a marvellous and blessed effect on our work of evangelizing India"; to which one who labours among the Santhals adds, "We entirely and thankfully approve of the scheme."

THE FIELD PREPARED.

In the providence of God spiritual organizations for the carrying out of the arrangements already exist. For instance, the Indian Sunday-School Union (with its 14,000 teachers) and the International Bible-Reading Association will unite their members for the care of the children. At home, the matter has been taken up specially by the Civil Service, London Banks, Medical, and Lawyers' Prayer Unions, the Christian Postal and Police Associations, the Railway Mission, the Y.M.C.A., and the Y.W.C.A.—co-operating so that each member in England may be brought into direct contact with one belonging to his or her own class in India. Each of these has a corresponding organization in India, which will complete the arrangements with the missionaries in the various localities. But every effort will be required to cover the whole ground, for if each Christian in Britain gave one book, there would still remain twenty millions of persons unprovided for.

FOR THOSE WHO SPEAK ENGLISH.

One important feature of the movement which has commended it to many, is the opportunity it affords for Christians in this country to place themselves in touch with English-speaking natives. A good-sized reference-Bible, and a well-printed New Testament have been specially prepared in a beautiful scarlet leather binding, sewn with silk, the bright colour being especially attractive to Orientals. On the front of the English Bible, as distinguished from the other Scriptures, is an appropriate design, of which we give a fac-simile.

IN MEMORIAM

Victoria R.I.

1819 1901

Those who love the Word of God will find the note of urgency in their prayers accentuated when they have realized that they are sending similar copies to brothers and sisters dwelling in darkness. The lack of a common language would for the majority interpose a barrier in the way of anything of the nature of correspondence; but the use of English as the medium of communication opens up a channel of Christian usefulness which may bring untold joy on both sides. In the language of one of the most eminent Indian statesmen, it will be a valuable link between the two countries. It is a means by which we may all be individual witnesses to those souls in our own Empire, for whom we are specially responsible on account of the way in which they have been committed to our charge.

THE TIME IS SHORT.

It is of the greatest importance that the present opportunity should be taken advantage of without delay. The time for receiving subscriptions has been extended from December 1 to 31; but as it is requisite to have all the books ready in India for immediate disposal on the latter date, no time should be lost in placing the means at the disposal of the workers. Those who hear in the call the voice of the Lord are invited to write for papers and schedules to Hunt and Barnard, 20, Blandford Street, W., and to place themselves in communication with the secretaries of the unions in which they are personally interested. Arrangements for the supply of the books can only be carried out through them. We give the name and address for each class:—

Confidence.

"Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

DEAR Lord, with shame we now confess
Our want of trust, and faithlessness
In thine almighty arm;
We mourn the hardness of the way,
Sin's fierce temptations day by day,
When none can do us harm.

In spite of all earth's restless strife,
The turmoil of our daily life,
Thy word of love is clear;
That Thou wilt keep in perfect peace,
And from all anxious care release
Thy blood-bought people here.

Lord, I will trust Thee with my care,
My daily load thine arm shall bear,
I on thy Word will rest,
And so, whate'er each day may bring,
In every trying hour or thing,
Thy faithfulness I'll test.

My strength from henceforth I shall find
In quietness and peace of mind,
My strivings all shall end;
The future's paths I need not dread;
Thou wilt supply, as Thou has said,
The needed grace wilt send. S. J. H.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.—The autumn meetings were held at Bedford, October 26-31, and were of an enthusiastic character. The meetings, which covered a wide range of topics connected with the temperance cause, were addressed by the Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke, Miss M. E. Docwra, Miss A. W. Richardson, and other well-known leaders.

In Southern Russia.

V.—In the Caucasus.

BAKU, a rapidly rising city, owes its development to the extensive oil-fields on the peninsula Apscheron. The existence of oil was discovered fifty years ago by an Armenian; but pumping on a large scale was only commenced about thirty years ago. An area of 4,000 square metres, 13 versts to the north of the city, is now covered with a forest of pumping engines. The depth of the wells is from 150 to 540 m. Fires are frequent, causing loss of human life and damage to property.

What a dreary approach! Naphtha everywhere, filling the holes of the bad roads, forming little ponds, floating on the surface of the seawater-reservoirs and inlets. A little girl comes along with a bucket which she fills with this mixture, and there is a poor, ragged man, carrying two buckets full, which the poor people try to make a living by selling.

The air like the soil seems to be impregnated with paraffin. For many miles around nothing but desert. Here and there a solitary puny tree. Every blade of grass seems to have a hard struggle for existence; but men will come and settle down, bear with hardships, and defy the climate, for the sake of gain.

Almost every European nation has its consul in Baku. About half of the population is said to be Moslem (Tartars, Persians, or Turks). One of them has built a splendid school for Mohammedan girls. About 40,000 are Armenians, others are Swedish, English, Italian, French, &c. There are no trades-unions, and there is plenty of labour. Persian and Italian workmen, especially in buildings, are preferred to Russian, who are much given to drinking vodki, the sale of which has been monopolized by the Government for the last three years.

We remained in Baku for a week, holding meetings every day. On the Sunday Dr. Baedeker and Mr. Morgan addressed four gatherings—Armenians morning and evening, and Russians and Germans in the afternoon. The running thought was that neither baptism, nor the Lord's Supper, nor conformity to certain rules of worship, nor profession of any kind, could make of a sinner a saint; only living faith in Jesus, and an entire separation from the world unto the Lord with singleness of purpose could effect the manifestation of a Christian life, and make us meet for the Master's use.

AN APT ILLUSTRATION.

This precious lesson was beautifully illustrated to us the next day as with a friend we went over an oil-distilling factory at the "Black Town"—a term cognate to our Black Country. An Armenian gentleman explained the process of separating from the raw naphtha the clear colourless kerosene as it is used for lighting purposes. The raw product, a greenish fluid, is allowed to settle for twenty-four hours, then by pipes it is conducted into a warming reservoir from whence after reaching a temperature of 70-80° Celsius, it pours into several boilers successively, until all the products, such as benzoline, light and heavy kerosene, &c., which form in the naphtha a technical mixture, have been separated from each other. Lamp-kerosene must pass through two further processes of purifying and neutralization, and undergo a last chemical test before it can be pronounced fit for sale. What a lesson of entire separation! The least proportion of benzoline is dangerous to its use. In order to be a boon to mankind it must be pure and unadulterated, otherwise it becomes a curse.

We left Baku on the Friday night, after a farewell meeting, at which Dr. Baedeker referred to his first coming fifteen years ago. Several of those present were the fruit of his first labours. Tears were in their eyes as they took leave of their spiritual father. Was it for the last time? Would they see him again?

A MOTHER'S PRAYER.

Two women cried piteously as they prayed for the conversion of their families. One of them had the joy of seeing her grown-up son promise to walk henceforth with God; the other at the close of the meeting said to us, with tears still glistening upon her cheeks: "It was I who thrust my children into the world because I was worldly. Now that I am converted, it is my duty to pray them out of it."

After the dreary surroundings of Baku, Tiflis, the capital of the Caucasus, with its picturesque situation on the river Kura, was a delightful change. Some say that its beauty is superior to that of the Alps. Others, that though grand and wild, and rich in glaciers, it is poor in rivers, waterfalls, and lakes. Its white-capped giants, Kasbek and Elbrus, both claim the honour of having had Prometheus chained to their rocks. It is the rocky home of classical myth.

A LAND OF MANY TONGUES.

Explorers have a hard work in this region. Besides the paucity of roads, there is the immense barrier of language. Far beyond the reach of modern communications live the remnants of old nations, some of whom many centuries ago have sought refuge in its precipices from the destroying hand of their persecutors. Some, like the inhabitants of the Daghestan Mountains, are divided into many tribes, each shut up to a valley or a single village, unable to understand their neighbours. To say that twenty different languages are spoken in the Caucasus is well within the mark. It cost Russia sixty years of warfare to subdue these mountain races, the greater proportion of whom are Moslems. Handsome types are among them, especially the Tcherkess men; also the Grusians, who have a tradition that they are older than the Egyptians. Tiflis was the capital of their kingdom from the fifth century. They look back upon a prosperous epoch of their history under a King David and a Queen Tamara, in the twelfth-thirteenth century.

AN INTERESTING CENTENARY.

In 1801 the last of their rulers, George XIII., ceded his land to Russia, and Tiflis is now celebrating the centenary of its annexation to the Empire by an exhibition of Caucasian products and industries. Of the 160,000 or 170,000 inhabitants, only 25 per cent. are Grusians, 40 per cent. are Armenians, and 20 per cent. soldiers or officials.

Here, as in Baku, we were heartily welcomed and kindly entertained by friends of various nationalities. One Christian brother, a business man in the town, and of German nationality, had been banished for eight years, first to one place for making propaganda among the Russians, and then to another for having divided money among Stundists, sent to him for that purpose. "But the last place was the best," he added. "I found many friends there, and willing ears for the Gospel."

Meetings took place at the Russian Baptist Church and at the Swedish Mission House, under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Larsen. At the last one, a woman who had come in with her daughter unawares, broke down under a strong conviction of sin, professing to yield her heart to God. At the Lutheran Church, where a three days conference had been held, we attended an interesting lecture on the spread of the Bible in Russia, the lecturer, Assistant-Pastor Bergmann, urging the necessity of a branch society for the Caucasus in connection with the Petersburg Society.

"A REALLY GOOD MAN."

"Oh, how I love these dear Tartars, Persians, Armenians, Tcherkess, Grusians, and so on," Dr. Baedeker would say. He loved to pass through the Oriental bazaars for the sake of human study. "Oh, to touch these hearts with the power of the Gospel; to make vibrate the silent chords of divine love in their souls which would transform their lives. What a privilege to him who accomplishes it!" This was about the gist of his talks, generally ending with: "If I were a young man, I would set to learning Grusian at once."

Organized missions from foreign countries are not allowed by Russia, which claims the right of converting her people for her own priests. The missions that exist have no official recognition, and are consequently handicapped in means and results.

The great need is for godly young men, who, for the sake of Christ, would settle down in the Caucasus, learn the language of the people, mix with them without displaying intellectual superiority, and by their lives, their love, their testimony reveal the Saviour to them, so that, like the Greeks, they "would see Jesus." The Christian testimony of a business or an independent man is very far-reaching. More than once we were asked with regard to our friend, "Is he paid for what he does?" and our answer, "No, he does it for Christ's sake," generally met with an astonished look, and the final remark, "Then he must be a really good man." Not all Christians can pay their own way; but those who can, and remain at home, even if they pay a substitute, miss much of personal blessing and influence. W. M.

"La Bonne Nouvelle."

MUCH blessing has attended the work of the Mission boat Le Bon Messager during the nine and a half years that it has been taking the Gospel message along the rivers and canals of France, chiefly in the basin of the Seine. We are glad to say that a second boat, La Bonne Nouvelle, is about to be started on similar evangelistic work, going to the centre of France, there to take the messenger of the Gospel to visit villages and hamlets at present entirely unevangelized.

In nine years Le Bon Messager has been stationed at 100 places, sometimes paying two visits to a place, generally staying for three weeks or longer. Over 2,000 meetings for adults have been held on board, and some 650 meetings for children, while it is estimated that about a quarter of a million have been present at the adult meetings, and many thousands of children at those held for them. Thousands have been reached who else would never have heard the Word of God, and who were without any knowledge of the Gospel in its simplicity.

This new boat has been provided for by special gifts from friends in Great Britain and America, the larger part coming from the latter country; but the first gift and the urgent request that we should undertake to build a second boat, came from a French lady living in Switzerland, who was desirous that her country-people should have another afloat among them.

On Monday, October 28, a party of some eighty workers and friends of the McAll Mission, representing France, Switzerland, Great Britain, and America, went to the Ile St. Denis, near the old cathedral of St. Denis, where are the tombs of the kings of France, and rich treasures stored, and around which venerable building lives a most atheistic and hostile population. Here we found the boat ready to receive us, though not yet completely fitted up. An interesting meeting was held, and earnest were the prayers offered that all that was done on board might be for the glory of God, and for the salvation of souls.

The boat will hold between 150 and 200 people, and there are rooms for the "captain" and his wife, and for another evangelist. It is thoroughly well built, and reflects great credit on its designer, M. A. Rey, who built Le Bon Messager for us.

We ask that special prayer be made for this work, and that both these boats may be the means of bringing good tidings to dark and sin-stained hearts in France. W. Soltau.

Bara Bazar, Calcutta.—At daybreak and sunset the bells of the heathen temples in the Bara Bazar district of Calcutta may be heard, rung for the purpose of awakening or lulling to rest their respective idols. The call to any Christian place of worship is as yet a thing unknown, and though countless idol temples serve to prop up the decaying faith of Hinduism, no Protestant church stands to bear testimony to the religion of Jesus Christ. A small shop on the Harrison Road, the largest thoroughfare, was taken by several workers of the Church Missionary Society; a spirit of inquiry was soon manifest, and many sought baptism. There was soon a large sale for the Protestant books, at which the stricter of the Hindus became anxious, and anxiety passed into bitter opposition, which resulted in the expulsion of the Christians. In four years five different rooms were utilized; but a building has been offered to the workers, to secure which a sum of £2,000 is required. "Grace Pettman" Stories.

Every Tuesday. Price One Penny.

Prebendary H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE writes:

"I have read, carefully, four of the 'Grace Pettman' Stories, and would wish to congratulate the publisher on the good work that he is doing in offering to the public such wholesome and profitable tales. They appear to be thoroughly 'up-to-date' in subject and interest, and the writers evidently know, and have attractively presented, the Gospel of a free and full salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ. Honestly studied, these short stories must both give pleasure and profit, with sufficient incident in the narrative to carry any reader along."

Shortly before his departure for America, Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN wrote:—

"I am very pleased, indeed, with the 'Grace Pettman' Stories that you have sent to me. Their tone is thoroughly healthy, and they ought to have a wide circulation and do much to counteract the pernicious influence of the cheap literature which is such a menace to the welfare of our young people. I sincerely hope that your venture may be wholly successful."

And the Stories have been commended in equally warm terms by the Revs. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN, F. B. MEYER, THOMAS SPURGEON, and others.

*The Dying of Christ.

By Rev. J. H. JOWETT, M.A.

LET us away into Gethsemane, at the midnight, that we may just touch the awful mystery. The Master is there, and He has taken with Him his three most intimate friends. They can accompany Him part of the way, and then He must leave them that He may continue the weird journey alone. Says the simple narrative, "He began to be sorrowful and very heavy." I think that marks the beginning of the dying. He has not yet begun to sleep; I think He has begun to die.

"Sorrowful and very heavy." Just gaze into the hearts of these words. "Sorrowful" has a profounder content than the word appears to denote; it is significant of the grief of desolation; and as for the word translated, "heavy," it suggests an awful sense of homelessness. Shall we insert these words in place of those that have become almost too familiar to us? "He began to be desolate and very homeless." Let us pause there. "Very homeless!" He who only a few hours before had spoken so comfortably about his Father's house with the many mansions, and who on the selfsame day had joyfully proclaimed the unfailing presence and companionship of his Father—"I am not alone, my Father is with me"—was now becoming burdened with the oppressive sense of homelessness. I think that was the beginning of the dying. He was beginning to taste death!

Go a little farther into the garden, and listen to the Master's agonized speech. "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death;" exceeding desolate, "even unto death." Desolation unto death! . . . Over his soul is gathering and deepening a midnight darkness and desolation to which no other name can be given but the name of death. He is tasting the exceeding bitterness of death. On now to Calvary, and let us hear the words in which the sense of desolation and homelessness deepens into an unspeakable and unthinkable intensity! "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" That was death. What would follow would be only sleep. That was death—appalling midnight in the soul, the horror of a great darkness, exceeding desolation, abandonment! That was death—the Father's house obscured, the Father's hand vanished, and the Son of God in the outer darkness, in the agonies of a consuming loneliness! That was death—the sinless Saviour out there in the night, in the abandonment which is "the wages of sin." What we call death, Christ called sleep. "Christ died."

Now, that homelessness of soul, that abandonment in the outer darkness, is "the wages of sin." But Christ "knew no sin." And so we are led to the music of the Gospel, which has brought cheer and assurance to a countless host, the Gospel that Christ Jesus walked that way of appalling darkness and alienation in place of his brethren. "Christ died for the ungodly." He died for our sins. A few soldiers with hammer and nails put Him to sleep on the cross; but it was for the sins of a race that He died, that He voluntarily went into the outer darkness, into the awful eclipse of forsakenness and abandonment. "He tasted death for every man." He drank that cup for the race. "He died for all."

Now, the Scriptures affirm that apart from Christ I am still under the dominion of "the law of sin and death"; "sin and death," sin and abandonment, sin and homelessness, sin and forsakenness and terrible night. That is an indissoluble connection, stern and inevitable. It is a law, fixed and unchanging, "the law of sin and death." But the Scriptures further affirm that in Christ Jesus I come under the dominion of another law—the "law of the spirit of life"—and by this I am freed from the sovereignty of "the law of sin and death." Under "the law of the spirit of life" the lonely way of the outer darkness will never more be known. By Christ the way has once been trod, never to be retrodden by those who are in Him. "There shall be no more death."

* From Apostolic Optimism, by Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). In this volume of sermons the verities of the Christian faith are brought home to the reader with the power of an intense spirituality. The dominant note is one of assured hope for the sinner who finds refuge "in Christ." The old familiar truths are presented with an almost startling freshness. Few who begin to read the volume will not go on to the end.

*The Message of Genesis.

By the late Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, M.A.

GENESIS emphasizes (1.) the Divine sovereignty and supremacy. Its opening words are as emphatic a testimony to this as can be found in the whole Bible. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." The Bible makes no attempt to prove the existence of God, nor does it strive to prove the supremacy of God. As soon would the astronomer think of trying to prove the existence and the supremacy of the sun in the solar system. The writer assumes the sovereignty and supremacy of God as axiomatic, as needing no proof. To him this is not only true, but the basis of all truth. Deny it, and the universe becomes a chaos; confirm it, and everything else falls into its place. To the writer, and to every thinking man, the fact that this universe can be rationally considered only on the supposition of the existence and supremacy of God, is sufficient evidence of these truths. Genesis opens with the note, God first! and this note is kept up through the whole Bible. Now this is what we might expect in the book claiming to be a revelation of God. A book claiming to be from God, and not putting God first, would be self-condemned. . . .

THE LATE REV. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, M.A.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

2. Genesis emphasizes the Divine grace and love. The revelation of the Bible is essentially a revelation of redemption, and the redemption note is sounded from the first. One gets impatient, exceedingly impatient, when one hears the God of the Old Testament contrasted with the God of the New. There is no contrast; the God of the Old Testament is the God of the New, and his name is Love; and this love is strikingly manifested in the story of Genesis to the soul that has eyes to see it. Why, look at the account of the Fall; ere the sinners are sentenced, the promise of salvation is given! The protevangelium, the first declaration of God's purpose of redemption, precedes God's first curse on man because of sin. The whole record of Genesis is a record of the grace of God combating man's sin. As we read the story, we can hear running through it this refrain: "As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die?" The Flood only comes after the striving of God with man has been long resisted, and the cup of the world's wickedness has become full; and even then God does not destroy them without heart-breaking grief. Sodom is destroyed only when ten righteous men cannot be found in it. The whole story is a story of Divine love, the story of One with whom judgment is a strange work. And this love throughout all this book is seen working with a purpose. By it Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are called and separated, that from them might come the chosen people, out of whom should come the Seed in whom the whole earth should be blessed.

3. Genesis emphasizes the Divine holiness. It represents God as approachable to men and yet as unapproachable by men. This aspect of the Divine character is more fully declared in some of the other books of the Bible, but it is traceable here also. Genesis contains the most awful illustrations of the Divine wrath against sin that can be found anywhere. This book teaches us what subsequent revelation confirms, that if the sinner is to approach God so as to be accepted by Him, he must approach God in the way of God's appointment. The altars of which we read in Genesis speak to us of the fact that "without shedding of blood there is no remission," and remind us that without remission there is, for the sinner, no access to God.

But this is a lesson which in our day we need specially to learn. We dwell so much on the Divine love and the riches of the Divine grace, that we are apt to forget that the grace is only bestowed upon us in the Beloved. In our joy at the revelation which Christ made to us of the love of God, we are in danger of forgetting that that love of God reaches men so as to save them only through Jesus Christ. But to forget that, is to degrade Jesus Christ from the unique position which He occupies as the Saviour of men. It is true, brethren, that God is the Saviour of all men, it is true that God will have all men to be saved; but it is also true that "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son," and that "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," but the name of the Lord Jesus.

* From Messages of the Old Testament: Genesis to Chronicles and Joel. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). A series of addresses, delivered in part to Mr. Macgregor's congregation, and evidently intended to introduce a complete series of Scripture studies. Those who found Mr. Macgregor to be the helpful teacher that he was, will specially value these chapters, which are instructive as expositions, and calculated to prove of great service in their bearing upon practical questions of life and duty. Rev. F. B. Meyer writes prefatory words of hearty commendation.

The Child's Bible.

AMONG presentation books a good place should be assigned to The Child's Bible, illustrated with a hundred new full-page plates, twelve of them in colours. (10s. 6d. Cassells.) The book is beautiful within and handsome without. The Bible narrative is presented in a consecutive form, such portions as are deemed less suitable for children being omitted.

There are topical headings, the Old Testament divisions numbering 153, and the New ninety-six. The sections are thus convenient in length for the child reader. The type is large and clear; the paper and binding good. The coloured plates have been executed by Mr. W. H. Margetson. They are drawings of special interest to children, and have been reproduced in the best style of colour printing. The eighty-eight full-page illustrations have been prepared for this edition from famous pictures by modern artists, care having been taken in the selection of the subjects and the printing of the plates.

The Child's Bible is calculated to introduce many a little one to the study of the Scriptures in their inspired integrity.

The Organist's Conversion.*

By RAMSAY GUTHRIE.

SO simply it happened. The organist was led to prayer, and it was a prayer of Bobby's which taught him the need and the way. It was 7.30 of the Sabbath night, and the service was over. The great majority of the congregation had retired. In the centre pews of the body of the chapel were the few who remained to pray. At the rail of the communion stood the minister ready to announce a hymn when the organist had finished the selection from the oratorio. Frank Wraithe was adjusting his music and closing the organ. The chapel-keeper was putting out the up-stair lights. The prayer-meeting few were singing a hymn with a chorus. Frank remembered a blind man playing a street harmonium, and singing the plaintive theme. "For you I am praying; I'm praying for you," was the refrain. There were mostly aged people who had tarried with the preacher, and the singing was feeble and uneven. Bobby Turner was feeling free, and was singing lustily. There was a smile on the organist's face as he turned the key of the organ's lock. He was thinking of Bobby, not uncharitably, but with innocent amusement.

The organist had gone. The galleries were deserted. The voice of prayer was heard.

Frank Wraithe was on the step of the home-door, when he remembered he had forgotten the sonata he had wished to practise privately. He had left it in the organ. Down the street he hasted, and, though the stair to the organ-gallery was in total darkness, so well he knew the way that no false step impeded ascent. He crept to the familiar place, cautiously turned the key, and obtained the copy he desired.

Bobby Turner was praying. It was characteristic of the old man to address the Almighty as though He were sitting close at hand, and inviting his confidence.

Why did he hesitate? The music for which he had returned was in his hand. Frank Wraithe was trembling. Bobby was telling the Lord about him.

"And now, my Father," the old man was saying, "there's that other matter I mentioned to Tha this mornin'. I was telling Tha about Mister Frank; an' beggin' Tha to get him saved. Thoo has his father up there beside Tha, an' he'll hev telt Tha about the lad. I fear my friend John will not hev realized all that he hoped he would. Him an' me used to sing together:—

"An' when I lose this stammerin' tongue
I'll sing as loud as they.

he'll hev lost the stammerin' tongue, but he'll still be stammerin' when he thinks of Mister Frank. . . . He's a grand lad is Mister Frank, my Father, an' a bonny good musicianer, an' a rare good lad to his mother. He just wants the needful, the one thing, the change of heart, the life that Jesus gives. I thowt Tha would hev done it before now, but Tha'll hev some good reasons for bidin' awhile. My Father, hev a word wi' Mister Frank, an' get things settled, an' then the music here will be bad to beat, an' my friend John will be able to sing without a stammer."

Frank Wraithe was on his knees in the dark and silent gallery. The simple prayer of his father's friend had opened the flood-gates of his memory. His father's face was near him, the voice of the dead was speaking, the prayers of the past were repeated. His spirit's deeps were troubled. He had known the holiest influences, and been the object of the dearest solicitude. The best within him was in the ascendant. Thronging his mind were the past reminiscences. He was bathed in tears, and praying—praying that his sins might be forgiven, and for the sense of peace. The praying souls were singing the Doxology. Frank was on his feet, and though his lips refused to sing, there was praiseful gratitude in his soul.

Frank Wraithe was at the class-meeting on the Tuesday night. Bobby Turner looked at him sharply when he entered. The old man knew not what to think. "What's tha want here, Mister Frank?" he asked, suspicion in every tone.

"Do you not want new members?" Frank replied.

"The Lord be praised! Signs and wonders! My friend John will know, an' what a time they'll hev in heaven. Now he'll be singin' in style! The Lord be praised!" And Bobby was gripping the organist's hand, and shaking it vigorously.

David Dale was in the doorway, his face the picture of surprise. Whatever could this mean? The tale was told with much diffidence, and yet with great thankfulness. The leader was beaming; Bobby was weeping; the meeting was in ecstasy.

There had been numerous conversions at the communion rail, but none in the organ gallery. The organist's was the first. It was not the last. Frank's membership was the beginning of the enrolment of the choir.

The son of the minister is as great a "swell" as ever, and as eager for business. There has been no change in the order of service at "Rosehill." No change is needed. Bobby Turner's satisfaction is complete. It was the organist for whom he feared, not the voluntaries. The music is right to him, now that the "musicianer" is right with the Lord. He is blissfully happy when the Nunc Dimittis is sung. The words express his feelings. "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

* From Idylls of Rosehill. (2s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell.) In the successive idylls the reader is taken into the inner circle of a humble Methodist chapel. The author has received and interpreted for us a vision of the pathos which lies all around our daily footsteps, but which so few have eyes to see. Hearts will be touched and lifted nearer God as they become acquainted with the plain folk of "Rosehill."

Saints of the Covenant.

IT is not enough that each generation should have its own version of great movements of the past, often in a form qualified by ever-increasing attenuation of passion and feeling. In estimating the men and deeds of bygone years, it is of the utmost importance to take into account the earliest narratives and descriptions written in days when criticism and correction were promptly and most easily administered. Each generation needs the substance as well as the shadow of history—not refined conclusions simply, but the raw material upon which the judgment may be exercised.

In this light especially we gladly call attention to Six Saints of the Covenant: Peden, Semple, Welwood, Cameron, Cargill, Smith. By Patrick Walker. Edited with Illustrative Documents, Introduction, Notes, and a Glossary, by D. Hay Fleming. (Two volumes. 25s. nett. Hodder & Stoughton.) Those who are at all familiar with the Covenanter story will recognise the interest and value of this work. The marvellous narratives, collected and published by Patrick Walker in 1724 and following years, are here edited and presented in such form as to make them most welcome and useful.

The Cameronians were men of wonder; these records give us rough-and-ready word pictures of them, their bold actions and faithful testimony. Walker could not help writing; for forty-eight years he was, as he tells us, "seeing, hearing, and gathering of these accounts." Finding himself "stricken in years, and not knowing when the day of his death might be," he was glad to "have his head drained and his mind emptied of these relations." His speech is not of the honeyed kind; he has painful stories to tell, and he never spares in the denunciation of prelatic and other strange things that resulted from the incorporating Union, nor in declaring the judgment of God upon his land for the sins of the people. Even where prejudice and error embarrass the story, the force of conviction demands warm admiration.

Mr. Hay Fleming has put a great deal of work into his illustrative and other notes; and whether we read of the "Fifty Years' Struggle," or the records of "The Cloud of Witnesses," we do well to keep these simple narratives at hand. The pages are replete with sayings and doings that will long live in experimental Christian literature.

Two Poets.

MR. MACKENZIE BELL.

THE muse of Mackenzie Bell has touched many a heart, and pleased a varied fancy. We remember, with a certain affection, his "Spring's Immortality" and "Pictures of Travel"—books which for some time have been out of print. With much heartiness, therefore, do we welcome his volume of Collected Poems, in which former acquaintances appear in the companionship of new poems. (3s. 6d. nett. Thomas Burleigh.) Some of the shorter performances—lyrics and memorial lines—are gems of beauty. The religious pieces breathe a note of true spirituality. Here is one:—

A Rallying Song.

Sometimes trustful, often fearful,
In this world of shifting wrong;
Sometimes joyful, often tearful,
Still be this our rallying song—
Aye, in sadness
And in gladness,
Nobly act, for God is strong.

When, oppressed by deep soul-sorrow,
Life beneath the darkest skies
Seems so drear that no to-morrow
Holds a threat of worse surprise—
In such sadness
As in gladness
Nobly act, for God is wise.

When our souls are tried, and tempted
Some ignoble end to buy,
From the coward's bonds exempted,
Let us resolutely cry—
Evil sow not,
That it grow not,
Nobly act, for God is nigh.

MISS ALFORD.

Those who have read Miss Alford's poetical contributions to religious periodical literature will cordially welcome them in volume form, under the title of Poems, by Elizabeth M. Alford. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) The book comprises sonnets, hymns, and general poems that are old friends, as well as a considerable amount of new work of high merit. Miss Alford writes with grace and tenderness. The following sonnet is characteristic:—

Light Reflected from Common Things.

Before my fancy's eye I seem to see
A heap of refuse in a squalid lane,
A place o'ershadowed with a sense of pain,
Of joyless, dull, prosaic misery;
But lo! from out the squalor shines on me
A light so dazzling that my eye I strain,
If peradventure thus I might obtain
Some clue to such unlooked-for brilliancy!
'Tis simply told, a piece of broken tin
Has caught the sunshine on its polished face,
Reflecting light on all its sphere within,
Transforming with its radiance that dull place.
E'en so, the humblest Christian may make bright
Earth's saddest scenes with Christ's reflected light!

A SCOTTISH NEW TESTAMENT.

The New Testament in Braid Scots. Rendered by Rev. William Wye Smith. (6s. nett. Alexander Gardner.) This is the work of a Canadian minister, who says: "Thar are mony folk, wha hae spoken English a' their grown-up days, wha like to gang back till the tongue o' their bairnhood, i' the mirk and shadows o' auld age. Thar are ithers wha seem tae tak better till the Word whan it comes till them wi' a wee o' the Scottish birr. And thar are a hantle o' folk—and I meet them a'-gate—wha dinna speak Scots theirsels, but are keen to hear it, and like to read it." To provide for such classes was a great undertaking, especially seeing that the translator was of a mind, on occasion, to become commentator as well. Only true-born Scots will venture to say how far the attempt is a success; and there is hardly likely to be complete agreement among such where divergent usage prevails. For ourselves, we would in many places have preferred a faithful rendering to a fanciful paraphrase. In view of the fact that Scotsmen generally use the Queen's English in their devotions, we question if this work was worth the doing. We likewise fear that, in serving a curious rather than a useful purpose, the book will foster in some readers a disposition incompatible with the reverent study of the Word. This would, we are sure, be far from the translator's intention; but deplorable caricatures of Holy Writ have been perpetrated by men whose aim has been honourable in the sight of God. A glossary of Scottish terms is given as an appendix.

On the Tibetan Frontier.

THE Great Closed Land of Tibet has been the subject of much prayer and exertion in the cause of evangelization, and yet it is closed. A pathetic interest attaches to the latest record of pioneer work in this direction—With the Tibetans in Tent and Temple: Narrative of Four Years' Residence on the Tibetan Border, and of a Journey into the Far Interior. By Susie Carson Rijnhart, M.D. (6s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) The author's perilous journeyings, which were replete with pain and loss, began in the loving companionship of a tactful and warm-hearted man of God; to him at length she dedicates her book "To the memory of my husband, whose heart and life were given to the Tibetans."

The period covered is 1895-99, and the story is graphically told, many excellent engravings being given. Mr. Petrus Rijnhart and his accomplished wife left America in the autumn of 1894, having as their point of destination the lamasery of Kumbum, in the province of Amdo, on the extreme north-western China-Tibetan frontier. Some years previously, Mr. Rijnhart had crossed the Chinese empire, and resided for a time in Lusar, a village largely frequented by the lamas for trading purposes. He was well received by the priests, who called him "a white lama from the West," and for ten months he spoke the name of Christ where it had never before been heard, and healed the diseases of the people, Chinese, Mongols, and Tibetans alike. Some of the lamas said that the Christian doctrine was "too good to be true." Others inquired why, if it were true, the Christians had waited "so many moons" before sending them the glad tidings.

PERILS OF PIONEERING.

The missionaries went forth without any human guarantee of support; many friends in America prayed for them, and remembered their material needs. The volume describes the rest—"perils of robbers, perils of the heathen, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often," and much beside. The description of the country and people is most welcome. Tibet being the reputed home of mahatmas, minute inquiry was made regarding them, with this result: "There was no record or even legend of any having ever visited Kumbum, and one of the oldest priests in the lamasery, who had spent years in Lhasa, told us he never heard of a mahatma, even in that 'City of Spirits.' . . . Nothing could be further from the truth than the belief entertained by many occidentals that the lamas are superior beings endowed with transcendent physical and intellectual gifts. On the contrary, they are mere children in knowledge, swayed by the emotions that play on the very surface of being."

SORROW UPON SORROW.

In 1898, the missionaries sought to enter the interior of the country. Leaving Tankar, on the north-western frontier of Chinese or Outer Tibet, they crossed the Ts'aidam Desert, the Kuenlun and Dang La mountains, and entered the Lhasa district of Inner Tibet. They reached Nagch'uk'a, a town about 150 miles from the capital. On the way their baby boy died, a little over a year old; with broken hearts they pressed on, but only to be ordered to return to China! On the way back—"perils of robbers," and worse! Mr. Rijnhart visited some native tents for aid in crossing a river; he never returned, but what was afterwards learned left no doubt that he had been murdered. The sorrowing wife had then her own way to make, and the narrative of her shifts, hazards, sufferings, until, two months later, she reached the home of the China Inland Mission workers in Ta-chien-lu, is affecting in the extreme. "Could it be possible that I had survived that long and perilous journey alone, over mountains and rivers, surrounded by hostile people, and subjected to hourly danger from those who professed to be my guides? Was I really once more in a Christian home, surrounded by kind friends and comforts? Yes, at last . . ."

The book embodies, so far as possible, the diary kept by Mr. Rijnhart, who seems to have been a very careful observer of geographical and physical characteristics. It is a very valuable addition to missionary literature.

CONSISTENT CONSECRATION.

In conclusion, the author asks the question that is so often propounded by moralizing unbelievers—Was it worth while? She answers it in the true faith of a Christian:—

"Tibet, like other lands, must have the light. The command is, 'Go, preach the Gospel to every creature?' The work is great. So great that, beside its greatness any sacrifice involved in its accomplishment is small. Mr. Rijnhart frequently gave expression to his one burning ambition to be of service in evangelizing Tibet—whether by his life or his death, he said, did not matter to him. With David Brainerd, he could say, 'I longed to be a flame of fire, continually glowing in the service of God, and building up Christ's kingdom to my latest, my dying moments.' Remembering his consecration, I, too, can be strong and say, as I bring the story to a close, 'God doeth all things well—the sacrifice was not too great.'"

A Century of Missions.

FROM the industrious pen of Dr. A. T. Pierson we have yet another book on a subject upon which, by universal consent, he is emphatically a master teacher—The Modern Mission Century: Viewed as a Cycle of Divine Working. (10s. 6d. Nisbet.) On the title-page the claim is made that this is "a Review of the Missions of the Nineteenth Century with Reference to the Superintending Providence of God." Christian people are likely to address themselves to the pages "nothing doubting" as to this claim; could those who are not Christians be induced to study the work, we cannot but think that they would be impressed with the cogency of the arguments and the striking conclusiveness of the case presented. It is obviously along the lines of Dr. Pierson's handsome book that the new apologetic afforded by modern missions may be presented in such a way as to "convince the gainsayers," and to give the indifferent something on which to think regarding the doings of God among the nations of the earth.

In a prefatory word, Dr. Pierson says of his labours:—

The studies in world-wide missions, begun forty years ago, find their latest fruit in this book. The subject has proven, at each new stage, more attractive and instructive. The whole course of mission history is a march of God, showing his superintendence over all forward movements for bearing his Good Tidings to a lost world. We lay down the pen with an unchangable persuasion that, from the first yearning of William Carey over the death shade of a heathen world, to the last longing of the most recent convert for the salvation of his fellows, God has been at work—the same God who, in the darkness of that primal chaos, said, "Let light be!" and light was.

The book is in twelve parts, comprising thirty-six chapters. Beginning with "The Works of the Lord," we pass on to consider "The Times and Seasons." Then there are sections on the Lord's Word and Servants, whether men or women, industrial workers, or "them that handle the pen." There are chapters on Revival, and the Planting of Churches; the records of the martyrs also are given in brief, and at length "The Harvest" is treated from various standpoints. The style is such as we expect from Dr. Pierson—warm and full, abundant in facts, sometimes superabundant, for one is staggered by the rehearsal of men and deeds—worthies and their works of faith. When Dr. Pierson begins to speak of missionaries and their achievements under God, he is hardly able to finish; he is a rhetorician as well as an authority on foreign mission history. If this lends weight to the book, it also accounts for some defects—slips and omissions from which the more rigid historian would have been delivered. For instance, in chap. xxxii. there is a mention of Henri Lasserre's translation of the Gospels into French "with the approbation of the Romish authorities!" Nothing is said of the fact that this famous book was subsequently put into the "Index," the last days of the devoted translator being thereby clouded with sorrow and disappointment.

These pages present a series of word-pictures; men whom God has used to great ends are here, also scenes whereby we realize the progress of the Divine Worker as He rules and overrules in human affairs. From first to last the book is profoundly interesting, and should do much to assist the cause for the advocacy of which its author has stood "these forty years." We bespeak for it a host of readers.

Dr. Parker's Pulpit Bible.

THE many-sidedness of Dr. Joseph Parker's gifts and activities has been proved once more by the publication of The Pulpit Bible (42s. Hodder & Stoughton). The text of the Authorized Version has been divested of everything in the shape of references and readings, as well as chapter and page headings; and the ample margins taken advantage of to provide a vast amount of helpful and suggestive annotation. In many cases this is done in the form of the incisive questions which Dr. Parker knows so well how to put with dramatic power and spiritual insight. By a single sentence, which can seldom be called exposition in the usual sense, the possibilities of many a text are opened up.

A second noteworthy feature of the Bible is the use of brackets ([ ]) to mark off striking and unusual, rather than what may be called great, texts. The usefulness of this will depend on the individual reader; but those who realize the value of such guidance will find that Dr. Parker has in no way forced the position, being content to set down what really appealed to him, rather than to aim at anything like completeness or equal treatment of different passages. Those who are well supplied with Dr. Parker's other works will welcome the Textual Index, which will facilitate easy reference to these.

The present publication does not, we take it, profess to afford scope for the display, to their full extent, of the powers which have claimed for Dr. Parker his present high place among preachers and writers. Yet the book will be a valuable addition to the means available for the thorough furnishing of those who teach, which they will do all the better for having come under the personal spell of this born leader of men, and the Pulpit Bible will grow in the appreciation of the regular user.

We quote the following remarks on John xvii. 20-26:—

A GREAT QUESTION.

What is Christian unity? The deepest meaning of Christian unity is union with Christ, oneness with the Son of God, identification with Christ in spirit, purpose, and labour; and coming out of that, as a cause and an inspiration, union of Christians, genuinely brotherly love and trust, a love that sees the Christian in the man, and that sees Christ in the Christian.

Suppose any man, or any body of men, should attempt to set up a doctrinal standard, saying, By this alone can unity be determined. No man has a right to put up any such standard and claim for its finality.

Suppose any man should erect an ecclesiastical standard, saying, This is the Church, and outside of it there is no Church. Who made us church-makers?

We have no right to create monotony, and call it peace; we have no right to create uniformity, and baptize it with the sacred name of union. Christian unity is broken by the very existence of such standards.

Christian unity is not formal, but spiritual. If we are looking for formal union we are looking in the wrong direction, and we are looking for the wrong thing. Life, like love, is always surprising us by new energy, new passion, new capacities. So it is with the Church of Christ. It has organization; without organization it could not live; but it has more than organization.

Spiritual unity is the only unity that can permit and control honest diversity. Behold in this very diversity another miracle of Him who is wonderful in counsel and excellent in working.

Union means diversity ruled by substantial unity of thought and feeling. Unity means many people, but one human family; many accents, but a common language; many ways of doing things, but only one motive—to serve God, to please the Lord Jesus Christ, and to answer the ministry of God the Holy Ghost.

English Village Life.

IN his book, BEFORE THE GREAT PILLAGE (7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin), Rev. Dr. Jessopp, rector of Scarning, the celebrated ecclesiastical antiquary, gives us an attractive picture of English village life in days long gone by. The title of his book is somewhat of a riddle; but in reality it connotes the times immediately preceding the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. By "pillage" we are not so much to understand the suppression of the monasteries, as the looting of the parish churches—"the robbing of the people of this country of property in land and movables, which property had actually been inherited by them as members of those organized religious communities known as parishes."

It is on this large subject that Dr. Jessopp takes up his parable in the earlier pages of his book. Though commanding a genial style, and having a keen sense of humour, he can use a powerful critical method, and invoke to good purpose the forces of righteous denunciation. He gives us a singularly readable word-portrait of parochial life in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; and while disposed to qualify some of the Doctor's positions by taking account of aspects upon which he does not specifically dwell, we would not like to doubt the reality and beauty of the condition of things which he so enthusiastically describes. To some, the times of old were good; to others, they were bad. Assuredly, the people were very religious—outwardly, at any rate.

THE PARISH COUNCIL.

A few sentences will show Dr. Jessopp's position on great questions:—

All the tendency of the feudal system, working through the machinery of the manorial courts, was to keep the people down. All the tendency of the parochial system, working through the parish council, holding its assemblies in the churches, where the people met on equal terms as children and servants of the living God, and members of one body in Christ Jesus, was to lift the people up.

In these assemblies there was no distinction between lord and vassal, high and low, rich and poor; in them the people learnt the worth of being free.

WHO BUILT THE CHURCHES?

Answering the question, Who built the churches? Dr. Jessopp says:—

The evidence is abundant and positive, and is increasing upon us year by year, that the work done upon the fabrics of our churches, and the other work done in the beautifying of the interior of our churches . . . all that vast aggregate of artistic achievements which existed in immense profusion in our village churches till the frightful spoliation of those churches in the sixteenth century stripped them bare—all this was executed by local craftsmen. The evidence for this is accumulating upon us every year, as one antiquary after another succeeds in unearthing fragments of pre-Reformation churchwardens' accounts.

From first to last—always remembering that they deal with the story of outward religion rather than inward piety in our land—these pages are very interesting. They give us glimpses of days when industries that are now concentrated in special areas were successfully followed in all parts of the country.

THE CRY OF THE VILLAGES.

Among several miscellanies included in the volume is one on "The Cry of the Villages." Let Dr. Jessopp be heard in brief on this subject of urgent importance:

The poor in the towns have had everything done for them; their cry is listened to almost before it is uttered. The poor toilers in the rural districts are fretfully told to help themselves. How can they help themselves? They must, unless they are to disappear out of the land—they must sue in formâ pauperis. They want everything that the townsman claims already as his right: water to drink—houses to live in—resting-places in their weariness—nursing in their sore sickness—common halls, be they ever so humble, where they may hope to get some innocent amusement, diversion, instruction, and rational companionship. Who is to give them these things?—the landlords? the tenant farmers? the parsons? Such a one as "this humble individual who now addresses you," and who for years past has not derived from his fat benefice enough to provide him with house rent in a second-rate country town?

What mockery to bid our poor rustics look to the old helpers, who themselves are hanging on by their eyelids to their ever-waning resources! This is no pessimist's whine. It is but the sad cry of those who beg only for the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table.

Dr. Jessopp pleads, as he says, "for what remains of that sturdy peasantry which were not so very long ago the very pith and marrow, the very backbone of a great people." It is to be hoped that his plea will be fruitful of great results for the temporal and eternal welfare of the village populations of our land.

BY REV. A. MACKENNAL, D.D.

THE condition of the people of England, about which Carlyle began to write when he ceased to be merely a literary man and became a teacher, has been an increasing burden to the heart and conscience of the Churches for more than half a century. We are as tired of unqualified competition in religion as in trade, we are sick of class churches. . . There is an honest desire in all the denominations to bring the reality and blessedness of Christian fellowship to the whole people; we cannot rest

Till we have set Jerusalem
In England's fair and pleasant land.

This is the motive compelling Church reformers of various schools to press for freedom of action, and some measure of lay government, within the State Church. This has been the most urgent and the most sacred motive leading the Free Churches to federate.

When Dr. Chalmers proclaimed, while he was a minister of the Established Church of Scotland, that voluntaryism was insufficient to meet the spiritual needs of the nation, the Congregationalists and Baptists, with the Scottish Seceders, contradicted him. The Methodists went on their course of evangelization without paying any attention to him. But the needs have proved too vast, the problem is too complicated for any denomination, or even for them all, working without concert and the stimulus of union. The Methodists but they do not laugh at this. The Independent specific for sanitation—let every Church keep its own doorstep clean, and instruct others to do the same—is not sufficient, for the very soil is polluted, and disease is in the air. The annual growth of population has been far in advance of the aggregate extension of all the Churches. Great towns have been increasing in progressive ratio, and the new neighbourhoods are not provided for. The villages and hamlets are under a wasting sickness, and the Churches have shared in the decline. The denominations have had little heart to face the problem, so great is the disproportion between the resources in men and opportunities of any one of them and the national needs.

Laugh at impossibilities,
And say it shall be done:

And, meanwhile, the sense of nationality—national character, national responsibility, national solidarity—has been growing in depth as well as in extent. Patriotism has been taking on a new meaning: it is not British lionism, nor spread-eagleism; the clamour of the saloon rises and falls, but ever there is an undertone, "the still, sad music of humanity," the cry of the Christian heart. We used to discuss, academically, whether there could be such a thing as a national Christianity; we have learned too well that there is such a thing as national ungodliness. And, to meet the demands of national brotherhood, we have invoked the whole fellowship of the Evangelical Free Churches; we are organizing voluntaryism, persuaded that it will be efficient when it is no longer impulsive, sporadic, sectarian, but co-operative, constant, an accepted purpose, made wise and far-reaching by common counsel. There is a deep solemnity, as of "the burden of the Lord," underlying the jubilance of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. In their forecast of the future there may be perceived an increasing sense of responsibility, a larger patience, a firmer courage, more self-forgetful sacrifice, and the promise of a rich reward.

* These paragraphs are extracted from the concluding chapter of Dr. Mackennal's new book—SKETCHES IN THE EVOLUTION OF ENGLISH CONGREGATIONALISM; being the Carew Lecture for 1900-01, delivered in Hartford Theological Seminary, Connecticut. (5s. Nisbet.) The pages are historical and apologetic, and a noble spirit pervades them. Misunderstanding is responsible for many false judgments on the part of Christian people. Those who would understand Dissent in general, and Congregationalism in particular, in their highest intentions and claims, will find much assistance by the study of this volume.

The History of Florence.

THOSE who have read "The Life and Times of Savonarola," by Professor Pasquale Villari, will know what to expect in other Florentine studies from the same accomplished pen. In point of research and careful presentation of facts, THE TWO FIRST CENTURIES OF FLORENTINE HISTORY is a work that leaves nothing to be desired. (7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) The pages were translated from the Italian by Linda Villari, and there are many illustrations of worth and interest.

We have spoken of the pages as containing "studies," for such is the case. The volume contains, in fact, lectures and papers prepared by the author from time to time, and in some cases already published in reviews. Hence the work lacks the organic unity and compactness of a history; it is not the less a book of substantial value, and to most readers and students the occasional repetitions will be welcome and helpful to the memory.

After a chapter on the origin of Florence, dealing with legend and fact in a masterly manner, Professor Villari discusses the rise of the commune, and then the wars and reforms—the story of the conflict between Ghibellines and Guelphs being told in graphic detail. The working of the various guilds is explained, throwing light on many surviving puzzles, commercial and social. The Republic and parties in the time of Dante completes the picture. As a contribution to the history of the Middle Ages, this is a book that will abundantly repay the studious reader.

Professor Villari's work is of great worth—a distinct enrichment of literature on subjects of profound importance in their bearing upon the history of Europe and human interests in general.

A Spiritual Classic.

IT is a peculiar pleasure to welcome a new edition of The Christian's Great Interest, by William Guthrie, of Fenwick (2s. 6d. Melrose). Appearing in the "Books for the Heart" series, edited by Rev. Alexander Smellie, M.A., this spiritual classic is in good company. There must be a mission to-day for the book of which the saintly Andrew Bonar said that it was "the first beam of joy" which came to him—that to its pages he owed the earliest "hope that he really had believed on the Lord Jesus." There should assuredly be many readers for a book of which the great John Owen said that it was his "vade mecum," carried along with his New Testament—a book which had "more divinity in it" than the several folios which he wrote!

Mr. Smellie writes a deeply interesting and comprehensive introduction to this fruit of Covenanter theology. He charms us with his picture of the man and the pastor. A brief paragraph must sample the whole:—

> There burned in William Guthrie the passion which dominates the true ambassadors of the King of kings, the fire which consumes them—the yearning to redeem. When Henry Venn preached, it was with such a flaming urgency of consecration that "men went down before him like slaked lime." When Ludwig Hofacker spoke of Jesus, the heads of his hearers were instinctively lowered, as the grain in the autumn fields is swayed and bent by the breeze. When Rowland Hill looked out on the sheep scattered abroad, the cry was wrung from his lips, "Oh that I were all heart and soul and spirit, to tell the glorious Gospel to perishing multitudes!" When William Burns was asked his thoughts on finding himself for the first time in a Chinese crowd, he turned to his questioner and answered, "The lost, and a Christ for them." Among those dedicated, seraphic, love-conquered men, the minister of Fenwick stands. The "intolerable craving" to save, "shivered throughout him like a trumpet-call."

These experimental pages should prove helpful to preachers and teachers. Here we have the message as it was delivered in the seventeenth century by an evangelist of great piety and singular power. Mr. Smellie has not edited the quaintness out of the treatise; where the language has required interpretation to make it understood to-day in England, superseded words and clauses are preserved in footnotes. An Appendix presents excerpts from some of Guthrie's sermons, and those who read in a sympathetic spirit will assuredly wish for more.

Some English Shires.

THE intelligent reader of The Story of Some English Shires, by the late Bishop Creighton, cannot but regret that the lamented author was called to his rest without being able to complete the series. The Bishop was pre-eminently qualified for forming a sound judgment on historical questions; and the various counties of England make many calls for the exercise of judgment on the part of one who would sketch their story.

On its first appearance in 1897, this book had a hearty reception. The papers were written in intervals of leisure, and were the result of impressions produced by rambles in various parts of England. Though the counties have all shared in the history and the fortunes of England as a whole, yet, as the author tersely says, each has had a history and a fortune of its own, which has left its mark upon it. As time passes, these marks are becoming obliterated; they have their interest, however, and their lessons also, as we trace them to days when the shires enjoyed independent life, each of them having much that was special and peculiar.

The issue of a new edition offers an opportunity for such as could not purchase the book in its original and more expensive form. (6s. nett. Religious Tract Society.) The contents remain the same, except that a chapter on the County of Cambridge has been added, bringing the total up to eighteen, including most of the Northern and Midland counties.

The Call of Elisha.*

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A.

IT certainly meant a great change for Elisha. From the moment the mantle fell upon him everything was changed.

(a) The new life was one of devotion to Elijah. Elisha might have said, "To me to live is Elijah." Years afterwards he was known by this title, "Elisha, that poured water on the hands of Elijah." And you are called to a life of devotion to the Lord Jesus. Christ is to be the centre of your life. The world may call you eccentric; but this is a misnomer. Eccentric means off the right centre; and the Lord Jesus, who tasted death for every man, is the only right Centre for every ransomed life. It is the world that is eccentric; and the one cause of all the friction and trouble amongst men is that Jesus Christ, God's appointed Centre, is rejected. Philanthropists and Christian Socialists may dream and scheme and labour as they like, but until Christ is made Centre nothing will be right. The call comes all the more urgently because of the dismay and despair in which the present century opened. "Arise and live for Jesus; be whole-hearted to make Jesus King."

(b) The new life was one of separation. He could not cleave to Elijah without leaving the old home. New interests arose; new duties occupied his time; new desires and ambitions filled his heart. The old life had to be left behind; he was completely drawn away from it. And so it is with every true follower of Christ. Nearness to Christ brings about separation from the world. The new interests and occupations crowd out the old, just as the young green leaves of spring push from the branches the dead leaves that had held on through all the winter storms.

REV. F. S. WEBSTER.

(c) The new life was, at the beginning, full of hardship and peril. Elisha shared in Elijah's exile. His master was a marked man and a fugitive. The prophet's mantle was no robe of state. None but Baal's priests were received at court in those days. Elijah had none of the privileges and protection which a Christian Government affords to God's servants in England. And for us, too, though we live in better days, there is the cross. It is still true: "Whoso doth not bear his cross and come after Me, he cannot be my disciple." Even to-day, you can evade your cross only by denying your Lord. We cannot live for ease and riches and pleasure if we follow Christ.

* From Elisha: The Prophet of Vision. (1s. Morgan & Scott). This attractive little volume is fitted to fill a most useful place in the study of Scripture biography. The secret of Christian life and work is plainly set forth, with the blessedness of that purity of heart which is the condition of being able to see God. The chapters abound with practical lessons and suggestions, which should prove of great service to teachers and preachers.

Christian Study Manuals.

Three volumes have been issued of a new series of Christian Study Manuals, edited by Rev. R. E. Welsh (1s. each, net. Hodder & Stoughton). Compact in size and concise in treatment, they should prove very useful.

The study of Church history has been far too long regarded as uninteresting to the general reader. It is well that in the first volume—The Early Church: its History and Literature—Professor Orr has given a popular, while at the same time highly instructive introduction to the subject.

Our sketch has brought us to the triumph of Constantine, and formal adoption of Christianity as the religion of the empire. Ere, however, this consummation was reached, the Arian controversy had broken out (A.D. 318), and the Church was in flames from within, to the unconcealed delight of the pagan onlookers, and the intense chagrin of the emperor, who had hoped to find in this monotheistic faith a bond of peace in his dominions. The Nicene Council itself (A.D. 325) did little more than open new controversies, with which for half a century the world and Church were filled. Narrow-minded imperial interference made matters ever worse. Over all the storms looms the noble figure of Athanasius, who appears already upon the scene before our period closes. To him the Church owes nearly all its real guidance in the distractions of the age that follows Athanasius contra mundum. On the verge of this new era we cease our tale.

In the second volume—Ruling Ideas of our Lord—Dean D'Arcy (Belfast) has given a comprehensive study of the definite teaching of our Lord, as gathered from his actual words recorded in the Gospels. Of the fulfilment of the promise of the Spirit, he says:—

> It is certainly very surprising to note the power, insight, devotion, which marked the lives and doings of the Apostles and their companions after the great day of Pentecost. Men who had been doubting, hesitating, quailing, became confident, decided, fearless. Some new certainty and some new power had entered into them. Their minds which had seemed almost blind to the more spiritual side of their Master's teaching were suddenly illuminated. Their wills were inspired with irresistible purpose. Jesus Christ became a far more vivid reality to them in His absence than He had been in His presence. The promise recorded in Acts i. 8, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be My witnesses," was kept to the letter. The only adequate explanation of these things is that the accounts given in the New Testament of the Resurrection of our Lord and of the giving of the Holy Ghost are literally true.

Dr. Monro Gibson's subject—Protestant Principles—carries us to different though equally important ground. The reader is warned that the errors of Rome are "not only pernicious in themselves, but are of such a nature as to obscure the fundamental truths of the Gospel, and in many cases to replace them by something not only different, but alien."

> A priest claims to represent Christ to the people, and to act for the people on behalf of Christ; a minister is a servant of Christ who makes no such profession, but, while standing himself apart, points to Christ and speaks of Him, and directs the people to approach Him for themselves, and to trust, not to anything he, the servant, can do, but to what the Master alone can do for them. Thus the priest professes to offer sacrifice on the people's behalf; the minister makes no such profession, but points them to the sacrifice offered once for all on Calvary, and now presented by Christ Himself continually; the priest says, "Confess your sins to me and I shall grant you absolution as the representative of Christ"; the minister says, "You may confess to me as any Christian may confess to another in the ordinary intercourse of Christian fellowship, and though I cannot absolve you, I rejoice to be privileged to declare that 'He pardoneth and absolveth all them that truly repent and unfeignedly believe his Holy Gospel.'"

Professor Orr and Dr. Monro Gibson have supplied valuable hints for further study.

A Life of Christ.

It is no wonder that the life of Christ is the subject of many books. Every decade seems to witness many attempts on the part of Christian authors to set in order the events of "the Life of Lives," and to portray anew, in one or more aspects, Him to whom all the prophets bore witness, and whose Person and works were the main theme of the writings of inspired evangelists and apostles. We welcome yet another attempt to interpret Him whom no mortal can know more than "in part."

Twelve devotional writers co-operated in a series of chapters, which were published in The Quiver; and their essays are published in collected form in a handsome volume entitled, The Life and Work of the Redeemer. (6s. Cassells.) They give us a spiritual portrait of the Great Teacher and Redeemer of the world. Dean Spence writes on "The Birth and Infancy of Christ"; the Archbishop of Armagh (Dr. W. Alexander) on "The Baptism, Fasting, and Temptation of Jesus," also on "The Atoning Work of Christ." Dr. Marcus Dods treats "Calls to Discipleship"; the Bishop of Durham (Dr. Moule), "The Private Personal Interviews of our Lord"; Dr. Lyman Abbott (New York) "Jesus Christ as Missionary." "Christ's Dealings with Womanhood" is expounded by Rev. F. B. Meyer; "Christ the Teacher" by the Bishop of Ripon (Dr. Boyd Carpenter); "Christ the Consoler" by the Dean of Norwich (Dr. Lefroy); "Christ the Wonder Worker" by the Bishop of Albany, U.S.A. (Dr. W. C. Doane); "The Betrayal and Denial of Christ" by Rev. Dr. Fairbairn; and "The Resurrection" by Rev. Dr. Maclaren.

These are names of representative influence as well as personal worth; and though it is not reasonable to expect uniform quality in work of such varied origination, a high level of excellence has been attained in most cases. Several photographs of places, and drawings of great scenes, have been reproduced in full page plates.

How to Work for Christ.

To show Christians how they may work for the Master, is to discharge a much-needed ministry. If we know our own powers, and have found our own place, we may also be enabled to help others to realize their talents, and to exert their powers in the great symphony of service. "His servants shall serve Him," not only then, but now. How may they serve? Answer is given in a noble volume How to Work for Christ: A Compendium of Effective Methods. By R. A. Torrey (7s. 6d. Nisbet). The author is widely known for his labours in connection with the Moody Bible Institute at Chicago; and this volume is a worthy companion of his excellent work "What the Bible Teaches." In a brief preface he tells us that his book is intended for both ministers and laymen. He says with truth:—

> The Church of Christ is full of people who wish to work for their Master, but do not know how. This book is intended to tell them how. It contains no untried theories, but describes many methods of work that have been put to the test of actual experiment, and have succeeded. As far as known, there is no other book that covers the same field. For years it has been upon my heart to write this book, and I have been asked again and again to do so.

These lines explain the work somewhat; it is at once practical and comprehensive. First comes Personal Work—its importance and conditions, how to begin, and on what lines to proceed. The second main section of the book describes Methods of Christian Effort—visitation, the conduct of meetings, tract and colportage work, services in theatres and gaols, revivals and after-meetings, and work among children. The third book deals with Preaching and Teaching the Word of God. Here we have sermons described in their various classes and illustrated—textual, topical, and expository—with instructions as to their preparation and delivery. Similar work is done in explanation of set Bible Readings, and there are many model outlines. Professor Torrey's companion work on "What the Bible Teaches" has proved a great blessing in the hands of hard-pressed labourers. We can fully believe that many a minister and city missionary, Sunday-school teacher, and humble worker will "mend their pace" in working for Christ on becoming possessed of this splendid volume.

My Counsellor.*

We give the Evening Reading from My Counsellor for the current date. Those who are not familiar with the book—which has become very precious to Christians in all parts of the earth—will judge from this page of the method of presenting Scripture excerpts for the direction of thought and the culture of the spiritual life.

November 21.—Evening.

Of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen. Rom. xi. 36.

All things are of God.—For in him we live, and move, and have our being.	2 Cor. v. 18. Acts xvii. 28.
To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him.—For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist.	1 Cor. viii. 6. Col. i. 16. Col. i. 17.
None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's.—Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.—For it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.	Rom. xiv. 7. Rom. xiv. 8. 1 Cor. x. 31. Matt. iv. 10.
When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.—What hast thou that thou didst not receive?—for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee.	Luke xvii. 10. 1 Cor. iv. 7. 1 Chr. xxix. 14.
Ye are not your own: . . . therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.	1 Cor. vi. 19, 20

Only a Prayer Meeting.

In one of his volumes of "Lectures to My Students," Mr. Spurgeon, speaking on the "Faculty of Impromptu Speech," said that ever since coming to London, in order to get into the habit of speaking extemporaneously, he had never studied or prepared anything for the Monday evening prayer meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, but had all along used that occasion as the opportunity for off-hand exhortation. It was his intention to collect into a volume a selection of the addresses given at these gatherings, but the opportunity for carrying out this idea never came to him.

Happily there were those who knew his desire, and some forty of these exhortations have been gathered, and now appear in book form with the title, Only a Prayer Meeting! The volume is in four sections:—(1) Addresses on Prayer and Prayer Meetings; (2) Expositions of Scripture; (3) Incidents and Illustrations; (4) Miscellaneous Addresses. At such times the preacher was careful not to select difficult expository topics or abstruse themes, and one result is a volume of simple, homely talks concerning the elements of our common faith. The pages yield comfort and instruction to saints, and offer solemn warning and loving invitation to sinners. Under the Spirit's teaching, many engaged in the Master's service will find in this book stimulus to effort as well as food for profitable meditation. (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

After the Resurrection.*

By HENRY VARLEY.

We ask our readers carefully to study Luke xxiv. in regard to the absolute necessity for our Lord's fresh ministry to the disciples after his resurrection. To overcome the density and ignorance common to the human mind even in the apostles, it became necessary for the risen Lord, in actual "line upon line," "line upon line," to deal with them, as it were, all over again. Four things mainly were needed, and very striking is the testimony given concerning the risen Lord's ministry amongst them. By virtue of their partnership with Him in his resurrection, they were in a new relation, position, and condition. Risen with their Lord they were, but they were as ignorant of the truth which belongs to and becomes the sons of God in resurrection, as little children are of the manners and behaviour which become an educated and mature Christian life.

Nothing could be more striking than the way in which the risen Lord instructed them. First, He opened their understandings. Second, He opened their eyes, for they were holden so that they did not see Him as their resurrection life. Third, He opened the Scriptures to them, the books of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms. Fourth, He opened their hearts, so that they burned within them; whilst at night He breathed upon them the Holy Ghost to speak peace to them from the God of Peace, who had brought again from the dead that Great Shepherd of the sheep (Heb. xiii. 20).

Here, again, we would pause and ask, Have you, beloved reader, known the walk to Emmaus in company with the risen Christ? Has your sad countenance been seen by the risen Lord? Have you heard him say, "What manner of communications are these held by you?" Has the Lord in resurrection drawn near and joined your company? Has He opened your darkened understandings, so that now the light of his resurrection glory fills the magnificent chambers of thy renewed mind and spirit? Has He opened the books of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms to thee so that his sufferings, followed by his glory stud the inspired pages with resurrection light and glory? Has He broken this bread of life to thee? Hast thou seen Him in this festive fashion, and has thy heart burned within thee as He opened to thee resurrection glories? If so, then may we suggest that we, too, constrain Him to abide with us, for it is toward evening, and life's little day is far spent.

Oh, that it may be true in our case also, "And they worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy." And may we not, in reverent paraphrase, add—and reside continually in the spiritual temple which He raised from the dead the third day, and in which He bids us to abide, "praising and blessing God"? Amen. May we furnish thee with subject for song and rich melody borrowed from Israel's storehouse of praise? "Be glad and rejoice, O daughter of Jerusalem." The Lord hath taken away thy judgments. He hath cast out thine enemy.

* My Counsellor: Holy Scripture arranged as Morning and Evening Meditations, for Edification, Guidance, and Comfort. (From 2s. List of bindings and prices from Morgan & Scott—a great variety, for seasonable gifts).

† From The Evangel of the Risen Christ. (3s 6d. Alfred Holness.) The volume is written in the author's accustomed forcible style, and furnishes material for meeting effectively many errors of modern thought.

Twentieth Century Dictionary.

OF the making of dictionaries there seems to be no end. To look down the list of such performances during the nineteenth century is very impressive to an educated mind. The mental activities of which our language has been the subject—the analysis and annotating, the philological investigations leading to practical classification—appeal to the imagination as well as testify to the flexibility and wealth of the English tongue.

The new century not only finds great lexicological undertakings in hand, but has promise of good things for those who do not look to antiquity for verbal instruction. While mighty volumes are within the reach of scholars, handy books must meet the needs of learners and the convenience of the general public. Hence the great service which will undoubtedly be wrought by CHAMBERS' TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE (3s. 6d. W. & R. Chambers). This work has been edited by Rev. Thomas Davidson, who tells us in the preface that this is the third work of the kind that he has prepared. The excellent arrangement affords evidence of the practised hand, while the typography and general get-up are all that could be desired. The book is pronouncing, explanatory, and etymological, with compound phrases, technical terms, colloquialisms, and many illustrations. There are full appendices, dealing with classical and foreign words and phrases, Scripture proper names and English Christian names, the etymology of place-names, and other useful matters.

Dr. Whyte's Bible Characters.

THE volumes of BIBLE CHARACTERS which Dr. Alexander Whyte has been giving us for years past are among the most suggestive and useful contributions to practical divinity. The lessons of life, whether drawn from the careers of good men and saints, or the failures of the weak and erring, are presented in chapters that are always very interesting—weighty as products of thought, and of great value as embodying the spoil of one who has diligently worked some of the richest mines of religious literature.

The new volume, STEPHEN TO TIMOTHY (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), is the second devoted to the New Testament, and contains the fifth series of studies—completing 126 chapters in all. Paul is the subject of sixteen chapters, dealing with him under various aspects. We make a brief extract:—

GLORYING IN THE CROSS.

We preach not ourselves, Paul asserts with a good conscience. And yet, at the same time, he introduces himself into almost every sermon he preaches. Paul simply cannot preach the cross of Christ as he must preach it, without boldly bringing himself in, as both the best pattern and the best proof of what the cross of Christ can do. Paul's salvation—the absolute graciousness of Paul's salvation, and his absolute assurance of it—these things are the infallible marks of their authenticity that Paul prints upon every Epistle of his. The cross of Christ, and Paul's salvation by that cross, are the two constant and complementary topics of Paul's pulpit; they are but the two sides of Paul's shield of salvation.

The most beautiful English preacher of the past generation has told us that his conversion was so absorbing and so abiding that it made him rest ever after in the thought of two, and two only, absolute and luminously self-evident beings, himself and his Creator. And so it was with Paul's conversion also. Only, in Paul's case, it was not so much his Creator who was so luminously self-evident to Paul—it was much more his Redeemer. And thus it was that in Paul's preaching there were always present those two luminously self-evident subjects, Paul's sin and Christ's cross: Paul the chief of sinners, and Jesus Christ and Him crucified. And thus it is that Paul's so profound, and so experimental, preaching so satisfies us. And thus it is also that it alone satisfies us.

The "Methodist Recorder" Winter Number is a budget of very interesting matters. The first article, "The Loves and Friendships of John Wesley," is by Rev. Nehemiah Curnock, and it is well worth reading. These pages should keep alive in the breasts of young Methodists the fascinating story of their origination and denominational objects. There are many illustrations and fac-simile reproductions of historic documents. (3d. "Methodist Recorder" Office.)

Some Story Books.

Hodder & Stoughton.

A good illustration is given in Mark Strathmore's Renunciation, by Fannie Eden (6s.), of the spread of the Kingdom of God through a Christian letting her light shine, along with the joy which may come into a heart through following the Lord when all other causes for joy seem to be withdrawn.

Round many phases of Scottish history tales have been woven, and to these has just been added one by Helen Wallace—The Greatest of These (6s.)—worthy of a wide audience. The scenes are laid in the year 1745, when the religious world was moved by the division of the Seceders over the Burghal Oath, and the political world by the rising which ended at Culloden.

The story of a prodigal son in our own time is told with truest pathos in The Redemption of Neil Maclean, by David Lyall (6s.) The picture of estrangement between father and son arising from mutual misunderstanding is fraught with many a deep lesson. For those who have made mistakes, and are only conscious of the darkness overhead, it may awaken a great hope that their clouds, too, are lined with silver. One lesson of the book is that "God is on the side of parents"—of praying parents; and another that He "speaks in different ways to different souls. But always it is the right and the best way." Not every wanderer comes back in any way, much less as Neil Maclean does. Yet the story in its essential features is truly typical of the experience of many a family. The pain that mingles with the highest joy ever reminds us that those who would follow the Lord must do so by the way of the cross.

The beginnings of a great spiritual movement like Methodism have a deep and abiding interest; and for this reason, as well for its high merits as a contribution to literature, The Coming of the Preachers, by John Ackworth (6s.) will find many readers. Others have put on record the historical and ecclesiastical facts, which have their own place and value; here we have none of these, but an account of the wondrous results following the preaching of the Evangel in the new fashion in a typical, quiet, old-fashioned English town. We are introduced to the brothers John and Charles Wesley in all the simplicity of true greatness. The extraordinary nature of the misrepresentations diligently circulated regarding the preachers go far to explain the unpopularity of the work except among those whose hearts were touched. The great outstanding fact is that, in very many cases, "the common people heard" them "gladly."

Religious Tract Society.

The simplicity of the plan of salvation, and the blessedness of Christian life, are taught in How John Dale Let His Light Shine, by M. C. France (1s.), after such a fashion as ought to bring these truths home with power to the reader.

Lady Dye's Reparation, by Sarah Doudney (2s. 6d.), is a story for girls, dealing with home and school life in a pleasant way, and characterized by a healthy tone.

Many a pleasant picture of home life will be found in the pages of A Maid Whom There Were None to Praise, by Louisa Bradford (2s. 6d.). It deserves to be popular as a gift book for girls.

The incidents gathering round the adventures of Cynthia's Brother (2s. 6d.) are steps in the way leading to "honour and courage, love and self-sacrifice," which were only bought at a great price.

The "bit of family history" which is told in Celia's Fortunes (1s. 6d.) shows the different paths by which individuals are led to see the finger of God directing their lives, the vivid local colouring making the story a most attractive one.

Miss Amy Le Feuvre's facile pen has been employed to good purpose in Heather's Mistress (3s. 6d.), a charming story, in which the joys of Christian service and the frivolities of a fashionable society life are effectively contrasted.

As its title implies, The Gold that Perisheth, by David Lyall (3s. 6d.), is a story much concerned about money. Fortunes slip from the hands of their possessors, with different results; but the lessons all point to higher things. Christian faith and hope prove themselves to be the real things.

A capital story of the early years of the nineteenth century is Treggs' Triumph. (2s.) The fierce struggle between employers and employed in the mills of the Midlands, following on the introduction of machinery, and the origin and progress of the Luddite movement, are subjects which are picturesquely dealt with in this strong, well-written work, by E. Everett-Green.

Deb Clavel. By Mary E. Palgrave. (3s. 6d.) This is what might be expected from the pen of its author, a well-written and singularly entertaining story. Deb was a Puritan lass and a preacher; her aunt, Elizabeth Gaunt, came to a martyr's end—was, in fact, the last woman burned at the stake at Tyburn. The pages furnish a good description of the ill-treatment to which Christian confessors were subjected in the seventeenth century; and they also give some account of the turmoil attendant upon the Monmouth rebellion.

J. F. Shaw & Co.

A lively story of the ways and customs of some young people in Cornwall during the days when "George the Third was King" is graphically told in A Little Brown Tea Pot (2s. 6d.).

Among excellent stories for boys must be classed In Ships of Steel, by Gordon Stables (5s.). This is a story of the Royal Navy as we know it. There is a real Chinese pirate in it, too; and, though quite up to date, of a piece with those of a former generation on the Spanish main.

We are carried back in most interesting fashion by The Secret of Maxshelling (5s.) to the days of "good Queen Bess." One who desired "to be a handmaid of the Lord, and to walk in his fear and his love," tells the story of her experiences in these stirring times, when there was much Romanist intrigue in the land.

In Cleared for Action, by Willis Boyd Allen (5s.), we have another tale which will give boys an insight into matters of recent history. The Spanish-American war is fought over again in its pages, with the various leaders brought in under their proper names. A good history lesson will be learned in the course of reading this most interesting story.

T. Nelson & Sons.

Two of a Trade (1s. 6d.) is an attractive book for girls, with many interesting side-lights on village life.

Many an interesting story is told in Great Explorers (2s.), beginning with Marco Polo, and closing with David Livingstone.

The hero of Jim's Sweethearts, by E. L. Haverfield (2s. 6d.), is seven years of age when the reader is introduced to him. The story of his troubles and escapades is graphically told.

Among books about soldiers, a prominent place must be given to For the Colours (6s.), by Herbert Hayens, in which the story of the British Army is traced from the earliest times down to our own day. Much of our national history is interwoven in the chapters, and the turning point carefully brought out. Many personalities like those of Havelock and Outram, Wellington and Moore, Gordon and Roberts, stand out in bold relief from the pages. The volume is profusely illustrated, while a portrait of Lord Roberts is given as a coloured frontispiece.

Lovers of travel and adventure are indebted to the author of Jack Ralston: or, the Outbreak of the Nauscokees (5s.), for a thrilling tale. While being a record of exciting expeditions, the book has other features which will commend it to a wide circle of readers. Dealing as it does with life in the far north-east of Canada, many glimpses are given of the simple unsophisticated nature of the Eskimos—a race who exhibit in many respects the highest qualities of more civilized peoples.

For the Faith: A story of the Young Pioneers of Reformation in Oxford, by E. Everett-Green (3s. 6d.). Taking us to the times of Wolsey, these pages claim an interest in John Clarke and Henry Sumner, who succumbed to the effects of persecution; and show us the part played by Dalaber, Ferrar, Garret, and others, who, though they took part in the Reformation movement, afterwards made their peace with the persecuting church, some of them, however, to witness unto blood in later years. This is a capital Protestant story, full of human interest and instructive in high principles.

Held to Ransom, by F. B. Forester (5s.), is an exciting romance. The scene is laid in the south of Spain just over fifty years ago; and many of the incidents described have doubtless been matched in the experience of unfortunate travellers in still more recent years. The pages are sufficiently awakening in their animation; and the main dialogue befits the daugerous situation of the hero and the desperate character of the outlaws into whose hands he fell. Certainly the book is a picture of scenes which, if we may judge from present events in Turkey, may not yet be regarded as exclusively belonging to past times

S. W. Partridge & Co.

Bernard or Ben? by Jennie Chappell (1s.), is a boy's story by a thoroughly reliable writer.

Miss Charlotte Murray has applied schoolboy phraseology to the things of the higher life with telling effect in Castleton's Prep (2s. 6d.).

William J. Forster's capital little volume for school school-boy reading, Uncle Zeph and his Yarns (1s.), will be widely welcomed. The "yarns" are consistently interesting and informing.

A book for boys, providing ample interest in its vivid account of holiday adventures on Dartmoor, is Paul the Courageous, by Mabel Quiller-Couch (1s.). The illustrations are admirable.

Aunt Armstrong's Money (9d.), by Jennie Chappell, is a story for girls. Boys will appreciate in corresponding degree, Won from the Sea (9d.) by E. C. Phillips.

All Work and No Play (1s.), by Harold Avery, is a capital school book. Other stories for little folk are:—Benjamin's New Boy, by Jesse Page; Enemies, by Marion Isabel Hurrell; and Cherry Tree Place, by Lizzie A. Hooper (6d. each).

R. Culley.

The Three Little Vagrants (1s.) of whom F. Spencer writes, are lovable young people, and the story of their vicissitudes is an interesting one indeed.

The "little Cornish maid," whose story is told in Fairy (1s. 6d.), was one with whose experiences many young people may with profit make themselves acquainted. Illustration and incident combine to render the book attractive.

Translated by William J. Forster from the French of Madame de Pressensé, Fifine's Charge (1s. 6d.), retains in English the true pathos and charm of the original, while the numerous illustrations add much to the attractiveness of the volume.

Conquering: or, Bernard's Burden (1s. 6d.), is a temperance tale of exceptional merit, with a sound, unforced moral. It tells how noble lives were sacrificed by the sinful weakness of a surgeon. Experiences of joy and sorrow, hope and despair, are skilfully depicted, and the characters live before the mind of the reader.

Sunday School Union.

A small book teaching a good lesson is Geordie's Victory, by Margaret E. Haycraft (9d.).

Helpful counsels as well as stories of boyish escapades will be found in The Captain's Fags, by W. E. Cule (1s. 6d.).

Into Stormy Waters, by Mrs. Henry Clarke, M.A. (1s. 6d.), is a brightly-written story for girls, full of interesting episode and interest.

Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.

Sidney Yorke's Friend, by E. A. Bennett. (1s.) A graphically written story for young people.

No one will read Laura Richmond (1s.) without being deeply impressed with the author's literary power. It is doubtful if a more readable and graceful story has come from Jean Ingelow's pen.

Stumps: A Story for Children (1s. 6d.), will be a favourite where there are young folk to be entertained and amused. It is a pretty record of juvenile pranks —brightly written, attractively bound, and amply illustrated.

General Notices.

The Gist of the Lessons: A concise exposition of the International Sunday School Lessons for 1902. By R. A. Torrey (1s. nett. Nisbet). Here is multum in parvo; the matter is excellent and the manner good. This book will be a great help to many a hard-worked searcher.

The Endeavour Greeting, by Amos R. Wells, is a manual for information and suggestion for new members of the C.E. Society. (1s. Andrew Melrose.) This little book has been edited for British Endeavourers by Rev. J. Brown Morgan. It has instructions for many an experienced member, as well as for new comers.

Music and the Higher Life. (By W. H. Jude. Reid Bros. 3s. 6d. net.) Mr. Jude has long been known as a writer of successful compositions for the concert platform, and in this volume we have the products of his undoubted genius allied to sacred words, original and otherwise. Many popular pieces, such as "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "There is a Happy Land," and other favourite hymns, are set to exceedingly "taking" melodies, with artistic accompaniments.

Mr. James E. Hawkins has again issued in various forms The Golden Grain Almanack. As a small volume interleaved, it will be useful to many (6d.). Then there is the paper cover edition at a penny, and the large type edition at twopence. The "Diary" edition is a very serviceable book, bound in roan, with pencil and tuck (1s. 6d.). Poems by Mr. Hawkins, Rose Benn, and others may be had in cut and embossed cards. (Six for 1s.). A highly spiritual note is sounded in these verses.

In his booklet, Some Unique Aspects of the Baptist Position, Rev. E. Carey Pike summarises deeply-interesting facts and arguments. It is of great importance that Christians of various denominations should understand one another. Mr. Pike's pages will prove of service to such as desire to consider the claims of Baptists on points of Bible doctrine and Church polity, their sufferings through persecution, and their testimony as advocates of liberty of conscience (6d. A. H. Stockwell).

Archdeacon Sinclair wrote a helpful book, "Unto You Young Men." He follows it with wise and timely counsels for "the weaker sex"—Likewise the Younger Women (3s. 6d. Grant Richards). He writes for various classes; and first of all deals with the serious questions of Christian belief and spiritual life. The homely virtues and graces are treated in a fashion that will make the book very welcome to workers among young women. The chapter headings will explain: Modesty, The Golden Rule, Cheerfulness, Grumbling, Novels and Plays, Gossip, and Gambling. We heartily commend this timely and readable book; it is calculated to exert a wholesome influence, and we trust it will reach the hands of those whom it addresses.

The Missionary Painting Book is an admirable publication. Pages of coloured pictures are alternated with monotint outlines for the young painter to fill in according to copy. Explanatory letterpress is furnished by Eleanor F. Fox. This publication is designed to interest our children in the great subject of world-wide evangelization. We heartily commend it to Christian parents and guardians (1s. Church Missionary Society).

The two latest volumes of "The Century Bible" are—The Pastoral Epistles: Timothy and Titus, edited by Dr. R. F. Horton; and The General Epistles: James, Peter, John and Jude, edited by Professor Bennett. (2s. each. T. C. and E. C. Jack.) Students will find these books of real service; and they will not be slow to recognise the general usefulness of the commentary where they may hesitate to accept some of the statements made in the introduction. The handy form of the volumes deserves commendation.

Children's Toy Books. Messrs. Nelson have issued some grand toy books, including Up to London to See the King, the bright pictures being accompanied by suitable letterpress; Children of the Empire, young folk of many lands being depicted and their praises sung in easy rhyme; Sand Castles, seaside scenes with childish verse; and For the Flag, a painting book of the flags of all nations (all 1s. each). Smaller books, also very bright, are Alphabet of Children's Names and Romps (6d. each); Nursery Jingles and A Donkey Ride (4d. each).

Rev. Dinsdale T. Young has given us a new volume of striking sermons. That on "Unfamiliar Texts" was good; this on Neglected People of the Bible is, if possible, better (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). Fifteen in number, these discourses are remarkably comprehensive of information, and rich in homiletical material. Some idea of the contents may be gathered from such titles as these: "Laban the Syrian: A Man of To-day," "Saul and the Witch of Endor," "Gehazi and his Modern Representatives," "Apollos: A Study of Influence." The treatment is practical, and preachers will find the pages very suggestive.

Mr. Henry Frowde has lost no time in bringing out editions of The Book of Common Prayer, with the alterations rendered necessary by the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall being created Prince and Princess of Wales. The new Accession Service, which was authorized by Royal Warrant on November 9, is also given. In point of paper, printing, and binding, all varieties of taste and need are met by the Oxford editions. That in pica type and 12mo. page, printed on thin paper, combines singularly useful and attractive features. This will presumably be known as the "George Prince of Wales" Prayer Book.

Joy and Strength for the Pilgrim's Day, is a book of daily readings, selected by the Editor of "Daily Strength for Daily Needs" (3s. 6d. nett. Longmans). At the head of the page is a Scripture text, sometimes more than one. Then there is generally a poetical excerpt, followed by one or more brief quotations from devotional writers. The day's selections illustrate the Scripture text, and many a page bears testimony to the sound selective judgment of the compiler. The gatherings are from all sources—Evangelical, Mystical, Romanist; but as dogmatic specialties have been avoided, no confusion results from the great variety of sources.

Year by year Messrs. Wells Gardner & Co. issue books of a high class for young readers. Artistically illustrated by Gordon Browne, and printed in the best style on superfine paper, the series has given us in modern dress some of the literary treasures of past generations. This year we welcome a volume which more nearly belongs to our own age—Fairy Tales from Hans Andersen (6s.). Of the entertaining contents, not a word needs to be said, except to note that there is an admirable introduction, biographical and descriptive, from the pen of Edward Clodd. Altogether, there is no more attractive book of its class among the season's publications.

A valuable text-book for the use of opponents of vivisection has been provided in Scientific Research, by Stephen Smith, M.R.C.S. (2s. Elliot Stock). It is truly what it purports to be, "a view from within." On retiring from practice, the author spent a prolonged period studying at various Continental hospitals. Charges of cruelty to animals in course of investigations having been both made and denied, it appeared to him a matter of importance that the truth of the case should be known, and he has now put on record what he saw. Case after case is instanced of the sufferings of the victims, and the circumstances are narrated in the exact fashion that can only be done by an expert. The coloured plates given are almost ghastly in their realism; yet they only represent the plain facts of the case. In the appendix are summarised the experiments published in the Journal of Physiology, 1896-1900; which, however, we are told, probably do not represent even one per cent. of the experiments actually performed in England, though they show their nature very clearly.

By the Rivers of Africa, from Cape Town to Uganda, is a capital book for children, by Annie R. Butler (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society). After a historical sketch, we have chatty accounts of the progress of civilization and Christianity among Bechuanas, Basutos, Tongas, and other families and tribes. Lastly comes Uganda, as it was and as it is; and some sixty illustrations and a map embellish the record. Many besides young people will welcome this outline of important developments, which are calculated, in a moral and spiritual sense, to change the face of the Dark Continent.

A book which will not soon exhaust its instructive influence is The Church and New Century Problems (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner). It contains papers on the Empire, the State, the Municipality, Overcrowding and Housing, the Temperance problem, the Rural problem, and Trade Unionism, with a statement of the constitution and aims of the Christian Social Union, under whose auspices the book is issued. The writers include the late Bishop Westcott, Canons Scott Holland, Gore, and Barnett, and Dr. T. C. Fry, and each makes a substantial contribution to the subject he discusses. When the title speaks of "the Church," it means the Church of England, and it is not difficult to find "High" proclivities here and there; but all the same, the papers deserve the serious attention of Christian workers and philanthropists. They have been collected and edited by Rev. W. J. Hocking, vicar of All Saints, Tufnell Park.

The "Present Day Preachers" series (3s. 6d. each. Horace Marshall & Son) is singularly attractive, and already includes some of the most highly-esteemed pastors and teachers of our day and land. The series (with artistic portrait frontispiece) is decidedly enriched by two additions just made. The Trinity, by Dr. R. F. Horton, contains a number of striking discourses, treating a subject of sublime importance in a very helpful manner. We are sorry that in the last sermon but one the preacher should have introduced qualifications regarding the inspiration and inerrancy of Holy Scripture; his other discourses are all of distinct value. The Soul's Ascent, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, is a connected series of mission addresses, for the most part dealing with the blessing and privilege of the consecrated life. The pages are fresh in style and forcible in character, and many will read them to spiritual profit.

In many homes a book of family prayers is a great help to general Christian culture. Men and women, like Moses, "slow of speech," are sometimes glad of assistance in the pleasant duty of ordering the devotions of their households. Such will be specially grateful to the Religious Tract Society for issuing a handsome volume, Thy Heart's Desire: A Book of Family Prayers, by Revs. G. S. Barrett, D.D., G. E. Asker, W. Roberts, and W. T. Rowley, edited by Rev. R. Lovett (6s.). The book contains prayers for every morning and evening throughout thirteen weeks, also for special seasons. Appropriate Scripture readings are indicated; and as Church clergymen and Nonconformist ministers have combined in producing the book, it is believed that Evangelical Christians of various denominations will find the contents acceptable as an expression of the "heart's desire," regarding the more generally felt concerns of life and godliness.

George Whitehead: His Work and Service as a Minister for Sixty-eight Years in the Society of Friends. Compiled from his autobiography by William Beck. (2s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) A story well worth telling to the present generation. Its subject was a man of sign in his time—a father in Israel, and "valiant for the truth." Born in 1636, he served in the Gospel in the days of the Commonwealth, the reigns of Charles II., James II., William III., Queen Anne, and George I. In mourning his death, the Devonshire House Monthly Meeting acknowledged "his public service for truth and frequent solicitations unto several Kings and Parliaments, bishops and great men, for the relief and release of his suffering Friends." Mr. Beck tells us how this all came about, and describes Whitehead's journeyings and sufferings. We trust this deeply interesting book, with its delineation of times when disabilities and devotion were in significant association, will have many readers.

Nineteen Centuries of Missions, a handbook primarily prepared for young people. By Mrs. William W. Scudder (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier). Dr. F. E. Clark writes an introduction to this book, which combines many useful features, being succinct, comprehensive, and undenominational. With her husband, the author spent many fruitful years in Southern India, in the service of the Arcot Mission of the Reformed Church in America. While, from the nature of things, the century just closed occupies the bulk of the book, there is a good summary of antecedent efforts, in the Apostolic Age, the Early Church, the Middle Ages, and the period from the Reformation to the nineteenth century. Prominence is given to biographical details, and each chapter closes with a series of questions. Young people reading papers on missions will find much helpful material here.

THE EXHAUSTIVE CONCORDANCE TO THE BIBLE.

Showing every Word of the Text of the Common English Version of the Canonical Books and every occurrence of each word in regular order, together with the Comparative Concordance of the Authorised and Revised Versions; also Brief Dictionaries of the Hebrew and Greek Words of the Original, with References to the English Words. By JAMES STRONG, LL.D.

"The Concordance, which I have now been able to examine in some representative parts, appears to me to approach very near the ideal for accuracy, range of treatment, and fulness. The novel features (such I believe they are) of a comparative table of variations between A.V. and R.V. and the appended Hebrew and Greek Dictionaries, are very valuable helps to thoughtful and accurate readers of the Divine Book. Yet they are only accessories in this remarkable volume."—Right Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Lord Bishop of Durham.
